Dear Brother Steel: I have been intending to write to you ever since papa received your last letter, in which you asked me to do so. I thought I would write a letter to Uncle Bob, of the Western Methodist, but that good man is now dead, so I will write to you. You must remember I am only eight years old, and cannot therefore write very well nor very fast. I go to school in this city, and am studying hard both English and Spanish. I like Spanish very much, and can talk enough of it to get along very well with my Mexican playmates. We were very happy in our home in Mexico until about two months ago, we children all took the whooping cough, and on Sunday, the 29 th of September, our sweet little sister Mabelle died with it. Since that time we have been very, very sad. She would have been two years old in November, and was so sweet, pretty, and interesting that we and everybody that knew her loved her dearly. We can never forget her large brown eyes, light curly hair, fair skin, rosy cheeks, and graceful little form; and we miss so much the sweet voice that used to talk and sing so happily all through the day. She talked nearly altogether in Spanish, and made the Spanish signs while talking that looked so cunning in a little thing. She loved Spanish hymns better than any other songs, and when mama would sing to her at night on going to bed, "Come to Jesus just now," she would say, "No, mama, 'Ben a Cristo, ven ahora," which is the same thing in Spanish. She loved to "say prayers," as she called it, and would hand papa the Bible and then sit down quietly in the little chair her grandma gave her in Memphis, during the reading of a chapter, and always kneel by it until papa finished the prayer. I cannot tell you half of her sweet, charming ways, nor half of the sorrow that is in our hearts, because we shall never see her again on earth. Everything reminds us of her. When we go to the Alameda for play and exercise we think of the many times she used to go there with us, and how she loved it. Papa says he misses her so much when he comes home, and mama misses her when we are at school, because little "Mamie" always staid at home with her, and was so much company for her. Our English and American friends all loved her, and when they heard she was dead brought beautiful flowers and seemed so sorry. She was buried in the American Cemetery, where papa, mama, and Annie go to put flowers on her little grave; but I cannot go there because it makes me cry so much. We know she is now a happy angel in heaven, but we cannot but wish she had not died. Still, since God has taken her to himself we try to be resigned and hope and pray that we may so live that when our time comes to die we may be ready to go, and then we will see again our sweet little "Mamie" and never more be separated from her. I have not written about anything else because my heart is full of our little lost darling. I know that you and many others will sympathize with us and pray for us.

I feel much honored that you have named a missionary society after me, and hope that it will be the means of doing a great deal of good.

With much love to you and family, I am

Your little friend,

Honesty, Family Teaching.

"You are too strict, ma'am! Your boy will never get on in the world if you bring him up with such notions; he will find that he must do like other men, or else he must go under."

Such was the tone of remark by an elderly man, a furniture dealer of long experience, made at his own table and in the presence of his two sons, in response to the hope expressed by a lady visitor in regard to her baby-boy, that he "would grow up to have a heart and be a strictly honest man."

"Strictly honest," said he. "Nobody is that, nobody can be and make money."

"Then he had better be poor!" was the rejoinder; but not wishing to appear rude to her host, and observing the evident uneasiness of his wife, her friend, she courteously changed the topic of conversation.

Is not the question a pertinent one? Are parents doing all they can and ought to stem the tide of dishonesty which now seems ready to overwhelm our land with disaster and shame?

Many years ago a little lad was living with his parents and his many brothers and sisters, on a rocky farm near one of the Massachusetts' hilliest towns.

Down in the valley two or three miles away was the village store, near by it the meeting house, and a little farther on, the mill.

Johnny had only lately been promoted to the dignity of going alone, on horseback, to do the few family errands, and bring home the grist from the weekly grinding. On the particular day of which we write he had been forced to wait his "turn" for some time at the mill, and had sauntered back to the store to listen to the farmer's talk, and to look with childish wonder at the heterogenous medley of goods, in his eyes enormous, also as to quantity, such as were to be found in any country store fifty years ago.

Now Johnny was an incipient mechanic—what Yankee lad is not?—and he had already often found his powers of construction circumscribed by the lack of necessary aids to his inventive genius, notably the lack of nails. So, when he stood beside a whole keg of these most desirable little articles, the temptation to put a few into his pocket proved too strong for his conscience. But when, soon after, he rode off towards home, it was with a load far heavier than the good old horse knew anything about.

Five ten penny nails! His treasure brought him no content or happiness, however, and after supper he wandered about, following his mother from table to pantry, till at last, as she washed the dishes, he leaned on by the kitchen sink and confided to her his trouble.

She wisely forbore any severe reproof, but showed him how surely that transaction was a beginning of evil, which, if allowed to grow, would make of her boy a bad man. At the same time she made no question of what was to be done about it, but told him, as a matter of plainest practical honesty, in which there could be but one course of action, that he must go back with the nails and tell the store keeper in the morning.

But when Johnny rose, in the gray winter daylight, he found that his father had already been gone with the horse, for some hours, to a distant wood-lot, and would not return till night. However, in those sturdy New England families, where one was hedged up another was found, or made, and neither in Johnny's mind nor in his mother's was there a thought of avoiding or delaying the day's duty. So Johnny trudged off on foot down the hill with the nails in his pocket again, told the man his fault, and received a severe lecture from him on the sin of stealing. This he accepted meekly as only his due, and then walked home a happier boy. "And this laid a foundation of honesty for my whole life," said he, when forty years after, he narrated the incident in a sermon upon parental influence.

"Steam is a great thing," remarked a traveller in a railroad car to his vis a vis. "So it is," was the reply; "I owe my fortune to it." "Monsieur is manager of a company?" "No." "An engineer, perhaps?" "No, I have lost a number of relatives by railroad accidents."

Succoring the Tempted.

Believers are seldom exempt in this world from solicitations to sin, and it is the common lot to be subjected to the ordeal of sorrow. Whether it be the one or the other, or both, Christ is able to succor them that are tempted. In his extremity of sorrow and temptation angels ministered unto him and strengthened him; in our extremity Christ is our helper. The ministry of angels was prominent in the old dispensation. Angels were "sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation." Such ministrations, if they exist at all, are secondary under the gospel. We are blessed with a more exalted helper in Christ, and with one who can help more effectually. He was made like unto his brethren for this purpose, in part, that he might sympathize with tempted and troubled souls, and that he might secure the confidence and trust of the children of sorrow.

His ability to succor, in some way, grows out of his own subjection to temptation. The principle is clear enough in its application to ourselves. A like experience enables us to enter into the feelings and sufferings of those who are in trouble. An apostle writes: "And whether we be afflicted, it is for your consolation and salvation, which is effectual in the enduring of the same sufferings which we also suffer; or whether we be comforted, it is for your consolation and salvation." We cannot understand the case of a bereaved parent fully unless we have ourselves tasted that cup. Those who have not suffered lack the most essential of all qualifications for the office of comforters. In our sore trials we naturally and reasonably seek aid and guidance of those who have suffered. They can feel for us, and are able to help and strengthen us, because they can feel.

But could not Christ, as the divine Son of God, comprehend human temptation and suffering without passing through the school of earthly sorrow? It is sufficient to answer that to have suffered is to know suffering in a way different from that knowledge which belongs to omniscience, and that by this subjection to suffering in the God man God has furnished himself with a new and most powerful means of consoling his sorrowing children. By this means he gets nearer to us, and gives us an Advocate and High Priest rich, deep and adequate in sympathy with us. Not one "who cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." The Holy Spirit is, by eminence, the Comforter now, because he is sent by Him who was himself tempted. There is something more tender and sympathetic in the whole Godhead toward us since the Son has suffered. But whether the ability conferred by suffering extends to the divine as well as the human side of Christ, is more speculative than practical. He is able to succor us, because "He Himself hath suffered, being tempted."

In his glorified state He can better reach us, and minister to our infirmities and sorrows, because He has felt the same. And in the anguish of temptation to sin He has been tempted in all points like as we are. The devil shot all his fiery arrows at Him. Satan emptied his quiver of flame in shooting at the heart of Christ. He was tempted "in all points like as we are." He came as near to us in the direction of sin as possible without sinning. He stood on the verge of that awful chasm, and looked into its dark and fearful depths. He felt all of sin except the actual sinning, all the enticements of it, all the wiles of the tempter. And as the sin-bearer, and the substitute of sinners, he went beyond us in a travail of soul which neither angels or men can comprehend.

While we would not yield this view of the sufferings and temptations of Christ as qualifying Him to succor us, it is manifest how they help us to come to Him in our time of need. He has trodden the wine press of bodily pain and of mental sorrow. He has passed through these conflicts with Satan. He has stood where we stand in the wilderness of temptation. He is able because His own sufferings and triumph over sin gives us boldness to go to Him for help. He can but feel for us; He has in His own experience that which makes perfect sympathy assured. Christ is never nearer to us than when we are tempted. The soul may not always realize this nearness. The troubled heart may imagine that God has withdrawn himself, and that Christ has turned away. But it is in these dark and dismal passages of experience that the depths of the Redeemer's love is stirred for us. The grounds of His ability to succor are made clear in that which we suffer—grounds so broad and sure that we cannot well pass beyond their embrace.

Why cannot afflicted and tempted people find abundance of comfort here? Christ is the help of all tried souls. He has a special ability, growing out of special reasons, to succor them that are tempted. He is the strong deliverer, the mighty One to save. All we need is to look to Him in our straits and perplexities—to turn to Him in our hours of sorrow, and in our struggles with sin.

Sharp Practice.

We have never admired the methods and style of the Brooklyn sensational preacher. Mr. Talmage has done some good, and perhaps some harm. He has, no doubt, carried his peculiar measures too far. This, however, is the almost inevitable tendency of a resort to unnatural excitants, and to strained and artificial devices to attract a crowd. If a preacher is determined to fill the public mind, and to have a large hearing by, all means, he will, of course, stop at nothing to secure the end. There is a more excellent way, though it be slow and dull in comparison with that chosen by Mr. Talmage. He is now under charges, and his presbytery has yet to decide upon his case. He will probably be acquitted, and will go on as heretofore, only making considerable capital out of the attempt to check his erratic course. His trial by the presbytery will draw additional throngs to the Brooklyn tabernacle.

One feature in the complaints against him—his expedients for raising money to pay a church debt—has a lesson in it for all who may solicit subscriptions for religious purposes. The following brief correspondence exhibits the grounds of one of the charges against the pastor of the tabernacle:

"Brooklyn, Jan. 30, 1878.

"John F. Talmage, Eutaw House, Baltimore:

"Will you and Mr. Hobbs allow me to pledge you each for $5 000, provided I make up to each of you privately the difference between your subscriptions and $5 000? Telegraph immediately.

"T. De Witt Talmage."

The following answer was returned:

"Baltimore, Jan 30, 1878.

"The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage:

"Cannot permit course suggested. Frankness, earnestness and faith, without deception, will command success. Do not telegraph again, as Hobbs and self are used up now thinking and talking over it.

"John F. Talmage."

Mr. Talmage wanted the influence of these names to a liberal subscription, and he, doubtless, regarded the means legitimate. It was downright deception for the purpose of securing money to pay a church debt. That is the plain English of it. With these names down for five thousand each, others might be pressed into the same line, and brought up to the same notch. The temptation to resort to such tricks, in order to swell a collection, is often very great, and from the deliverances of several of our Northern exchanges we are led to infer that this kind of sharp practice is not very uncommon. The Methodist intimates as much, and the Watchman of Boston, alluding to the matter, says:

A graver charge against Mr. Talmage is his telegram to the nephew, asking the latter to subscribe $5 000 toward a church debt, with the understanding that all of the sum the nephew should be unable to pay should be made up by the uncle himself. We think this a very grave fault. Yet is it not part of a system against which we have not protested? Is it not in essence precisely what Mr. Kimball has been doing for years? To be sure that makes the thing no better. But it distributes the blame a little, and perhaps shows that each one of us must bear a part of it with Mr. Talmage. If we had all condemned the system of paying church debts most universally in favor during five years past, he might not have been led into it, and we might have been spared the opportunity to lay our sins on his shoulders. The rebuke telegraphed back by his nephew was richly deserved, but perhaps not by him alone.

Our readers are aware that there has been lately a good deal of enthusiasm in the North on the subject of paying church debts. Large debts have been wiped out with amazing rapidity, and the events have been blazoned abroad. Mr. Kimball, especially, has become famous as a shrewd and successful collector. We suppose the Watchman knows where of it all comes. Mr. Talmage is not alone in this thing. It is the custom of the churches. They all do it, or nearly all. Straightforwardness and truth ought to be observed in raising money for all purposes, and in collecting for religious enterprises underhanded ways are utterly abominable. The stratagems and the duplicity are likely to be exposed, and, if they are not, the curse of God is certain to rest upon a work that is saluted by insincerity and deception. Honest debts should be paid in an honest way. It would seem from the declarations of those who ought to know that Mr. Talmage is not a sinner above all that dwell in Jerusalem. He has been caught in a trick commonly resorted to—he has been exposed. That is all.

It is hard on Talmage to be thus alone held up to public censure, while the rest of the brethren escape. His is only one of many such cases, and is connected with a corruption of religious conscience, which is almost universal. This state of affairs may somewhat extenuate the guilt of Mr. Talmage, but it is a most alarming revelation of widespread demoralization. Sensationalism in paying church debts is even worse than sensationalism in preaching and in working up a crowded house. Both tend to evil, and to the damage of Christianity. The gain is more apparent than real, and, at best, the results are of the most temporary and superficial character. We repeat: The worst aspect of the Talmage scandal is that it is a specimen of the religious shams and tricks that have become common in the North. It is the development and exposure of a moral degradation that prevails widely, and that threatens to sap the foundations of Christian honesty and spirituality.

Told to Suit—Pious Frauds.

One feature of the so-called religious literature, in the shape of novels and anecdotes, has long appeared to me to have been carried too far, and to have thus been productive of more harm than good. I do not take the ground that everything told should be a record of events as they actually transpired at the time and place, and by the persons named in the story. This would exclude a great many of our best books, and even parts of the Bible. John Bunyan would have no place, and others of the same class would be condemned. But while the writer should be allowed the liberty of departing from the exact record of time, place and person, he should not narrate as a fact anything that never occurred at all, or that is not fully warranted by Scripture teachings and promises.

It is in this respect that I find fault with so many stories that obtain currency in our religious journals. For instance, here is one of a boy who tells a Dutchman he can't sell beer or brandy for him. God and his mother won't love him if he does. The Dutchman gets mad, and is about to pound the brave little boy into jelly; but a good man comes along in a buggy and takes the boy up, and gets him a situation twice as good as with the Dutchman, which brings him more money and less pounding, while his mother and God love him much more. All of this is very agreeable to the brave boy who, while he would take a pounding if he could do no better, never fails to get into a buggy with a good man who will pay him for it. This is but a sample of numbers of those stories which are told to suit. They are calculated to deceive and disappoint. "In this world ye shall have tribulation." Through patient toil and suffering and conflict we are to win an incorruptible and not a corruptible crown. Such stories take all the pith and marrow out of the gospel. They do not present duty as the moving principle. They lead one to think that the devil plays the bully till he finds us brave, and then, like all bullies, he shows himself an arrant coward. We are also taught that temporal rewards come down, like ripe oranges, the very first shake.

Whoever undertakes a Christian life with such shallow principles will wither away as soon as persecution comes. There is no motive strong enough to carry a man through life in the Christian course short of that sense of duty which is infinitely paramount to every temporal consideration whatever. When duty overrides every thought of danger or safety, privation or advantage, pain or pleasure of this life, whether immediate or remote, then one's convictions are deep and strong enough. Any teaching short of this falls below Jesus' minimum. I emphasize minimum because it is the fashion of the age to reckon this high sense of duty as being a high-water mark possible to be reached only by prophets and apostles and martyrs.

But, says one, "If you go to preaching that doctrine you will set the coulter so deep that nobody will be able to pull it through. You cannot get people to repent on those terms. You must soften it and make it easier." Then let me ask: what do we mean by giving up all for Christ, by trampling under foot the vain pomp and glory of the world, and all the vain and covetous desires of the mind? If these and many other expressions mean nothing, let us expunge them from our vocabulary. If you assure men that they are going to have an easier and more prosperous time in this life, of course they will choose Christianity from self-interest alone.

But there is a higher idea yet, viz.: No man who is influenced by selfish motives ever benefits the world, except incidentally or accidentally. Nothing but the principle of duty, separate from all selfish considerations, ever has added or ever will add anything to the real moral power of the world. Where these convictions are not reached you are not making converts, except in name. You may gain adherents to theoretical opinions, but you do not add a pound of steam to the engine which drives the old ship of Zion. You add a carcass to the already heavy freight bill, but you give no buoyancy to its waterlogged hull. It may sound harshly to many ears, but I feel that the great mass of what is termed "religious fiction" is a pious fraud. I do not impeach the motives of the authors. I will grant that they all mean well. I will say more—that their books are incomparably superior to those which do not aim at a moral higher than the current public sentiment of the world. But still let us not deceive ourselves by thinking that they present us with examples of Christian faith and practice safe and sufficient. Christ calls for soldiers, not sutlers, drummers and camp followers. He calls for laborers, not for tradesmen to buy up and speculate upon the crop. He wants martyrs who have really laid every worldly hope, pleasure or glory upon the altar. He wants fire in the engine. He wants men who are as scrupulous in doing what is given them to do as they are in claiming rations or pay. He wants men who are ready to die and at the same time willing to live and suffer—men, women, boys, girls who forget themselves and self-interest in the intensity of their devotion to the Master and his cause. The time is come when we must preach these doctrines to repentance, and furnish mankind with real lives of action, and not imaginary lives of sentiment. Let us quit trying to pass debased coin at par. We have no right to cheat the world even when it wants to be cheated.

Dr. Hinton, editor of our new Quarterly, writing to the Nashville Christian Advocate about Nashville, says:

Tennessee has a splendid capitol—said to be the finest in the South. I do not think it cost over a million if so much, and I suppose it would be rated a cheap house in New York, whose capitol has cost eight millions, and is still unfinished. The capitol in Nashville is massive and durable—will stand all the warring elements short of an earthquake or volcanic eruption.

Nashville Methodists must have had a rich feast furnished by the dedicatory services of the new McKendree Church. This is the most attractive and imposing church edifice in our Connection, so far as I have seen—I speak only of its exterior, as I did not see the auditorium. McKendree has an immense membership—eight or nine hundred—of abundant resources. The pastor, Dr. Kelley, must be a very busy man, to meet the incessant demands of such a city charge. Methodism in Nashville is represented by several other flourishing churches, of which much could be said. The pastors must all be busy: they could not be seen about the Publishing House. There is another huge structure in Nashville—the Methodist Publishing House. From basement to top floor it is a journey to me—not standing much on my muscle—six stories in the rear, four in front—a building of ample dimensions, equal to any possible demands which business may make. Our Publishing House is in peril from accumulated indebtedness; and, from the efforts made to get relief, the public are fully advised that the fear of its failure is not a fiction, but a painful fact. The plan for the rescue of the Publishing House (by selling low-rate bonds) is working, I think, with success. I do not profess to be a financier, but two years ago I wrote an article for the Southern Christian Advocate in favor of a similar scheme of relief. Drs. McFerrin and Young are vigorously pressing this important matter to completion. Our church cannot afford to let this magnificent property be sold under mortgage, and thereby sink the whole of the original capital, and still be in debt. Time will soon settle this Publishing House trouble, as it does so many questions, often in a way unexpected. 'Hope springs immortal in the human breast."

By the time your readers see this they will have an opportunity also of reading the long-promised Quarterly Review. It must speak for itself—it has cost at least one man much thought and painful anxiety. A few hundred copies are on hand to supply subscribers who want the first number. Persons who do not wish to subscribe for the year can get a specimen number for $1. Terms, $1 per annum in advance. Address Rev. Dr. R. A. Young, Nashville, Tenn., inclosing payment. All literary communications should be directed to the writer.

The Character of Our Mexican Work.

Bro. Patterson closes a communication to the Advocate of Missions as follows:

All mission work is, of course, the same in many respects, but different fields present some peculiarities of their own. Therefore the tactics required in one place may not prove so successful in others. In some communities the people are ignorant of all other forms of religion except the one to which they have always been accustomed, and being content with that form it requires much time to gain access to them and convince them of their errors. Other communities or people have obtained some idea of other forms than their own, and desire to exchange the old for the new. These only await an opportunity, which may be delayed either by the tardy steps of the missionary, or by the opposition of ecclesiastical fanatics, whose subsistence depends upon holding these people in subjection.

I suppose we have in this country every grade of character the missionary has to encounter—every difficulty and every encouragement. To some places we have no access whatever; to others we may go in the presence of great difficulties and dangers, while by still others we are welcomed, and even invited to open our schools and churches. These extremely fanatical places we must leave alone for the present, but we cannot turn aside from difficulties and dangers to occupy such places only as invite us and protect us. Therefore, some cities, considered very fanatical, and which have not failed to demonstrate that fanaticism on every favorable occasion, have nevertheless been occupied by the missionaries in Mexico, and in some cases very decided changes have been wrought in those cities. The whole nation has to some extent felt the influence of Protestantism; and while a vast amount of fanaticism remains, and Protestants are sometimes bitterly persecuted, there is, nevertheless, open before us more territory for missionary operations than our societies at home can possibly furnish us the means to occupy. The work is continually extending and the demands upon us increasing.

Good Times Ahead.

About the most encouraging fact in respect to the financial affairs of the country (not of the government) is that by some means, and through a variety of methods, the indebtedness created during the flush times is pretty well liquidated. A large part of it has been paid in money of twice the value of that intended when the debts were made; other parts have been paid in part or compromised, and still others have become wholly unavailable, and must be passed over to the undesirable side of the profit and loss account. The amount of nominal losses has been very great, and these have fallen upon the debtors to the full extent of their ability to pay; and since the intrinsic wealth of the country is not diminished; and now that wealth is so largely in the hands of the late creditor class, the debtors losing all before the creditors lose anything even nominally, there is very little occasion to sympathize with that class, in view of the deficiencies that they have failed to collect. It is well, therefore, that the past should be, as far as it may be, remanded to its own place and that the people should be permitted to set out anew and unincumbered in their industrial career.

In such a country as this there can be no hard times, except as they are produced by wrong financial and industrial methods. Such was the source of the fearful strain that has been upon us, and which, indeed, is now only departing, but not yet gone. The American people must then addict themselves more closely to their home industries, must learn to work for small wages, to sell their productions for low prices, and to be content with small profits on their sales; to earn before they spend; and they must look to themselves, and not to the government for rules of economy and thrift; must appreciate the dignity of homely, honest labor, and account one dollar earned in working for one's self worth two dollars gained by working for another. And when all this shall be realized there will be an end of hard times, and of all danger of their coming again.—National Repository.

The Vote on the Change of Ratio.

The Secretary of the General Conference, as instructed, forwarded to every Annual Conference a copy of Report No. 7 of the Committee on Itinerancy, proposing a change in the ratio of representation in the General Conference. We have received returns from most of the Conferences; but this will not suffice. The College of Bishops will require a certified statement of the vote in each Conference by the Secretary thereof. The Secretaries will please forward the same to us as soon as convenient. Some secretaries have done so; but lest there should be any missing we beg that duplicates be forwarded to us.

Thos. O. Summers,
Secretary of General Conference.

The May Meetings.

The College of Bishops will hold their Annual Meeting in Nashville, the first Wednesday in May, that is to say, May 7, 1879.

At the same time and place the Book Committee will hold its Annual Meeting.

The Board of Missions will meet in Nashville, Thursday, May 8, 1879.

Thos. O. Summers.

Please Read This.

The postoffices of all the preachers of the patronizing Conferences, and the places at which they will represent the interests of this paper, are desired the earliest day possible, to enable the publisher to send forward the lists of subscribers for correction and collection.

The publisher also wishes to be notified of any change in postoffices, failures to receive the paper promptly, or other matters of interest that have not received prompt attention. It is his wish to correct all errors in accounts, and that every agent and subscriber shall be satisfied.

In ordering changes be sure and give the place from as well as that to which the paper is changed. Attention to this is of the very highest importance.

—Beware of overmuch liberality. Sectarianism is bad, but latitudinarianism is worse. Bigotry is very objectionable, but modern liberalism is far more dangerous. Contention over trifles is silly, but quietly to fold our arms and allow the very foundations to be removed without a struggle to save them is both cowardly and wicked, involving ourselves and posterity in utter ruin. We should seek deep convictions, not only to have the truth enter our hearts but work there with revolutionizing and regenerating power, causing us to love it more than life, and feel it as a fire in our bones. Contend for the faith mildly and in a Christian spirit, showing a due regard to the feelings and opinions of others, but showing at the same time that you have a faith which you think worth contending for.

—One hour from the Battery to Harlem! In what an age of wonders we do live! Yet while one has been almost flying through the air on an elevated railway, "annihilating space and out-distancing time," let us see how far the metropolis itself has gone. In an hour it has moved over 1 000 miles from west to east; within the same hour it has traveled about 65,000 miles around the sun, and, drawn by the sun, it has been making a third journey around a central point in the constellation Hercules at the rate of more than 150 000 000 of miles per year. This rapid transit through space is without noise, confusion or collision. The tracks are unworn, the motors need no fresh fuel, and accidents are unknown. Infinity affords plenty of room for the procession of suns and stars and systems. Sirius is our nearest neighbor among the fixed stars. Yet it takes a little over nine years for its light to reach us. Of space and motion we really can form no conception. The figures which science gives us utterly bewilder the imagination, but they arouse us to the contemplation of the sublimest themes, and show in part how the heavens declare the glory of God. Would not some elementary works on astronomy be more astonishing to average readers than dime novels and sensational stories?

Western Methodist.

The social phenomenon of Christianity that most attracts attention is the universal and invariable result of divine illumination—fellowship. We have fellowship one with another" when "we walk in the light"—a fellowship that embraces not only all other believers, but also the one object of their faith, "the Father and His Son Jesus Christ."

God's favor and presence abide with them who walk in the light, and so they have communion with the Spirit of life, truth, righteousness and love. All such as possess this divine experience have fellowship with each other. Cordial affection for the brethren is an immediate sequence of love to God, the common center of all trusting hearts; their love for Him goes forth from this focal point and embraces all who are within the holy circumference. Therefore, it said: "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren."

A bill has been introduced in the Louisiana Legislature prohibiting the sale of all intoxicating liquors in any quantity less than one gallon, except by druggists.

A few years ago we had much legislation in Georgia upon the same. The local option law has been tested in many places, but in most towns the retail of spirituous liquors has been resumed. Since the bar-room—bar to all that is good, room for all that is bad—has been re-opened, quarreling, fighting, manslaughter, murder has been much more frequent than when the local option law obtained. We need something more than local option, more than State legislation; we need a national law, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors, except for medical purposes. Let the national Congress rise up in the majesty of a Christianized civilization, and shut down the flood gate of drunkenness and ruin.

Nashville Christian Advocate.

—We have yet a word more to say. It is not the whole of the evil that parents are careless as to what is read by their children. They allow themselves a latitude that is indefensible. For their own reading they bring into their homes books that ought never to have been printed, and should never be read. Their principles and habits may be fixed so firmly that they can read these books without injury. Conceding this—though in many cases the facts would not justify such a concession—what may be safe for maturity and experience may not be safe for youth and inexperience. What to you may be only a matter of amusement, or a subject of curious study, may be the influence that shall chill and kill the buddings of your child's moral life. Parental restriction at this point, if in conflict with parental example, will be justly regarded as tyrannical. Self-denial is demanded in this no less than in other matters where its obligation is recognized. Many a man banishes the brandy bottle from his side-board for the sake of his growing boys, whose library is full of bad books, and whose daily paper is the one farthest removed from decency and moral healthfulness of tone. If this be not folly, what is?

Bereaved.

Rev. J. T. Sawyer, writing from Baton Rouge, La., March 1, sends sad tidings. Bro and Sister White will be remembered by their friends in sympathy and prayer. Brother Sawyer says:

"Last Wednesday Rev. H. O White and family, while on their way to Lake Providence, were compelled to stop off the boat at this point in order to obtain medical attention for two of the children who were sick. One of them recovered almost at once; but, notwithstanding all the efforts of skilled physicians and kind nurses, the other, Lawrence Edward White, died at one o'clock Friday morning and was buried in Magnolia Cemetery at four P. M. yesterday. His disease was congestion of the bowels and possibly of the chest and liver. He was nearly twenty-one months old. His pain was intense, but he had the kindest of attention and the most tender nursing."

Mrs. Bishop Bowman, says the Northwestern Christian Advocate, died in St. Louis, Friday, February 21. The remains were taken to Greencastle, Ind., for interment, where the devoted wife and her husband lived so long while the latter was president of Indiana Asbury University.

One most sad feature is the absence of the bereaved Bishop in Europe. He is appointed to preside at the annual meeting of our Italian mission workers in Rome, March 5 We have no assurance at the moment of this writing that Bishop Bowman knows of his wife's death, or even of her illness. The entire church will give earnest prayer and sympathy to this devoted worker in his peculiarly distressing affliction.

It will be seen from a notice on our eighth page that the Pensacola District Conference will be held at Milton, Fla., and that it includes the fifth Sunday in March. We have very pleasant recollections of Milton and its hospitable people. We would pay them another visit but for the meeting of our own District Conference about the same time. The brethren, we hope, will give the ADVOCATE a hearty representation. May they have a good meeting.

We have in a note from the Rev Amos Kendall, written at Aberdeen, Miss., February 7, the gratifying intelligence, says the Western Methodist, that Bishop Paine and family—so seriously afflicted not long since, particularly Mrs. Paine—are once more in pretty good health. "I saw the Bishop yesterday," writes Brother Kendall—"found him very cheerful and communicative." Of course, any number of brethren will soon be begging the Bishop to attend District Conferences, etc. But we hope he will not travel far or work much this year.

We are indebted to Hon. E. John Ellis, member of Congress from Louisiana, for a copy of the Statistical Atlas of the United States, based on the results of the ninth census, 1870. Compiled under authority of Congress by Francis A. Walker, M. A., superintendent of the ninth census. This work is gotten up in superb style, and is of great interest and value.

The Greensboro District Conference Alabama Conference meets at Gainesville, March 21. Bishop Keener is to preside. See notice from Dr. Cox on eighth page.

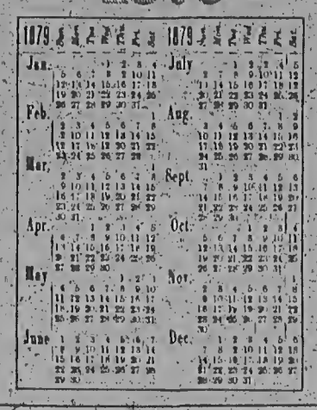
VOICES FROM BABYLON, OR THE PROPHETS OF DANIEL, THE PROPHET. By Joseph A. Seiss, D. D. Porter & Coates, Philadelphia.

The scope and character of the work are stated by the publishers, as follows:

"This is a course of special lectures, recently delivered, intended to be a thorough introduction to the contents of the Book of Daniel, and to review and vindicate the views of the early Christians with regard to it. It embodies the vast results of modern explorations and criticism, and is accompanied with a critical revised translation of the entire book of the great Babylonian prophet. The miracles and predictions given in the book, the wonders of ancient empires, and the characters and doings of their principal sovereigns, are comprehensively discussed, and much recent information touching these early kingdoms has been brought to illustrate and clear up the prophet's narrations. The whole is condensed, animated, and in popular form, which cannot fail to interest and impress. The book embraces nearly 400 pages, handsomely printed."

We have given the lectures a very partial examination, and cannot speak of their merits or faults. The author is well known for his learning and piety, and his style is clear, earnest and entertaining. The prophecies of Daniel have had many expositors, and the most, if not all, have left them still enveloped in uncertainty and mystery. We cannot suppose that Dr. Seiss has completely succeeded, though his book will doubtless prove a valuable contribution to the literature on the subjects treated. For sale by the Presbyterian Book Depository, 94 Camp street, New Orleans. Price in cloth, $1 50

—Our Sunday-school periodicals for March have been received. The Magazine is particularly good. Among the articles are: The Poet King, with engraving; Penitent David, by Dr. Granbery; An Outline Study of the Psalms, by T. J. Todd, D. D.; The Sunday-School As An Evangelical Agency, by Rev. G. G. Smith; Letter from Oregon. The editorial departments are able and instructive, as usual.



—The Southern Musical Journal for February is replete with excellent music and musical literature.

—Appleton's Journal for March has: My Comedy—a tale; English Literature—a chapter from a new history; The Romance of a Painter—from the French of Ferdinand Fabre; Musical Romanticism; The Evil Eye; Dr. Smile's Work on Self-Help; Town-Bred Poets; Two Ladies—Mrs. Jamison and Mrs. Fanny Kemble; Editor's Table; Books of the Day.

—The Quarterly Conference Record Book recently issued by the Publishing House at Nashville is the best we have seen. It is for four years, and the questions are as in the new Discipline. It will be a great convenience, and will contribute much toward accurate and full records of our Quarterly Conference business.

—We have received the eleventh annual report of the Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church for 1878

SPECIMEN COPIES.

Specimen copies of the ADVOCATE will be mailed to any one desiring to look over the paper with a view to subscribing. Pastors will confer a favor by so notifying this fact and forwarding the names to the publisher.

CLUB WITH THE CENTRAL ORGAN.

Having made arrangements to that effect, we will hereafter receive subscriptions for our own ADVOCATE and the Nashville Christian Advocate together for $3 50, each paper to be mailed from its own office.

G. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

CLUB WITH SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

Subscriptions for Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine and our ADVOCATE will be received at $4 00 for both papers, or $3 50 for ministers; regular rates for both papers $5 00. Each paper to be mailed from its own office. Send subscriptions to G. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

WE REFER parties needing steam engines, boilers, mills, gins, presses etc., to the advertisement of H. Lindsey Coleman & Bro., No 13 Union street, New Orleans, La., they being manufacturers and dealers of well-established reputation.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To those disposed to economize this popular hotel offers an opportunity seldom found at so fine, ugly a first-class house, having reduced its rates to $3 and $3 50 per day.

W. H. SHEPARD & Co sell chamber sets, white stone, $1; fancy, $5; dinner sets, white stone, 12; semi-china, $5 and $18; china, 124 pieces, $25.

FOR gout, diabetes and Bright's disease, see advertisement of Dr. S. H. P Lees lithontriptic, send and get pamphlet to 30 Clinton Place, New York. It is spoken of highly by those who have used the medicine.

QUININE HAIR TONIC.—Will preserve, cultivate, beautify, arrest the fall of, and restore a silken softness to the hair. See advertisement on the eighth pa

CARRIAGES, HARNESS ETC.—The largest and most complete establishment of this kind in the South is J. A. Lum & Co., 85 Carondelet street. From the ample stock always kept on hand the purchaser cannot fail to find there what he may desire.

LUMBER-YARD.—At W. W. Carr's (Horace U. Beach, manager) builders and every one interested in securing quick attention to their orders, and prompt delivery of stock, should deal with this house.

PLUMBER.—The best plumber to do business with in New Orleans is M. H. Applegate 146 Poydras street, where he has been located for a number of years. This gentleman is not only thoroughly versed in the mechanical appliances of his business, but conspicuous for his enterprise and liberality, and all those attributes which identify the more prosperous of our merchants. The card of his house is on the seventh page.

MILLINERY.—Persons in the country wanting to do business with a reliable and first-class millinery and fancy goods establishment, we refer them to F. R. Hardon, 27 and 29 Chartres street.

SHADINES.—Howe & Odell, 103 Poydras street, are the only packers of the above genuine shadines. Travelers and families will not do without them, as they require no cooking. Be sure and ask for the genuine shadines. They have become very popular with those who have used them.

TOOTH WASH.—It will pay our readers to read the advertisement on the eighth page headed "Aromatic Salicyline." This preparation is highly spoken of. Sent to any address, 23 Cliff street, New York.

CITRATE OF MAGNESIA.—Rogers' Citrate of Magnesia is a well known preparation, and highly recommended for Dyspepsia, Headache, Biliousness and Malarial Fever. See advertisement.

JEWELERS.—On the eighth page will be found the card of C. F. Barnes & Bro., Louisville, Ky. They invite the attention of buyers

CISTERNS.—At R. B. Mitchell's, 181 Magazine street can be had the best Cisterns. This gentleman is perfectly reliable, and no better man to do business with. See advertisement, and give him a call.

MERCHANTS' MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.—By reference to the advertisement, in another column of our paper, it will be seen that two amendments has been made to the charter of the company, which will add very materially to the already soundness of that excellent institution. Mr. Paul Fourchy, the president, is a gentleman of rare business capacity and foresight, has the welfare of the city and of her institutions at heart, and is one of the most pleasant of men to do business with, being an affable, courteous and thorough gentleman.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—For the benefit of those of our readers who may be desirous of securing for themselves and their families supplies in the shape of boots and shoes, we refer them to the card of J. A. Lacroix, corner Frenchman and Victory. By taking the Royal street car it will leave you off at the door. While his assortment is one of the largest of any retailer in the city, his prices are more moderate than any house on Canal street, and he is determined that no house in the city can undersell him.

FURNITURE.—The name of L. H. Christeson is as well and favorably known among our readers as any furniture man in the city having been for over thirty years with the Sampson Bros., as chief salesman, his judgment and taste may be consulted with the greatest confidence, and those desirous of inspecting and purchasing furniture of any kind should not fail to examine the extensive and carefully selected stock offered for sale at his house. Special attention is given to the filling of orders. See advertisement.

DEMOREST'S PATTERNS.—That excellent gentleman, P. P. Perry, Esq., 183 Canal street, has just received the above patterns for spring. They comprise all the latest and best styles for ladies and children's dress, are graded in sizes, accurately cut and put up in envelopes, on which are printed fine illustrations, with full description of the garment. His assortment of ladies hosiery, sun umbrellas, parasols and toilet articles is very fine, and it will pay our readers to give this worthy gentleman a visit, and inspect his beautiful things, which he is offering at prices to suit the purses of everybody. You can do business with no better man, and is considered to be one of our best citizens. Read carefully his advertisement.

SAFES.—A few days ago we called on Mr. Bridewell, the superintendent of Mac-Neale & Urban's Safes in this city. This gentleman explained to us the workings of these magnificent safes, which are manufactured of the finest steel, the plates of which are wrought together by a process known only to the company, which makes it impossible for burglars to drill through. They went through the large fires of Boston and Chicago and there was not a single instance in which the proprietors of these well known safes had cause to feel dissatisfied, everything contained in them was unharmed, and just the same as when they were put in previous to the fire. The superintendent here has numerous testimonials from bankers and merchants, expressing their unqualified praise of them. We would say in conclusion that if you are not provided with perfect security against fire or burglars, correspond with or see Mr Bridewell, and you will find him not only a gentleman to do business with, but also safes that will please you in every respect.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

National Surgical Institute.

The annual visit of an examining surgeon from this well known institution will be made to New Orleans on March 15th. He will bring with him skilled assistants and workmen from the Home Institute and will remain until April 15th. The preparations now making for this visit are extensive and elaborate, and when completed will be amply sufficient to meet increased demands

In its chosen specialities, paralysis and its results, deformities, diseases of joints, plastic surgery, hemorrhoids fissure, etc., this institution is unexcelled.

Refers, by permission, to the many well known citizens of New Orleans, who are in attendance. For further information write to National Surgical Institute, Indianapolis, Ind., Philadelphia, Pa., or Atlanta, Ga., Headquarters 166 St. Charles street. 4

The Wonderful Lefevre Diamonds.

The two creators of the science of chemistry, Sir Humphrey Davy, of England, and M. Lavoisieur, of France have solved two questions as to "What the Diamond is." Diamond is crystalized carbon. The only one who has attained the great distinction of having successfully achieved the actual reproduction of the true Diamond by artificial means, is M. Lefevre member of the Academy of Sciences, Paris, France.

A Favorite Cough Remedy.—For Colds, Sore Throat, Asthma, Catarrh and other diseases of the bronchial tubes, no more useful article can be found than the well-known "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Twenty-five cents a box.

To Consumptives.—Many have been happy to give their testimony in favor of the use of "Wilbor's Pure Cod Liver Oil and Lime." Experience has proved it to be a valuable remedy for Consumption, Asthma, Diphtheria, and all diseases of the Throat and Lungs. Manufactured only by A. B. WILBOR, Chemist, Boston. Sold by all druggists.

MULTITUDES of people require an alternative to restore the healthy action of their system and correct the derangements that creep into it. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA tones and vitalizes the blood, and restores the vigor of health.

A Leg Made to Triumph in Medicine.

Dread and despair fall upon the community when a terrible epidemic, like the cholera or yellow fever stalks in desolate our homes; yet, all the while a more insidious but no less fatal foe others to disease, in one shape or every year and carries off the flower of the family in the early flush of manly youth and budding womanhood. People call it Consumption, or "decline." It is not in most cases the tubercular phthisis or consumption of the lungs, which is the peculiar malady in climates like those of the British Islands and New England, but a general decay or arrest of the vital process of nutrition. All the doctors agree that there is no remedy for this but Cod Liver Oil but they are constantly met by the obstacle of inability on the part of the patient to swallow or retain it. This repulsion is entirely overcome by Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda which is agreeable to the taste and an unequalled nutrient and tonic for the body, nerves and brain.

Amendments to Charter
OF THE
MERCHANTS' MUTUAL
Insurance Company.
NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 10, 1879.

AT THE REGULAR MEETING OF THE Board of Directors, held on the thirteenth of January, 1879, the following members being present:

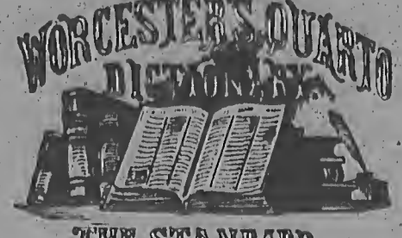
Messrs. P. Fourchy, P. Maspero, D. Fajen, J. B. Labiande, M. W. Smith, Jos. Toby, John Geddes, J. F. Fernandez and Charles Ladlie.

Upon the motion of a large majority of the stockholders the following amendments to the Charter of the Company were unanimously adopted under the powers vested in the Board of Directors by the fourteenth article of the charter:

ARTICLE EIGHTEENTH.

The first article of the charter is so amended as to extend the expiration of the charter until the thirty-first day of May, eighteen hundred and ninety-nine, unless the affairs of the Company be sooner liquidated by a vote of two-thirds of the holders of the corporation.

ARTICLE NINETEENTH.



The capital stock of the Company is fixed at six hundred thousand dollars. This change to take effect from the first day of June next, when new certificates of stock will be issued. The new shares to be one hundred dollars each. Certificates to be issued for fractional part of a share to be ultimately consolidated into full shares by purchase or sale.

I, the undersigned, Recorder of Mortgages in and for the parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, do hereby certify that the within and foregoing amendment of the charter of the Merchants' Mutual Insurance Company is this day recorded in this office, in book 152, folio 95 and 98.

1879 - SHADINES - 1879
NINTH SEASON.

Our this season's catch now ready is the finest we have ever produced. Years of trial have proved their unbounded superiority, Purity and Economy, and being unexcelled as a Preserved Fish they are now a recognized favorite in the world's market!

The unparalled success in former seasons induced the packing of imitation goods by other parties which were bought by some dealers through ignorance or by their cheapness. Store purchases were attended with the usual results.

The celerity with which a luncheon or meal can be obtained, (as they require no cooking or preparation, being always ready), renders them peculiarly acceptable to travelers, picnic and excursion parties, or for general use; their delicious, piquante flavor salutes the palate of the most fastidious, while their cheapness, being now a Dollar per Pail of the original size, agrees the requirements of the economical.

are packed in hermetically sealed tins, essentially the essence of a mild, pleasing appetizing sauce, palatable to all, free from the oily properties of the sardine, retaining only the flavor of the fish, and ready for the table at all times, for dinner, lunch or evening meal, by merely pulling the box.

We are the only packers of the GENUINE SHADINES. They are our Trade Mark.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Address on Butter Making.—At the annual meeting of the Chautauque Dairymen's Association, the Secretary, in making his report, said he had selected the following axioms in butter making from the discussions during the year:

Cleanliness is of the first importance in every department of dairying.

The better the treatment of your cows, the better the profit.

Breed only to the best.

Never drive a milch cow faster than a slow walk.

Have pure spring water as convenient to your cows and use it in the dairy room as much as possible.

Feed cornmeal in the fall that make early cut hay from oats sown in the spring.

Take the largest returns from the best cattle.

Consult the comfort of your cows by providing warm, clean stables.

Baked Tomatoes.—Take large, smooth tomatoes, wipe them and cut off carefully a slice from the blossom end; take out the seeds and fill each tomato with bread-crumbs, and season with pepper, salt and a little sugar. Put a bit of butter in each; place in an earthen dish and bake slowly from half to three-quarters of an hour.

Pork Royal.—Take a piece of shoulder of fresh pork, fill with grated bread and the crust soaked; pepper, salt, onions, sage and thyme, a bit of butter and lard; rub on a little pepper and salt; place in the pan with some water; when about done, place around it some sausages; when done place your pork on a dish with the apples round it; put flour and water in your pan; heat flour browned; some thymes and sage; boil; strain through a very small colander over your pork and apples.

A hot lemonade is one of the best remedies in the world for a cold. It acts promptly and effectively, and has accomplished more cures. One lemon properly squeezed, sit in a slice, put with it sugar, and cover with a half pint of boiling water. Drink just before going to bed, and do not expose yourself on the following day. This remedy will ward off any attack of the chills and fever if used promptly.

Lady Cake.—Take three-quarters of a cup of butter beaten to a cream, and two cups of powdered white sugar, one cup of sweet milk, four eggs, beaten still, and three cups of flour, in which one teaspoonful of soda and two of cream of tartar have been well mixed.

English Food Supply.—The agricultural returns of Great Britain show a small increase in wheat and barley, and a decrease in oats. The acreage of wheat has increased 50,000, Ireland at a slight increase, the total acreage of wheat in the United Kingdom is 3,100,000. The new crop is fully up to the average, and better than for some years. It will yield 11,500,000 quarters, leaving 23,000,000 quarters to be drawn from abroad. The French wheat crop is believed to be below the average, and the French will be buyers instead of sellers. The present prices will probably be maintained, or perhaps be slightly increased, but there will be no scarcity. The potato crop will be about the same as last year. Young cattle have increased 10,000 and lambs 2,000,000.

Nailing a Horse's Foot.—A neighbor of mine recently informed me that he lost a most valuable horse by a casualty in a manner uncommon. A knowledge of a simple remedy would have prevented this loss. The horse trod on a nail which entered his foot. Lameness followed, the nail was extracted, but lockjaw supervened, resulting in death. An irritating remedy in such cases is unadvisable. If when a nail is withdrawn from a horse's peg, the foot should be bled upward some muriatic acid be poured into the wound, neither lameness nor lockjaw need be feared. Why the iron should have the effect it frequently has, and the rationale of the above remedy, I am unable to explain, but of the certainty of counteracting disease by this perfectly safe application, I am well convinced.—Rural Home.

Dried Blood as a Fertilizer.—The process of gradually the blood of dogs, to be used as a fertilizer, is becoming a business of importance in connection with the pork-packing establishments of the West. It is so kneaded and dried with black powder, and is in fine grains. The blood of a hog is worth for this purpose about three cents before it is prepared. One establishment in Wisconsin, which fees up 5000 swine per day, receives for the blood alone $150.—Rural Home.

The American Chemist says a Western farmer discovered many years ago that wood could be made to last longer than iron in the ground. Pine and weather, he says, seem to have no effect upon it. The posts can be prepared for less than two cents a piece. This is the recipe: Take boiled linseed oil and stir into it pulverized charcoal to the consistency of paint. Put a coat of this over the timber, and be glad there is not a man who will have to see it rot.

To Polish Shell Combs.—Take chamois skin pad, a teaspoonful of sperm oil in the center, and rub rotten stone, as much as the pad will take up. Polish your comb, or other shell work, with the rotten stone and oil, and finish with dry rotten stone, using the dry part of the chamois. Never wash your chamois. Keep it by you, and it will last for years. In dressing mourning, the jet, jewelry etc., never use olive oil, castor oil, or any other vegetable oil, nothing but the best sperm oil, as others are oxydized, and instead of adding brightness, gives a gum that will soon ruin anything or look.

Turning Evergreen Hedges.—Rural and Rural New Yorker, praises the evergreen hedge. It is undoubtedly growing rapidly in popularity, and is the most ornamental fence that can be made near the street or highway, and we predict that as it becomes more familiar with it, they will like it still better. Just hear what Rural says: "It is hard work to train an evergreen hedge with a pair of hedge shears, I know from the sensation in my arms by evening. But how neat the hedge looks when it is done, and just the opposite when the job is neglected. It is really too bad that in a country like ours, with an abundance of timber everywhere, we see so few good evergreen hedges. For a perfect one hemlock is best, but all other kinds of hedges, if properly pruned, is highly ornamental, besides being useful.

The cost of the plants is really nominal, and for a mile or less where it is generally cut or plowed fence is not required, the plant may be used, and in fact should be used instead of wood or stone. The cost of an arbor-vitæ hedge is said one-half that of the cheapest picket or board fence, and the annual pruning will not equal the repairs necessary to a wooden one, which is never in order unless with the most careful and costly construction, and of metal none are left in existence. Now is the time to start a hedge, and any one who has a place for such an ornament should improve the opportunity.

Burns Along the Walls.—On some farms we see that bushes are allowed to grow along the walls, and gradually they extend into the fields, monopolizing a strip of land all around the same. Now we regard this as rather slack farming where such things are allowed. It does not pay to grow brush in this way. Many are in the habit of mowing the bushes along the walls once in two or three years. This path, of course, will have a tendency to keep them in check, but the best way is to grub them up, and not even leave the roots behind. We like to see clean fields.—Exchange.

Scientific.

TREATMENT OF FROSTED PLANTS. The effect of freezing is purely mechanical in its nature. There is, in addition to this, a chemical change in the plant that has an important bearing on the result. The expansion (of the fluids in the plant) forces water into cells or vessels intended only for air; and on the other hand, air is mingled with water in cells where its presence is deleterious. These deleterious results follow more surely and severely if the plant is exposed to light and warmth before thawing has been accomplished, and the internal derangements have had time to readjust themselves. The effects of the freezing depend largely on the circumstances under which the thawing takes place. In order to avoid ill effects, the following plan should be adopted: As soon as the plant is known to be frosted it should be placed in a dark room where the temperature is but one or two degrees above the freezing point.

The darkness will prevent injurious chemical changes that would result from the presence of light while the low temperature will cause the thawing to take place very slowly. Immersion in water raised to one or two degrees above freezing will often extract the frost without any injurious consequences, when, if left to the ordinary course of nature, the plant will be destroyed. In case of trees, or plants out of doors, a showering of water just as the sun falls on them will often prevent all injurious consequences. A smoke made to pass between trees and the sun, to intercept his rays till thawing takes place, will often prevent any ill consequences.—L. J. Templin, in Scientific American.

—At the recent meeting of the British Association, at Dublin, Mr. Romanes read a paper to prove that jelly-fishes are endowed with a nervous system. Among other experiments he told how he had made some intoxicated by pouring whisky into a vessel in which they were kept. The effects were most demoralizing. The previous sober swimming motions became highly excited, and the creatures tumbled about in a rollicking manner. Later on a drowsiness began to overcome them, and eventually they subsided to the bottom of the vessel in a state of complete intoxication. They recovered rapidly when removed to fresh water.

"Can you tell me the color of the devil's wig?" said a forward young person to Dr. Lawson, of Selkirk. "Oh, man, ye maun be a poor tyke," replied the doctor, "to hae ser'd your master sae lang, and no ken the color o' his wig yet."

THE GENUINE

CELEBRATED

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

OR DISEASES ARISING FROM A DISORDERED

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternate with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; is easily startled; his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low, and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he dislikes every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, in case of AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with QUININE, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression Dr. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING on the outside wrapper.

In all cases where the genuine DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLANE, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

The Loquet-LeRoy Institute

AND KINDERGARDEN DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, 280 Camp Street.—This institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses MOISE, Cecelia W., Sallie L., and Corinne, the latter relicts of the late R. G. Rafal, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successor of Mme Loquet LeRoy, whose good will and right of conduct the School under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change at teachers. No change whatever in the conduct and management of the School. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage so liberally extended to the institution, and that of their friends, and the public generally, promising strict attention to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge. C. W. MOISE, Principal.

REFERRING TO THE ABOVE MADAME LOQUET-LEROY announces to her friends and former patrons the entire confidence she has in her successors being in every way suited to the high trust they have assumed. She looks for the continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded her, and that she will still be actively connected with the institution. For terms and particulars apply to the principal.

MILK OF MAGNESIA

IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach. The glycerine paste and milk like smoothness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring an persuasion to induce them to take it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and will act as a laxative when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The smoothness of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a fine coal part of a single drop magnified 20 diameters. The first the celebrated Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia now offered. The difference between them is most strikingly for whereas the undissolved crystalized Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the MILK of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable precipitate, in fact perfect dissolved.

Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it, and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others are already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circulars by addressing

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

☞ Correspondents should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and in filling small orders higher rates must be paid.

There was a sharp improvement in wheat yesterday, both at St. Louis and Chicago. This fact together with the low state of the local supply and the declining receipts, gave additional strength to the market.

Corn meal is advancing, moderate demand.

Corn is in fair supply and moderate demand.

The provision market opened quiet yesterday. On the close prices were weak and nominal.

The tone of the sugar market is firmer for all grades, but shows a slight advance for choice open kettle, and the demand is good. Receipts, 1,742 hogsheads.

DISCOVERY BY which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The ladies all over the country obtain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the Hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce satisfactory growth. Three bottles for $5; et to accompany the order and balance to be paid when medicine is delivered.

Religious Notices.

GREENSBORO DISTRICT CONFERENCE, ALABAMA ANNUAL CONFERENCE Bishop Keener will hold the District Conference at Gainesville, commencing March 21, 1879. A full attendance from every charge is urged. Let prayer be made by all the charges for the outpouring of the Spirit upon the Conference. Hope all the pastors will bring the amounts to be raised for Bishops with them.

S. H. COX, P. E.

S. H. COX P. E.

THE District Conference for the Pensacola district will be held at Milton, embracing the fifth Sunday in March. As the time is near, the preachers in charge of circuits and stations will please forward to me, at the earliest possible moment, the names of delegates and others that will attend the Conference, so that we may provide for their entertainment. Please, brethren, give immediate attention to this.

We trust that every one will come up in the spirit of pleading prayerfulness for the baptismal benediction upon the meeting, and upon all the churches of the district. E. P. BUCH, P. C.

NOTICE.—The Alexandria District Conference, Louisiana Annual Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will convene on Friday, April 18, 1879, at nine o'clock, A. M., in Alexandria, La.

The preachers of the district will please bring full statistics, and the Quarterly Conference Journal, of their respective circuits, and their collections for Bishops.

Bishop J. C. Keener will preside. Homes will be provided for the members.

G. KEENER, P. E.

TUTT'S PILLS.

SYMPTOMS OF A TORPID LIVER.

Loss of Appetite, Bowels Costive, Pain in the Head, with a dull sensation in the back part, Pain under the shoulder blade, Fulness after eating with a disinclination to exertion of body or mind, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, with a feeling of having neglected some duty, Weariness, Dizziness, Fluttering of the Heart, Dots before the Eyes, Yellow Skin, Headache generally over the right eye, Restlessness, with fitful dreams, highly colored Urine.

IF THESE WARNINGS ARE UNHEEDED SERIOUS DISEASES WILL SOON BE DEVELOPED.

TUTT'S PILLS

are especially adapted to such cases, a single dose effects such a change of feeling as to astonish the sufferer.

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS:

DR. TUTT: Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.

REV. W. L. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

The first effect of TUTT'S PILLS is to Increase the Appetite, and cause the body to Take on Flesh, thus the system is nourished, and by their Tonic Action on the Digestive Organs, Regular Stools are produced.

DR. J. F. HAYWOOD OF NEW YORK, SAYS:

"Few diseases exist that cannot be relieved by restoring the liver to its proper functions, and for this purpose no remedy has ever been invented that has so happy an effect as TUTT'S PILLS."

DEAR SIR: The No. 7 Diebold Safe purchased some time since went through the large conflagration and remained forty-eight hours in the burning ruins. The iron on the sides and front was very much bulged out. Considering the extreme heat, to which it had been subjected, we feared greatly for the contents; but judge of our joy and surprise when, on opening it, we found all our books and papers in good condition.

AT SET OF SUN.

If we sit down at set of sun,
And count the things that we have done,
And, counting, find
One self denying act, one word
That eased the heart of Him who heard,
One glance most kind,
That fell like sunshine where it went—
Then we may count that day well spent.

But if, through all the livelong day,
We've coined no gain for heaven or pay,
If, through it all,
We've done no thing that we can trace,
That brought the sunset to a face
No set sun shall,
That helped some soul, and made it cost,
Then count that day as worse than lost.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

PORTLAND, ME., March 3.—The official returns of municipal election give Walker, the Democratic and Greenback candidate, 19 majority.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Among the measures which made more or less progress, but failed of enactment this session, are the following: the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bills, the army appropriation bill, the bill to regulate inter-State commerce, the steamboat bill, the Geneva award bill, the bill to establish postal savings banks, the bill to repeal the specie resumption act, the bill granting pensions to survivors of the Mexican war, the silver bill, the bill to restrict Chinese immigration, joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment to prohibit the payment of disloyal claims; the bill to provide for the enforcement of the eight-hour law; the proposition to transfer the Indian Bureau to the War Department; the Mississippi levee bill and the bill providing for a commission on the improvement of the Mississippi; the bill extending the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific; the Brazilian mail service bill; the bill to regulate transportation of animals by railroads; the bill to devote the proceeds of sales of public lands to educational purposes; the bill authorizing railroad companies to construct and maintain lines of telegraph for commercial purposes; the Burnside committee's army regulation bill; the bill to revise the patent laws and the Japanese and Chinese indemnity fund bills, the various measures reported from the House Committee on Banking and Currency, and many other financial bills, both in the House and Senate bills, besides those specified above proposing aid in lands or bonds for the construction of railroads, canals, etc. A large number of bills on the calendars, aggregating local interest of more or less importance, and several hundred reported from committees for the relief of private claimants, besides thousands of others which were left untouched on the files of committee rooms.

The total number of bills and joint resolutions introduced in the House of Representatives during the Congress which has just expired is 9226, and the total for the Senate is 1936. The principal measures which have become laws during the last session, in addition to ten of the regular annual appropriation bills, are the bill reducing the tax on tobacco, and otherwise amending the internal revenue laws, the census bill, the bill to aid refunding the national debt by authorizing the issue of small treasury certificates, the bill to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases, and the bill providing for the payment of arrears of pensions for service during the late war.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—All the appropriation bills excepting the legislative and army bills have been signed, and are now laws; also the river and harbor bill; bill making requisite appropriation to pay the arrears of pensions. The last named reached the president a little before twelve o'clock, and was promptly approved.

It is understood that a message vetoing the river and harbor appropriation bill was prepared, but under the influence of great pressure the Executive's signature was finally affixed to that bill.

The President and his Cabinet, while at the capitol this morning, agreed on the 18th of this month, (March,) as the date for the commencement of the extra session of the Forty-Sixth Congress, for the convening of which a proclamation will be forthwith prepared and issued.

BALTIMORE, March 5.—The ninety-fifth meeting of the Baltimore Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church was begun at Grace Church this morning, Bishop Harris, of New York, presiding. The only business to-day after organizing was a general preparation for the work of the session, which will continue a week or more.

The Washington Conference of the colored Methodist Episcopal Church also met in the city to-day at the Centennial Hall, Bishop Ames presiding. The regular committees were appointed, and the ordinary business proceeded with.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 5.—The Hong Kong Press, of February 6, has the following: The Shanghai Courier says a telegram was received at that port from Wagaski, of the 25th of January, which stated that the Star Queen was totally wrecked on the South Gotto. The captain and twenty-one of the crew were drowned.

There was a rumor that 4000 Chinese pirates contemplated a raid on Hong Kong.

CAPE TOWN, Feb. 18.—via MADEIRA.—Colonel Pearson was attacked at Ekowe by a large force of Zulus. The latter were defeated with enormous loss, and pursued to Entamedi, one of the Zulu military kraals. Colonel Wood reports that he has captured a large number of cattle.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—The Cabinet considered the appointment of members of the National Board of Health under the bill passed during the closing hours of Congress. The bill provides that the board shall consist, respectively, of one member representing the Treasury Department, one the Navy, one the War, and one the Department of Justice, and seven to be appointed by the President. It was decided that Surgeon General Woodworth, of the Marine Hospital service, should be the representative of the Treasury; Medical Director Francis M. Gunnell of the Navy, Solicitor General Phillips of the Department of Justice, and Assistant Surgeon John S. Billings of the War Department.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 6.—A telegram from Tashkend states that after the death of Shere Ali at Mazar, a bloody conflict broke out among the followers of the various pretenders to the Afghan throne, and the partisans of Yakoob Khan were victorious; it was reported that Yakoob Khan and two other pretenders had taken refuge at Herat.

LONDON, March 7.—Hon. Elihu Burritt, the distinguished philanthropist, reformer and philologist, is dead.

WASHINGTON, March 8.—The four per cent. refunding certificates to be issued under the act passed by Congress entitled an act to aid in refunding the national debt will date from the 1st of April next.

The certificates will be of the denomination of ten dollars, and be convertible into four per cent. bonds in sums of $50 and multiples thereof; unless so converted they will draw no interest. On the 1st of April next any one can obtain certificates in exchange for lawful money at the Treasury here or at any Sub-Treasury at par.

Afterwards accrued interest on certificates will have to be added in purchase. The interest on ten dollars at four cent. is about one cent in nine days. The reason that April 1st is taken as the date of issue of the certificates is that interest on four per cent. bonds which is due quarterly will be paid on that date and the certificates and bonds will start out even. Thus there will be no difficulty on account of difference in interest between the two in effecting the conversion.

COLUMBUS, O., March 8.—Night after night, for the past week, attempts have been made to burn this city, and both citizens and police have thus far failed to discover the origin. One or more fires, principally in stables, which points to incendiary work have occurred each night.

FOREIGN.

HAVANA, March 3.—The government has advised the municipalities to establish public schools for colored children, and whenever this cannot promptly be done colored children should be admitted to the white schools.

ROME, March 5.—The official list of Cardinals to be created at the next consistory includes the name of Dr. Newman.

HONG KONG, Feb. 6.—The anti-Russian spirit is increasing in government circles. If difficulties are placed in the way of Chung, the present minister at St Petersburg, it is expected that immediate war will be declared at Pekin.

Confident reports come from the interior from the army under Tso, whose forces are said to outnumber the Russian ten-fold.

The party of Moderate Councils is wholly in subjection to the majority.

The result of the negotiations at Washington is eagerly awaited by the Chinese officials, especially in the southern provinces where emigration is most frequent.

The report is prevalent that the Chinese government will establish post offices at the treaty ports before the close of the present year.

YOKOHAMA, Feb. 6.—Foreign traders are momentarily paralyzed, it is supposed in consequence of the speculation by holders of Mexican dollars, of which there are but few in the market, their price being unreasonably high. The native merchants decline all transactions in which they serve as the medium.

KOWAJI, the Japanese Chief of Police, has sailed for Europe on a two years' tour of inspection.

Extensive preparations for General Grant's reception are being made.

Wade Hampton's letter formally resigning the governorship of South Carolina was received at Columbia on Wednesday, February 26, and he was duly commissioned as United States Senator, and his certificate of election forwarded to Senator Butler for presentation. On the same day Lieut. Gov. Simpson qualified as Governor before Chief Justice Willard, and issued a proclamation, in which he announced that, in consequence of a letter of resignation received from Gov. Hampton, he had taken the oath of office as Governor and entered upon the duties of the office.

A Noble Work.

If anybody is inclined, says the Watchman, to sympathize with the outcry raised against Anthony Comstock, let him read the following statement of his work for the past year:

"During the year 23 arrests were made in the United States courts, and 25 in the State courts, making a total of arrests by the society of 364. Two were discharged, 4 were remanded for jury trial, 22 were convicted, 20 were sentenced and 1 absconded. This makes a total of 184 convicted and 165 sentenced since the work began. Three convicts were pardoned during the year. One hundred thousand books, weighing 2 100 pounds, 475 obscene pictures and 20 pounds of stereotype plate were destroyed, making a total of 23,250 pounds of bad books, 202,679 obscene pictures, and 14,420 pounds of stereotype plate destroyed, or 7 tons and 120 pounds of plate, and nearly 12 tons of such books and printed matter. A man was arrested in Rochester in November. Six trucks were used to carry off 100,000 books and over 1,000,000 circulars from this one place. The Rochester man had had 55,630 000 circulars printed by one firm. These circulars, advertising vile books, are sent all over the land into the best schools, male and female. During the year 3 000 letters had been sent by this society to institutions of learning, warning them against printing the names of students in their catalogues. In one school it was found that one-third of the girl pupils under fourteen years of age had obscene matter in their possession. In 23 institutions of learning the foulest kind of books and pictures were found in possession of the students. And in every instance the parents and teachers were unaware of what was happening under their eyes."

A man who has done so much as this for the homes of America in one year ought not to be put down. His victims weep, and affect martyrdom; but our hearts may well be steeled against their sufferings. They plead that they are not met with all the formalities and courtesis to which they are accustomed. We are glad the hand is rough and prompt which deals with such miscreants.

Napoleon said that before his time it was customary in Europe to carry on war in the most courtly fashion. The two armies would face each other, the two commanders would step in front of their troops, take off their hats, and say to the enemy: "Gentlemen, have the kindness to deliver the first volley." This was a keen satire upon the officers of the old school. We have fought vice too often in the same gingerly manner. We trust that the Napoleonic vigor which Mr. Comstock has brought into his campaign may never be unlearned. What his enemies want is the liberty to use the mails for the corruption of our children, and notice of any intended movement against them, so that they may change their quarters in time to avoid arrest. The detective system they consider highly immoral, and imprisonment for an attempt to corrupt the whole nation a gross outrage.

Letter from Oregon.

ALBANY, OREGON, Feb. 18, 1879.

REV. L. PARKER, D. D.—My Dear Brother: My thoughts often flit across the continent and commune with you in your sanctum, or at your genial fireside. I have since the adjournment of your Conference received letters from two old and tried friends and soldiers of the cross, in New Orleans, which, with their pensive passages, afforded another opportunity for me to regale myself with that pleasing hope, fond desire, and longing after immortality. So many of our friends have gone over to possess the good land. It will be a happy meeting. The death of that lovely young man and minister, Bro. S. H. Schroeder, was so sudden and unexpected. He fell before his sun of life had reached its zenith—fell with sword in hand—fell at his post; but blessed be God! He rose as he fell—rose to the mansions of the blest! Happy for him to have rounded off his life so well. Happy for him to have "finished his course with joy, and testify the gospel of the grace of God!" Heaven seems nearer and dearer as the sainted dead are translated thither. I shall not be a stranger there.

I have just lit down home a brief while—in from the district work. Nineteen sermons, besides travel, visiting and reading, is full work for three weeks; is it not? We have seasons of refreshing, but no general revivals. Our country is full of infidelity, and isms, under the semblance of our holy religion, are numerous and blatant. O, when will the kingdom of the Lord come! Still bear us up in your prayers.

Our crop prospects never were brighter at this season of the year than now. So much fall grain sown. Times are exceedingly hard—mortgages, mortgages so many. If the crop should be short and the price low this country will about smash up in another year. I like Oregon more and more, although there are some things I can never get used to; as, for example, free-love doctrine, woman's rights, violation of marital vows, divorces, infidelity. The feebleness of our church is to me the source of anxiety and care, and weighs me down more than all things else. We have done much hard work here—the fruits have not been adequate, at least humanly speaking. Rivalries and jealousies hinder the onward progress of Zion's wheels. We have many good and true people, but they are scattering. If a few more Georgians and Alabamians, etc., could come among us and strengthen our hands and encourage our hearts, we would be glad, as in the providence of God our lot is cast here to labor for precious souls for whom Christ, the Lord of glory, died. O, it is a grand and glorious work! We need help—help in the pulpit and in the congregation.

Hope the brethren in your great city may have great success, as also all our brethren in the whole Conference. The ADVOCATE is always welcome.

Affectionately in Christ,

T. B. WHITE.

The following communications from Bros. Ransom and Newman reached us by the same mail:

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil, South America,
Feb. 4, 1879.

To the Editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE:

DEAR BROTHER: Please publish the enclosed card. We will give the preference to Methodist families. Bro. Newman, superintendent of this mission, is calling for a young married man at Piracicaba, Province of Sao Paulo. We think he can live on $2,000 per year, and we pledge the friends here for $750 or $1,000 of that amount yearly for two years. Where is the man? Will the church send him?

Will you please have my card copied by the Texas papers?

Respectfully,

J. J. RANSOM.

Immigration to Brazil.

MR. EDITOR: I have been a missionary in the empire of Brazil for the last three years. During my residence in the empire I have frequently been written to by persons who wished me to advise them as to coming to Brazil. Some letters I have not answered at all, except through the newspapers; and my advice has always been: "Don't come." It appears now that some persons are determined to come to the empire, and at the close of 1878 I was requested to arrange free passage for a number of families who desired to settle in the Province of Sao Paulo. Together with Rev. Junius E. Newman, I petitioned the Imperial Government, and we have lately received authority to bring to the empire families to the number of twenty-five persons, whose expenses will be paid by the government from the port of Galveston, Texas, or that of New Orleans to the cities of Campinas and Rio Claro, and intermediate railroad stations in the Province of Sao Paulo. As to immigration let me say:

1. I advise nobody to leave the United States to come to Brazil. The climate, the laws, the religion, the people, the language, every and each thing that affects your daily life is so widely different from what you know that you are almost sure to be discontented. Your children will lack the opportunities of education, and will be exposed to the most frightful perils on account of the corrupt life of all classes of society. If you come you lose your citizenship; for, even though you are naturalized, you will still labor under great disadvantages.

2. As for those who take advantage of free passage to come to Brazil, I will not assume any responsibility in the matter. I will see that you have your passage from Galveston or New Orleans to Campinas or Rio Claro, or any place between these two cities; but I will not, in any way, be responsible for your coming, or for your welfare after you get to your destination. I know of no government lands for you to occupy, nor of any easy way of making a fortune. Nearly all the Americans in this country are poor, and I do not expect you to get rich by coming. If you are an adventurer, we do not wish you under any consideration, nor will I knowingly sign the immigration papers of any loafers or drunkards.

3. All that wish to come, taking upon themselves the full and complete responsibility of the step, can obtain free passage by writing to me. You must specify your name, age, occupation, fortune, place of residence, State, county and post-office. State whether you are married, name and age of each member of your family, and the time at which you can be ready to set sail, and how long it will be necessary to have my advice before you can be in the port from which you are to set sail. State the place to which you wish to go in the empire. "Don't ask me must you come." I have already said: Stay where you are. The American packet by which your letter will come leaves New York on the fifth day of each month, and arrives at this city on the twenty-seventh of the same month. You may count on three months from the time of writing to me until you hear from me.

4. I get nothing for my labor in this matter, and lose the cost of postage on my letters. Let me repeat again: There is nothing given the immigrants except free passage. All letters will be addressed to

REV. DR. L. PARKER—My Dear Brother: The following card will explain itself, and I ask you to be so kind as to publish it for the information of the parties to whom I allude. During the past four years I have received quite a number of letters from various parties in the Southern States, requesting information about this country, and expressing a desire to emigrate to this province if the expense of transportation could be avoided.

In December last Bro. Ransom and myself presented a petition to the "Minister of Agriculture," asking for free transportation for a few American families, who desire thus to emigrate; and our petition was readily and kindly granted. So that American emigrants can now get free transportation from New Orleans or Galveston to Rio de Janeiro, and from thence, by railroad, free tickets to the American settlements near Santa Barbara. To secure this transportation it is necessary for each emigrant to send to Rio de Janeiro his name, and the names and ages of his family, and his post-office and State plainly written. Forward these to the Rev. J. J. Ransom, and he will have them presented to the proper authority, and let you know when you may expect to be able to get your passage paid. This payment will be thus provided for: The Brazilian Consul at New Orleans will have your names immediately sent to him with the order to pay your passage.

When you learn that the Consul at New Orleans is ready to pay your passage, you can go to that city and select any good sail vessel suitable for carrying you and your family. One, two or, at the most, three families of emigrants can come in one ship—not more—and be comfortable.

Emigrants thus coming here will be as free in all their movements as if they had paid their passage in full; and they will be recognized as American citizens until they voluntarily become naturalized Brazilians; and it will be the duty of the American Consul to see them protected, if need be, in their rights. It is not probable there will be any need of this, as all foreign residents are protected, by the laws here, in person and property, and religious toleration is freely granted to all Protestants.

OBJECTIONS TO THIS COUNTRY.

1. By far the greatest is the language, yet every emigrant under forty years of age can learn the language in one year well enough to transact all ordinary business.

2. It is supposed that in coming here you will be much isolated, and thus cut off from church and school privileges. I can say truly, those who are here already have quite as many advantages in this respect as the people living in the country in Alabama or Mississippi. Most of our people here can be at church every Sabbath by riding six or eight miles, and the great majority need not ride more than from one to four miles.

In regard to high schools, those of our people who can afford it can send their children to the schools in the city of San Paulo or Campinas, at rates only a little higher than would be paid in the States. Those schools are under the control of our missionary brethren of the Presbyterian Church, and their schools are excellent; and the American society in those towns is of the best quality.

ADVANTAGES.

1. All animals, for work or riding, are much cheaper than in the States, and can be kept at much less expense, indeed, with a good pasture—never need corn except when in regular service.

2. Crops are more easily made, corn especially; of this the average crop is from twenty to forty bushels per acre, and it seldom fails on cultivated land. Rice grows abundantly. Potatoes, sweet and Irish, do well. Cotton does better here than in the States. Sugar is abundant and cheap. All kinds of stock grow finely—hogs, cattle, etc.—and a good and plentiful living is more easily made than in the States; and, with reduced freights on our railroads, we can now ship corn and meat to the coast, where we can always get a remunerating price.

The climate on the tablelands in this province is equal to the best in the world. May and June in Alabama, and September and October, will represent our whole year in this country—summer and winter.

This country is more, much more healthy than the most favored sections in the States. The general healthfulness of the country, and its delightful climate, are two of its greatest excellencies. But with all its advantages, let it not be forgotten that industry and economy are indispensable here.

COFFEE.

Within eighty miles of where I now write very fine lands for coffee can be had, and, twenty miles farther, some of the best in this empire. The cost in the latter place is from $3 to $5 per acre. Coffee is by far the most profitable crop in the empire, and if half a dozen families will come here they can find as many more now in the country who will go to the fine coffee region of which I speak. That country is seventy-five miles from the railroad, but will soon be much nearer, as the road is built west.

If there be any persons who read this article, who desire to get their transporation free, let them direct their letters thus: Rev. J. J. Ransom, Correio, Geral, Caixa No. 384, Rio de Janeiro, and he will attend to your requests about passages. But don't trouble him unless you are certain to come, and write very promptly, or you cannot get off in time from New Orleans. You ought not to leave there later than July 1. They usually have yellow fever in Rio in February, March and April.

If you come to San Paulo be sure to bring this letter, and keep it for two years. Be sure to do this.

Any one wishing to write to me can direct their letters to Santa Barbara, Province of San Paulo. If you wish to come to Barbara write very promptly.

IN HIM WE LIVE.

BY REV. WASHINGTON GLADDEN.

O Master let me walk with Thee
In lowly paths of service free;
Tell me Thy secret, help me bear
The strain of toil, the fret of care;
Help me the slow of heart to move
By some clear winning word of love;
Teach me the wayward feet to stay,
And guide them in the homeward way.

O Master let me walk with Thee
Before the taunting Pharisee;
Help me to bear the sting of spite,
The hate of men who hide Thy light,
The sneer distrust of souls sincere
Who cannot read Thy footprints clear,
The dullness of the multitude
Who dimly guess that Thou art good.

Teach me Thy patience; still with Thee
In closer, dearer company,
In work that keeps faith sweet and strong
In trust that triumphs over wrong,
In hope that sends a shining ray
Far down the Future's brightening way,
In peace that only Thou canst give,
With Thee, O Master, let me live!

The Friends of Our Boyhood.

MR EDITOR: A heart full of sorrow over friends laid low in death is only apology we offer for this letter. No one has asked us to write we offer it as a spontaneous flow sympathy to the friends of our old, boy and youthful life. The yellow fever this year, stalked along roads it never traveled before; one of these lay through old Rocky Springs, Miss., where we were raised from two years old, and lived until twenty years of age. There we lived under the ministries of Drake, Jones, Campbell, Light, Marshall, Montgomery, Booth, Kendall, Clinton, Uncle Tommy Owens, and a host of others of blessed memory, and last, but not least, Rev. D. A. J. Parker. For many years his home was there, and he was pastor of our old church a great part of our time. His sermons first awakened us to a sense of sin and danger of eternal death, while the sweet eloquence of Clinton won our souls to Christ. Both are now in heaven, and when our course in earth is done we hope to see them among the white-vested elders who worship near the throne. Bro Parker was a preacher without many equals, and but few superiors as to the matter and arrangement of his sermons; while in song there was a swell ever and anon, as if reinforced by a tide of praise from above. When in the effective ranks he was very popular, especially with sinners, and but for increasing infirmities and causes his ministry would have been a crown of glory to the church to the last. There is no truer friend of Methodism or soldier of the cross buried in old Rocky Spring church-yard than our lamented friend and brother, Rev. D. A. J. Parker. Near about the time of his death his wife, Mrs. S. O. Parker, died also with yellow fever. King Solomon's description of a true woman would not be extravagant if applied to her. Words cannot tell of our anguish as we read: "Aunt Parker is dead."

She was a dear friend and neighbor; and in time of trouble a source of great consolation to the afflicted. Another dear friend of our childhood who passed away with yellow fever was Mrs. Emily Harper. She was a retired woman, a member of the Christian Church, and one of the warmest-hearted motherly ladies we ever knew. She knew all the avenues to a boy's heart, and how to win him away from wicked works. We remember her kind attention to our family, twelve years ago, when the small-pox had stricken us all down. While dear friends feared, and with good reason, too, to come near, she came every morning as an angel of mercy, and stayed until the sun was low. Such a woman cannot live too long on this troubled earth, and but for knowing that God doeth all things well, we might say: "Alas, dear old friend, that thou diedst too soon." May God bless her family and loved ones still on these mortal shores. During the pestilence Mrs. Martha M. Enright was claimed as a victim. Aunt Enright was a close intimate friend and neighbor to our family for a great many years. She was a lifelong member of our church, and was not only a lady of the material endowments, but also of remarkable spiritual attainments. She was well versed in the Scriptures, in the depths of experimental godliness, and in the distinctive doctrines, features and history of Methodism. She conversed well and fluently upon all topics, and was a universal favorite with all classes, and especially with her pastors. Among the victims of the fell destroyer was Rev. J. J. Harper, wife and several children. Bro. Harper was a most excellent man, dearly loving the church, and working for it with all his zeal and power. He was a kind friend, a true neighbor, a good soldier, a faithful pastor, a tender nurse to the sick, and altogether a man of most excellent character. His wife we have known ever since we knew any one, and it is enough to say that she was worthy of all the friendship ever bestowed upon her. Another one we remember was Cousin Mollie Wallace, a sweet-spirited, noble-hearted girl, who was snatched away in the beauty of her young life to the cold and silent grave. As we stand here and look backward to old Rocky Spring Church, school-house and neighborhood, to Beech Grove and to Willow Spring, we realize what the Scripture means when it says: "One generation passeth away, and another cometh." Our fathers have passed on in solemn procession to the quiet resting place on yonder quiet hill; our friends have gathered there, and we are waiting the summons to meet them in scenes beyond the grave. Dear friends of Rocky Spring neighborhood, are we not more strangers on earth than we would be if heaven were to suddenly burst in upon us, with all its beatific visions? May death not sever but strengthen the cords which bind us to the realities of another world. May the glory of old Rocky Spring Church come forth again as when the sun shineth in his strength! Love to old Rocky Spring.

Cross-Bearers.

We are told that it was a custom of the ancient Highlanders of Scotland, when they wanted to arouse the people for energetic action, for the furtherance of any great purpose, to send messengers throughout the land, each bearing a cross dipped in blood, and in all places where the cross was exhibited there the people immediately kindled a blazing fire.

The Mississippi Annual Conference, feeling the importance of arousing the people to an earnest, energetic action on the subject of religion, and of kindling blazing fires of Christianity in earnest, sent out scores of cross bearers throughout the length and breadth of our land—some to places where fires were already burning, shedding forth a bright light, and everything in proper order, and all they found to do was to add fuel to the already-kindled fires. Others were sent to places where the fires were almost extinguished, and a few coals and embers only left—no preparation for the reception of the cross-bearer, and great unwillingness on the part of the people to assist him in kindling up the fires of the Holy Ghost. In such places, and they are not few and far between, it would not be strange if the cross-bearer, thus situated, should be greatly discouraged and depressed, and especially so as he travels from place to place, holding up the blood-stained cross of Christ, to see no symptoms of a kindling fire or helping hand in fanning up the remaining, but yet almost expiring, sparks.

In such a work, what must the cross-bearer do? Must he go about complaining and preaching about the lukewarmness and backwardness of the people? No. Must he scold them for not attending church, and in not assisting in kindling blazing fires? No; for scolding would not like throwing water on fire. Must he complain of the appointing power, and say he ought to have been sent to a more favorable work? No; for it may be the very work that God in His providence designed for him to do.

What, then, must he do? He must place himself behind the blood-stained cross of Jesus Christ, take his stand firmly at its foot, preach Jesus Christ and Him crucified, preach encouraging sermons, hold prayer meetings, visit his flock, pray with the families, and instruct the children. By a diligent pursuance of this course, before the time to report to the next Annual Conference, a blazing fire shall be kindled in his whole work, and the hearts of his people be "filled unutterably full of glory and of God."

A Few More Facts.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of February 13 Bro. J. B. Anderson, of the Alabama Conference, gives us "a few facts on missionary appropriations."

After emphasizing what he has said, I wish to give a few more facts on missionary assessments. It is made the duty of the district steward to divide out the assessment made to the district among the several pastoral charges composing the district. In doing this the custom prevails to divide on the basis of the presiding elder's assessment. Now we suppose that this is regarded as a just distribution, or it would not be so generally practiced. But if the assessment for the presiding elder be a guide to the district stewards in assessing each pastoral charge, why should it not be a guide to the Conference Board of Missions in assessing the districts?

In a certain Conference "I wot of" there is a district that is assessed for missions $400 less than it pays its presiding elder; while there is another district assessed for missions $200 more than it pays its presiding elder.

By this act of injustice every pastor in that district will appear under the false charge of having failed to do his duty when he reads his report at the next Conference, for it will be almost impossible for any pastor in that district to collect his pro rata part of this large and unjust assessment. And should the district stewards of that district follow the example of the Conference board, and assess the non-represented charges more than their pro rata part, the pastors on those charges may expect the Bishop to ask some pointed questions when they read their reports, unless some one of those presiding elders has the courage to inform the Bishop of the facts in the case.

JUSTICE.

From the Work.

NATCHITOCHES, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: After an absence of nearly seven weeks, which seems to us nearly seven months, we are at our station, and at work again. The members of our church were expecting us, and had everything at the parsonage in order. On entering the parsonage we found some of the sisters there awaiting our arrival, a brilliant fire, cheerful faces; and a well arranged parsonage told us that no pains had been spared to make us comfortable and happy. On examining our home we found that everything had been put in order, from the kitchen via the dining room to the parlor, a careful survey had been made of every room, and all furnished in the very best style, such as tinware in the kitchen, crockery and cutlery, table cloths, napkins, etc., in the dining room, and sofa, parlor chairs, window shades, etc., in the parlor—these were furnished in addition to the already good supply on hand. Immediately after our arrival the ladies began to send us baskets containing substantials and luxuries. We have enough cakes on hand to do us two months. I have made diligent inquiry as to the conduct of our members during our long stay, and have found, as I expected, that there had been no violation of any rule of our Discipline. In fact, Mr. Editor, our members never have violated our rules since we have been stationed here; they are made out of the right kind of material. We have had one delightful prayer meeting, our members were out in full force, and all reconsecrated themselves to the work; there is a great work to be done here, and they realize it, and have put their shoulders to the wheel, and by the help of God we expect to see a year of continued revival.

This is my first church, my third year in the ministry, and all my members are new save one or two. I do not know how other churches prosper, or how much the members love their pastor, but it seems to me that I have not seen any church as devoted as ours.

Our new church is progressing rapidly. It bids fair to be a beautiful structure. It will cost us about $1,000. From present appearances we will have the house completed and ready for dedication on the first Sabbath in June. We are building strictly on a cash principle, and lack about $500 to finish the building. We have a full set of elegant furniture, chandeliers, communion service, etc. Pray for us that this new, this peculiar station, may prosper in the hands of the Lord.

THOS. J. HARRIS.

Note by the Editor.—This is a good report. If our boys were in that parsonage, how they would make the cakes fly!

WOLF RIVER MISSION, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR EDITOR: I was on my work early in January. I rode or traveled some every day during the very cold weather, January 3, 4, 5 and 6. I found it necessary to carry a small pole on my shoulder to break the ice in the small creeks and branches.

I have made two rounds on my work, and think that we have promise of a rich future harvest in this field. Some of the people have not had a Methodist preacher among them since the war, and I find some grown people, and they the children of Methodist parents, who never heard a Methodist preacher until I preached for them the present year.

I trust you will pray for this new field, for "it is white unto the harvest." Fraternally yours,

DAVID MERCHANT.

There is, I know not how, in the minds of men a certain presage, as if were of a future existence, and this takes the deepest root and is most discoverable in the greatest geniuses and most exalted souls.—Cicero.

Obituaries.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

EDWIN OSCAR LUM was born September 11, 1824, and died, at Rocky Springs, Mississippi, of yellow fever, October 21, 1878, aged fifty-four years, one month and seven days.

The earliest recollection of my childhood are so closely connected with him that I hardly know how or where to begin writing. About two years after his connection with our family by marriage, I spent a great deal of time at his house, and to this moment I can feel the hallowed influence of the morning and evening prayer at his altar—and these as regular as the morning and evening sun. He had a great fondness for children, and many were the little rounds of amusement and enjoyment which he afforded them. He was possessed, in an eminent degree, of that "meek and quiet spirit which, in the sight of the Lord, is of great price." During the last eleven and a half years of his life he and his family resided at my old home, with my widowed mother, affording great comfort and consolation in time of trouble. He was for over forty years a constant sufferer from a constitutional malady, but the Great Physician has at last taken his exile home, and given to him the healing waters of eternal life.

In the same letter which brought the sad news of Cousin Edwin Lum's death, came also the distressing story that his daughter, Miss. ANNE MILDRED FOSTER, had passed away after suffering for eleven days with the yellow fever. Cousin Alice was born September 30, 1859, and died November 3, 1878, aged nineteen years one month and five days.

From her childhood one word would completely describe her, and that is, Darkness. I often think that our old home was a heaven on earth, and surely no brighter ray of sunlight ever entered upon it than when the life of little Alice Mildred became a part of its joy. Alice was a gifted girl, not only in some of the finer accomplishments, humanly speaking, but also in the solid excellencies of social and domestic life. She was a member of the church, devotedly attached to her Saviour, and lived in constant hope of a better life. Upon her death-bed she prayed aloud, and on being anxiously questioned replied: "I feel like shouting." In a note written to her dear mother, shortly before she was taken ill, she expressed a strong reliance upon God. How could a child raised from her infancy under such influences, with such a father as hers, and with so delicate and amiable a disposition as she possessed, disbelieve the gospel and lean on the world?

RICHARD H. ADAMS.

AT the first Quarterly Conference for Lowndesboro Circuit, Prattville District, Alabama Conference, held at Lowndesboro, January 25, 1879, the following resolutions were offered and adopted, as expressive of the sense of this Conference concerning the death of Dr. H. V. Smith, a worthy member of this Conference:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God, in His wise Providence, to remove from our midst, and scenes of his labors and sorrows, our dearly beloved brother, Dr. H. V. Smith; therefore

Resolved, That in the death of Dr. Smith this Conference has lost an efficient Steward and wise counsellor, the community a generous and hospitable member, and the church an earnest, worthy and devoted member, in whose daily walk and conversation was evinced much of the power and beauty of the religion of the Lord Jesus.

Resolved, That while we do not fully understand nor see all that is intended in this stroke of Providence, yet we bow with submission and resignation to the will of our heavenly Father, knowing that "He doeth all things," and rejoicing in the blessed assurance left us that our loss is our dear brother's gain.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the family of our deceased brother, with our earnest prayers and warmest sympathies for them in their sad bereavement.

R. W. RUSSELL,
JAS. S. RENSHER.

MRS. PENELOPE A. DAWSON died at her residence, near Midway, East Feliciana parish, Louisiana, January 15, 1879. Her maiden name was Knight; she was born in Wilkinson county, Mississippi, April 7, 1811. She had lived a consistent member of the Methodist Church for more than thirty years. No one had anything against Sister Dawson, she was one of the most quiet, inoffensive, kind hearted, loveable persons to be met with in a life time. She loved the church of her choice, and took great pleasure in receiving and caring for the ministers. Her death, like her life, was peaceful and quiet, there was no demonstration of joy, yet a calm trust her Saviour gave the best assurance that all was well. She had a large family of daughters, two of whom are yet of tender years, and will most sadly miss the counsels and care of such a mother. Indeed all who knew her will feel bereft by her death, for her life, her busy hand and charitable heart produced good and ugly goods, and the memory of them, she being dead, will ever prove a source of pleasure and profit.

C. G. ANDREWS.

MRS. ELIZABETH L. BROWNING, wife of Col. W. W. Browning, was born July 9, 1811, and died at her residence in Chapel Hill, January 5, 1879. She was the daughter of Isaac and Ann Gilmer, connected with the noted family of Gilmers of Georgia. Her father moved to and settled in the Choctaw nation immediately upon the removal of the Indians, living in Lowndes county, Miss. On September 27, 1836 she was happily married to Col. W. W. Browning, which union proved to be long and prosperous. She had been reared in the midst of wealth, yet she, with her husband, possessed remarkable business talents and habits. As the country was new, fresh and rich, they rapidly increased their substance.

She was a woman of strong native intellect, as well as opportunity of culture. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church from her girlhood. Worldly business, time, place or circumstances never seemed to interfere with her devotion to God and His Church. She and her husband were large-hearted, and did everything upon a large scale. Upon the camp-ground they were always present, in the region where they lived. Their tent was commodious and provisions ample, and none were too rich or too poor to share in their habitations. The sick and suffering were always the subjects of her tender solicitude and care. Her home was the center of social enjoyment, where thousands have been hospitably entertained. The church, with her vital interests was never forgotten, financial, educational and religious interests shared in her attention. She lived to watch and to do something for God and humanity. In her home she was the center of attraction, of dignity, of respect, and of love. Presiding over a family trained by her skill, and an honor to her name. She attended the session of our last Conference, showing much interest in its proceedings. She was taken very ill immediately afterward, and lingered until Sabbath evening of January 5th. As the sun was passing behind the western hills, her sun of life passed peacefully and quietly away. During all her illness she was calm and confiding in God. No darkness, no doubts, no fears, at times a little impatient to enter her rest. Oh! upon whom will the mantle of Sister Browning fall, and who will take her place in the church of God.

J. MATTHEWS.

GEORGE W. REYNOLDS died, near Downsville, Union parish, La., January 21, 1879, aged seventy-four years. By birth he was a native of the State of Georgia. A portion of his life was spent in Alabama, where, in 1841, he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was a hard-working, energetic man, and before the late unhappy war had acquired a handsome property, which was mostly swept away. He lost no time in vain regrets, but bravely looked ahead and relied upon the blessing of God and his own strong arm. In this way he succeeded in making plenty for himself and family. In all the business transactions of life he was an honest, straightforward sort of man. He knew exactly how to attend to his own business and let other people's alone. In religion he was not demonstrative, but nobly filled his place at church, and with his means helped to support the gospel. In his death he was resigned, and said to his children and friends: "I leave the world with a clear conscience." A useful and good man has been called to his reward.

R. T. PARSON.

LIZZIE S. COLLINS, wife of John H. McCue, Esq., of Mayersville, Issaquena county, Miss., and daughter of William and Mary Collins, was born at Lake Providence, La., December 21, 1854, and died, of pneumonia, at her home in Mayersville, February 6, 1879.

The subject of this notice was early dedicated to God by a pious mother, to holy baptism, and reared from infancy in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. She was formally admitted into the church, when quite a child, by Rev. R. J. Harp, at Lake Providence, La. She was the model of every womanly grace and virtue. The light of every circle in which she moved, the comfort and joy of an aged mother's heart for years past, being the youngest surviving child. She was married April 2, 1878, to Mr. John H. McCue. I saw her then—and a happy throng in bridal robes of spotless white, and performed the solemn rites of marriage. In less than twelve months I stood beside her bier, saw her cold in death, robed in the same beautiful virtue to meet the Bridegroom in heaven. She had given birth to a sweet little boy, had her babe baptized, and gave him the name of his father. The immediate cause of her death was pneumonia. She lingered for two weeks, when death came and called her to spend an eternal Sabbath in heaven. For two or three months before her death she had the impression that her days on earth were few, and she gave herself with special earnestness to the work of preparation. As her pastor, I had frequent interviews and some precious seasons of prayer with her. She was fully assured of her acceptance with God, and died as an infant falling asleep in the arms of Jesus. It is needless to repeat the many expressions of joyful hope in Christ which she gave in her last moments. "Blessed Jesus," "Precious Saviour" were among her very last utterances.

MARY FORD, formerly BUTTRILL, was born in the State of North Carolina, May 8, 1804; emigrated to Georgia when about six years of age, and settled in Hall county; was married to Noah Ford, in that State, on the fourth of July, 1824, and died on the eighth of May, in Rockwall county, Texas, lacking but one day of completing her seventy-fourth year, full of years and of faith.

She was made a child of God in conversion through faith in the early part of her married life, and became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, now South, and lived and died a faithful member of the same. Before she was widowed and deprived of her substance by the war, her house was a home for the preachers and a shelter for the weary and distressed. Her husband preceded her to the better land by twenty-four years. She was a kind and faithful mother, a frugal housewife, a hospitable neighbor, and a consistent, quiet Christian. For some thirty or thirty-five years she had been troubled with heart disease; but a strong constitution and care preserved her life to a ripe old age. It ended in paralysis, which ended her life in a quiet sleep as of a sleeping child. She was the mother of eight children—six girls and two boys—of whom only two survive, all the rest of the family having preceded her to the grave.

BENJAMIN P. PORTIS, son of Ira and Mary Marsh Portis, was born September 30, 1822, in Clark county, Ala., and died at his residence in South-Sumter, Ala., December 17, 1878.

Mr. Portis graduated in Miami College, Ohio. He continued his mental culture after graduation; was to the latest period of his life an ardent admirer of all that was pure, and good, and true; and a devoted student of the sublime and beautiful. He was intelligent, honest and faithful in the discharge of his duties in all the different relations of life.

These qualifications of head and of heart were the cause of his being sought for and elected to the Legislature of Alabama, as representative of Sumter county, in 1853; and again in 1878. He was married November 3, 1846, to Susan Jane Lucas. They were both consistent and efficient members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He continued to live a quiet, peaceful and happy life in the circle of his family and friends up to the time of the death of his wife, December 16, 1876.

This sad event cast so dark a shadow upon his heart that all earthly sunshine was insufficient to dispel the dark cloud of sorrow; and no wonder, for in the death of Mrs. Portis he lost a companion, the children a mother, who in the discharge of every duty, domestic and religious, was equaled by few, excelled by none. So faithful was she in the discharge of her religious duties that she read her Bible every night, and knelt at a throne of grace. As she lived, so she died, consecrated to God in prayer for herself, her family, her friends, and the cause of Christ. This pious example was ever afterward remembered and followed by her devoted husband. The entire energies of his soul were henceforth directed to a preparation for eternity.

Seldom has death thrown his mysterious mantle upon one so noble, unselfish and true. Pure in thought and deed, he was necessarily a kind and affectionate husband, a loving and indulgent parent, ever watchful of the immortal interest of his children. His kindness of heart and geniality of mind were not alone reserved for the family circle, nor circumscribed by an extensive circle of friendship, for all who approached him for counsel or support were sure to feel the influences of a mind matured in all the elements of true nobility.

It was my good fortune to have known the lamented deceased for thirty long years, and I but reflect the true and heartfelt sympathy of all his acquaintances when I say he was a Christian gentleman. Generous, true, noble and intelligent, possessed of all the attributes of manhood, without the least manifestation of selfishness. The name of Benjamin P. Portis will ever be intimately associated throughout South-Sumter with all that is truly refined and ennobling. His sufferings were intense.

He has left behind him two sons and three daughters, and may God, in His divine goodness and mercy, strengthen them with that fullness of grace which shall be sufficient, and in the end may they present an unbroken family circle around his throne.

JAMES E. KNOTT.

MRS MARTHA SIMPSON died, at the residence of her son, Frank Simpson, in Washington county, Ala. She was the daughter of William and Lucy Slater; was born in Georgia, June 10, 1807; was married to Philip Simpson at the age of sixteen, near St. Stephen's, Washington county, Ala., and died February 4, 1879, aged seventy-one years, seven months, three weeks and three days. She leaves a family of seven children, of which five are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. She joined the same church at the age of fifteen, and has ever since lived a devoted life to Christianity, and beloved by all who knew her. She was a sufferer for twelve months before her death, at times suffered a great deal, but bore it with patience and Christian fortitude, never complaining. She expressed herself to the writer, a short time before her death, that she was perfectly satisfied that there was a happy home awaiting her where there was no more suffering, and prayed that she might die easy. On the night of her death, while sitting by the fire with the family, she had a slight attack of coughing, and, as she retired for the night, remarked that she thought she would die before morning. She laid down and went quietly to sleep, and in a short time she was heard to breathe a little hurriedly. Her daughter went to her bed and found that her soul had taken its heavenly flight. Her prayer had been answered. She fell asleep in Jesus without a struggle.

EDMUND MONROE CHAPMAN was born in Monroe county, Ga., March 2, 1812, and died at his home in Natchitoches parish, La., November 3, 1878.

Bro. Chapman professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when quite young, while yet in Georgia, and was a member of our church at Pleasant Hill when he died. It is said, by all who knew him in his youthful days, that "Ed." was ever a good boy, kind and obedient to his parents, and honored his father and mother in the days of his youth. He was a kind, loving husband, and an affectionate father. Bro. Chapman was in the prime of life, and had fair to live to a good old age, but God's ways are past finding out. He received a hurt while working at a saw mill, from which he suffered great bodily pain. Black jaundice soon followed, and after a few days' suffering from this terrible disease, he fell asleep, we trust, in Jesus. He was very patient during his sickness, and seemed perfectly resigned to the will of God. His father and others talked to him about his future prospects. Just a short time before he died, and in answer to their questions, he expressed himself as being prepared for the change. Using his own words: "He loved God, and knew that God loved him." The only regret expressed by him was that of leaving his dear wife and darling daughter, Lula."

Universal sympathy is expressed for the parents; their youngest son, Henry, having died a few weeks before, away from home and friends.

IN THE SEA.

The salt wind blows upon my cheek,
As it blew a year ago,
When twenty boats were crushed among
The rocks of Norman's Woe.
'Twas dark then; 'tis light now,
And the gulls are leaning low.

In dreams I pull the seaweed o'er,
And find a face not his,
And hope another tide will be
More pitying than this.
The wind forms; the tide turns;
They take what hope there is.

My life goes on as mine would go,
With all its sweetness spilled;
My God! why should one heart of two
Beat on, when one is stilled?
Through heart-wreck or home wreck,
Thy happy sparrows build.

Though boats go down, men build anew,
Whatever winds may blow;
If blight be in the wheat one year,
We trust again and sow,
Though grief comes, and changes
The sunshine into snow.

Some have their dead, where, sweet and soon
The summers bloom and go.
The sea withholds my dead. I walk,
The bar, when tides are low,
And wonder the grave grass
Can have the heart to grow.

The Mennonites of the Virginia Valley.

BY REV. W. T. PRICE.

By way of premise, the Mennonites are the followers of Menno Simon, a converted monk, and a contemporary of Luther. As early as 1692 there were some Mennonites in the province of Pennsylvania, who had gone there from New York. They resided in and around Germantown and Frankfort, and their numbers were increased by immigrants from New York and Europe. In spreading abroad in different directions settlements were formed in the valley of Virginia. These people adopt the antique garb of the Quakers, and aim at great simplicity in their manners. In the ordinary exchange of social civilities they never say Mr. or Mrs., but simply John or Jane, believing that the use of Mr. or Mrs is prohibited by such a scriptural precept as "Call no man master." Among the very devout it is not the habit to say "yes, sir," or "no, sir," but simply yes or no, in order to obey the sacred injunction: "Let your communication be yea, yea, and nay, nay."

By occupation these people are mostly small farmers and mechanics. They generally occupy the cheaper lands, hence there is not the general diffusion of wealth among them that is so characteristic of the Dunkards. Being opposed to military service, many of the young men during the late war refuged to Pennsylvania and Ohio to avoid conscription. It is believed that most of these would suffer themselves to be slain on the field before they would use firearms in actual battle.

In observing the Lord's Supper the full meal is discarded as a relic of pagan idolatry. The more devout wash their feet, but the sentiment against this rite has become so decided that of late years it is left to the option of the communicant whether feet should be washed.

Many of the younger members now omit it, while among the older people there are those who are particular to observe it, and feelingly regret the tendency of the times to forsake the old ways and go after vanities.

The Mennonites vie with the Dunkards in disapproving a paid ministry. Nothing seems to call forth their righteous indignation so much as the abomination of "a bookish hireling." When the Confederate authorities found it was inexpedient to conscript these people and the Dunkards, a law was formed exempting the members of both churches from military duty, in consideration of a specified sum of money. This discrimination in their favor made these churches very popular, and their membership increased with almost oriental rapidity. To counteract this, an amendment was adopted limiting the exemption to those only who had been members previous to a specified date; thereupon a very extensive exodus beyond the Confederate lines occurred. These Mennonites have their symbols, including an elaborate Confession of Faith and a Church Directory. The "Book of Martyrs" and the writings of Menno Simon are generally cherished and prized next to the Scriptures.

The Mennonite ministers are chosen by lot, and then formally ordained by laying on of hands and prayer. They conscientiously abstain from special preparation for any given service, believing that, as God has called them into the ministry of His word, it will be given them what to speak in His name when the time comes. This is justified by reference to these words: "Take no thought, therefore, what ye shall say," etc. The method of choosing ministers may be understood from what recently occurred in Rockingham county, Va. Two ministers having died, it was believed to be God's will their places should be filled soon as possible. At the call of the Bishop the entire congregation met for the purpose of proposing suitable names. The meeting was opened with prayer, and the first of Acts was read and commented upon. Then followed a season of silence, during which time each person was counselled to heed the promptings of the Spirit, and to announce whatever name any one might feel constrained to regard as a person fit to minister in holy things. Sixteen brethren were nominated, as was believed, by the suggestion of the Spirit. A week was allowed the nominees to reflect upon the question of duty, during which time their minds were to be settled as to whether they would allow their names to be put into the lot on the following Sabbath. It so happened that all consented to go into the lot when the congregation met again. At the request of the president, sixteen copies of the New Testament, uniform in size and binding, were counted out and placed in the hands of two ministers, who retired with them into the vestry. A slip of paper was put into two of the volumes. The books were laid upon a table promiscuously, and left there while these two ministers should return to their places in the church. The president directed two other ministers to go and bring the books in. These went at once into the vestry, and having shuffled, so to speak, the copies of the New Testament, they carried them into the church, and set them up in a row upon the long table in front of the stand. The sixteen books being duly arranged, and the candidates placed near them, prayer was offered that the Head of the Church would show which two of these sixteen brethren, who had been duly separated by the guidance of the Spirit, should be called into the ministry of His word and power. Prayer ended, each of the candidates arose in order and took down a book. And when all had taken a book, the next thing was to see who had the lot. While the books are being examined, the interest and suspense are almost painful to witness. The brethren who find the lot in their books are sometimes very much overcome by an overpowering sense of the solemn duties laid upon them. Others again seem greatly pleased with the call to preach. The chosen ones are ordained on the spot, and from that moment they are regarded as the authorized messengers of Christ, to witness for Him in the presence of the people.

These are esteemed as God-made preachers, and they can draw the largest audiences that regularly assemble for worship in this part of the valley. The most distinguished "man-made minister," so called, would be in danger of finding himself totally eclipsed were he to preach the same day and hour anywhere in reach of one of these preachers, who has had the work under consideration for only two weeks, and had taken no thought in the meanwhile what to speak.

Such ministers merely profess to give to the people as God may see fit to give to them. Mennonites never criticise their preachers. The Head of the Church is held responsible for the preaching, and your correspondent feels like saying that in this way Jesus is held responsible for a great deal of very weak preaching.—Christian at Work.

How the Chinese Government Cares for the Children of the Poor.

In order to save these innocent victims from the death to which the extreme poverty of their parents would almost inevitably devote them, the Chinese government has looked with favor upon their being "exposed," and has made this course as easy as possible, by divesting it of every feature which might make it ignominious in the sight of the public; furnishing gratuitously abundant aid in such cases, and giving it the protection of the strictest surveillance under the guardian care of the mandarins.

At Pekin, every day at early dawn, five wagons, each drawn by an ox, pass through the five sections into which the city is divided (that is to say the northern, the southern, the eastern, the western and the central sections; for so it is divided.) Notice of the time when these wagons will pass is given by certain signals, and all who have children, living or dead, to entrust to them, give them over to be carried to the Yu-in tang; that is, to that charitable institution, in which are physicians, matrons and nurses, which the sovereign maintains at the expense of the State; where there are, besides mandarins to watch over its decency and good order, and where the whole management is submitted directly to the judges of the high tribunals which we call in Chinese Li-pou, which may be rendered by "the tribunal having the oversight of the rites, morals and customs of the people," (le tribunal inspecteur des rites, des mœurs et des usages de la nation.) Children who are sick are placed under the care of nurses; and the dead are deposited in a species of crypt, where they are covered with quick-lime, in order that the flesh may be speedily consumed.

Once each year, in spring, commissioners appointed by the Li-pou, and chosen from among the mandarins composing this tribunal, repair with much ceremony to the Yu-in tang, and there preside over the erection of a funeral-pile on which the remains of these little bodies are burned to ashes.

So long as the funeral-pile is burning a company of bonzes (priests) surrounds it, repeating prayers, which they address to the spirits of the earth and to the genii presiding over births, beseeching them to show more favor to these little ones in that future time when they shall re-appear under a new form.

When the prayers are ended, and the funeral-pile entirely consumed, leaving only ashes, the mandarin commissioners cause every one to withdraw, and they themselves retire, to return the following day and preside over the ceremony of the removal of these ashes. This ceremony takes place with the same pomp as that of the preceding day. They collect the cold ashes carefully, place them in a sack, and depart to scatter them on the surface of a river or a neighboring stream. The priests again offer prayers, in which they entreat the spirits of the waters, and those which preside over generation, to cause that these ashes, quickly dissolved, should exhale in vapor and not remain long without entering again into the formation of some other beings like those whose remains they are, but so fortunate as to live longer than they did.

The people are induced to believe that the reason why these ashes are not buried, instead of being strewn upon the water as is the custom, is because the ashes, scattered on the river, being more quickly dissolved than they would be in the ground, are sooner in a condition to be restored to their former state by evaporating with the water; but the true reason is that before the establishment of this ceremony the government had discovered that these ashes were put to an improper use in magical performances, or in chemical processes, in order that the composition of certain substances might be thereby perfected. It is especially claimed that these ashes, mixed with the ingredients from which porcelain is made, render it firmer, more translucent, and much more beautiful than it would be without them. If this be the actual effect, which the presence of the phosphate of bone renders quite probable, it would not be impossible to obtain it from the ashes of the bones of young animals.

Once each month the same deputies of the Li-pou make their regular visit of inspection. They inform themselves as to the number of children, and substitute fresh nurses where needed, or in place of those who have reached the limit of their engagement, which never extends beyond three years. In short, they see for themselves whether everything is in order, and correct abuses if any have crept in.

This institution is open at all times to those who, having no children of their own, wish to meet this want by adopting from among the wards of this hospital a child whom no one can claim, and whose age is such as to lead them to hope for as warm a love as they would receive from an own child. The extreme desire of the Chinese to leave some one behind them who will mourn for them at their death, and pay to their memorial-tablets all those honors which filial piety in China lavishes upon the representation of their ancestors, is the reason why so very few are found a part, at least, of whose happiness does not consist in having male children.—Sunday Afternoon.

How much better were it that thou shouldst even lose something for thyself and win others thereby, than thou shouldst remain on thy height, and let thy brother perish! Like the servant who hid his Lord's talent, though thou fastest, sleepest on the earth, strewest thyself with ashes and ever mournest, if thou art of no use to others, thou dost nothing great.—Chrysostom.

Hope is the ruddy morning rays of joy, recollection is the golden tinge; but the latter is wont to sink amid the dews and dusky shades of twilight, and the bright blue day which the former promises breaks indeed, but in another world and with another sun.—Bonar.

Religious Intelligence.

—The year 1880 will be celebrated by the Church of England Sunday-school Institutes as the centenary of the establishment of Sunday-schools.

—The Church of the Epiphany at Washington is built of white stone, at a cost of about $200,000. Of this amount, $140,000 has been raised, nearly half of which is given by Mr. Corcoran, who is a member of the parish.

—The Scottish churches are beginning to take account for the repeal of the regulations against the marriage of a man with his deceased wife's sister. There is no civil law in Scotland, as there is in England, forbidding such marriage, but their legality is doubtful, and they are a bar to membership in the Free and United Presbyterian Churches.

—Evangelization in Spain is now carried on by the Spanish society of that name at six central stations, viz: Seville, Granada, Cadiz, Huelva, Cordova and Madrid. These stations are supplied by resident missionaries, besides whom there are traveling missionaries to outlying districts. Several nuclei of churches have already been formed.

—The Spanish minister of public worship tells the cortes that the government view of the clause in the constitution on religious liberty permits liberty within the walls of churches and cemeteries only, and bills will be presented for its sanction for the suppression of manifestations or propaganda in the streets, and of public teachings in schools, universities, or books of doctrines contrary to the state religion.

—King Mtesa of Uganda has, through the Church Missionary Society, expressed a desire to send ambassadors to England; whereon Lord Salisbury has replied "that the ambassadors, on their arrival, will be received with the courtesy and attention due to the representatives of a king who has shown himself desirous of entering into friendly relations with the country, and who has received with kindness and afforded his powerful protection to British subjects who have visited his kingdom."

—The trustees of Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., have formally accepted the proceeds of a legacy left to the institution by Amos B. Merrill, of Boston. Mr. Merrill died some years ago, owning a large property in Western lands, and the conditions of his will were that when $200,000 should be collected for the use of his wife during life, certain legacies should be paid out of the residue. The amount devised to the Wilbraham institution was $5,000, and the Methodist Episcopal Church in Wallingford received a like amount.

—The Princess Alice devoted the greater part of the allowance made to her by the British nation at the time of her marriage to various works of benevolence. One of these was the establishment of the Alice Hospital at Darmstadt, with a training-school for nurses attached, and another an asylum for idiots; and there was also, an orphan relief association, industrial schools for women, and other objects which her death leaves unprovided for. It is proposed by her subjects to raise a fund for the perpetual endowment of the charities which she created.

—The Quebec News gives the names of sixteen clergymen of different Protestant bodies in this country and abroad who have been ordained in the Episcopal Church during the last few months. To this the Church Work adds the names of about fifty-five others, besides ten Roman Catholic priests. To this the Dominion Churchman adds several more names, and the Standard of the Cross adds two that are announced in its last issue, one in Conn., and another in Ohio. This exodus has been going on for so many years that we have thought that clerical education ought not to be a great burden in the Episcopal Church.

—The latest news from the Nyanza Mission of the Church Missionary Society is of an unfavorable tenor. In consequence, it is supposed, of Egyptian influences, King Mtesa's friendship for Mr. Wilson coo'ed, and he was induced to order the missionary's residence to be removed further from the palace. About the same time the king received intelligence of the murder of O'Neil and Smith at Ukerewe, and Mr. Wilson was constrained to ask leave to quit Uganda, which he did, crossing to Speke's Bay and making his way to Unanyembe.

—The Record of the Free Church of Scotland for Augusta gives an interesting review of the missions of that great church. These missions found in India, Africa, the new Hebrides and Syria. In all there are 45 ordained missionaries, of whom nine are natives, and 12 preachers and missionary teachers and doctors. Of the ordained missionaries 27 are in India and 15 in Africa. Two ordained missionaries and three missionary teachers were sent out the past year. The Indian missions have been somewhat interfered with by the great famine. The Rev. Narayan Sheshardi formed two orphanages in Western India, which have 136 children. Evangelization, street-preaching, household visitation, the circulation of religious literature, and itinerary preaching have been faithfully attended to, and the important work of Christian education has not been neglected. In connection with Mr. Sheshardi's mission, 778 villages were visited and preached in. The South African missions have suffered severely by the Kaffir war. In Central Africa cheering progress has been made at Livingstonia. In the new Hebrides the Free Church has two of the nine missionaries now in these Islands. The third one, the Rev. John Inglis, is now in Scotland, superintending the printing of a version of the Scriptures in the language of Aneityum. In Mount Lebanon, Syria, the church has one missionary, and several schools, containing a thousand children.

—The annual report of the London Association in aid of the Moravian Missions, gives many interesting details of their work. We italicize in the following summary two striking statements:

The missions at present consist of 95 stations, 303 European missionaries, 29 native ministers, 1,518 native assistants, 300 schoolmasters and mistresses, 68,476 members of the church gathered from the heathen, about half being British subjects; 22,617 communicants, 16,484 children in day-schools, and 12,983 in Sunday-schools, besides schools and stations from which there are no returns. Though many fall a sacrifice to the climate, there never yet has been a lack of laborers well adapted to the work; indeed, so great is the missionary spirit fostered out on this church that about one in forty five of its adult members becomes a missionary to the heathen. In Labrador, where the cold is not unfrequently from 50° to 60° below the freezing point, the ship Harmony carries to the missionaries' provisions from this country, which have uniformly been conveyed in safety for one hundred eight successive years. The entire mission funds do not usually exceed £48,000 per annum and above £7,000 is required for the support of retired missionaries, and the widows and orphans of those who have given their lives to the work. Last year, however, the total receipts were £16,785 10s 2d.

—The Rev. Mr. Walker's induction as vicar of the troublesome parish of St James, Hatcham, has been a not altogether pleasant one. There is a row at the church regularly every Sunday, and the police are scarcely restrained from acts of violence by the police. Mr. Walker has written to his bishop an account of a recent Sunday's battle:

"As soon as the door had been opened, Mr Sanders, attended by two other persons, rushed by me, preceding me into the church. Turning round as he went, he said, 'I see those things are there. I shall go and remove them.' Without waiting for this remonstrance I attempted to make, he hurried into the chancel, and, assisted by two other persons, took the cross and candlesticks off the ledge on the east wall and carried them into the vestry. I waited in the middle aisle till his return, and informed him that I regarded his action as a defiance of my authority, a gross interference with my liberty, and an outrage upon the whole church; and consequently, I should, in the face of such an insult, refuse to continue service, and ordered the church to be closed.

"Before afternoon service the legal ornaments were restored by my order to the ledge; and in my presence Mr. Sanders again removed them, after I had solemnly protested against this illegal action. I then left the church. After I had gone away some of the mob, in the presence of Mr. Sanders, broke into the Sunday-school and maltreated the teachers. I enclose a copy of a handbill which has been circulated during the past week in the parish, with the object, as it appears to me, of exciting a riot. I am certain that a riot was intended, from information received from the police; also from the statement of the churchwarden, who said he could not control the mob. I was, therefore, justified in closing the church."

He declares, in conclusion, that the conduct of a portion of the parishioners has been such as "makes the blood of just people boil."

Our Young People.

THE LOVES OF THE OWLS.

BY MRS. E. T. CORBETT.

They sat on a branch together,
Softly the night wind blew—
It scarcely ruffled a feather,
Said he, "My love, be true"
"To whom? to whom?"
Miss Owlet whispered, "To-whoo?"

The silver moon came peeping,
Which made the lovers blink,
You might have thought them sleeping—
He said with ardent wink:
"To-whoo! to-whoo!"
And Miss Owlet smiled I think.

Then contentedly beside her
An hour or more he sat,
Till he flew off to provide her
With a delicate baby rat—
"To-whoo! to-whoo!
Make your supper, dear of that."

So she blinked at him most sweetly
(For she could n't blush, you know)
And he pressed her claw discreetly,
Which means: "I love you so"
"To-whoo! to-whoo!"
Said the pair then soft and low.

Note by the Editor.—Thanks to our active and useful little friend. May Miss Irene have many imitators. The young people alone could double our subscription list if they would all do their best. The money order for the two subscribers was duly received.

Another Answer to the Biblical Puzzle.

A little girl whose name was Ruth (Ruth iv, 13-22) and who was twelve years old (Mark v, 42) was to celebrate her birthday on the seventeenth of July (Gen. viii, 4.) In the morning, when she awoke, she found several birthday gifts waiting for her. Her father's present was a silver cup (Gen. xliv, 2.) Her mother gave her a gold chain (Gen. xli, 42.) Her aunt, who lived in Philadelphia (Rev. iii, 7,) sent her a book (Job, xxxi, 35,) and her brother sent her a little pet lamb (Ex. xxix, 38.) She was very happy with her gifts, though she wished somebody had given her a pair of ear-rings (Ex. xxxii, 3.) In the afternoon two of her little friends came to see her. The name of one was Hannah (I Sam. i, 20) and the name of the other was Mary. (Luke x, 39.) Their present was a basket (Mal. xv, 37) filled with grapes (Num. xiii, 23.) After playing in the house a while they went out and walked (Rev. xxi, 24.) They went into a garden (Gen. ii, 8,) and played under the shade of an oak (Josh. xxiv, 26.) After they had played till they felt thirsty (Judges iv, 19) they came in and sat down to supper (John xii, 2.) There was upon the table some bread (Eccle. ii, 7) and cakes, also butter and milk (Gen. xviii, 6, 7, 8,) and for desert they had fruits, nuts and almonds (Gen. xliii, 11,) and raisins and figs (I Sam. xxv, 18.) After supper they went home.

Water.

Here is something another Professor wrote twelve years ago in Boston: I don't believe you've ever seen it. Doesn't it seem to you as though your Professor is pretty generous to give other Professors a chance now and then?

Prof.—Well, this is a storm. When I gave out the subject water at our last meeting, I did not anticipate the pleasure of coming to see you with a wet jacket. But I see you have a good warm fire, so I shall soon be comfortable.

Henry.—I hope you will tell us about the clouds and rain to-night. It is a subject closely connected with water.

Prof.—We shall not reach that at present. To-night we have another theme. And now which of you can tell me of what water is composed?

George.—I have heard that it was composed of a combination of gases, but do not know the names of them.

Prof.—Water is a combination of eight parts of oxygen and one of hydrogen, by weight, of two parts of hydrogen and one of oxygen, by measure. By a series of experiments, which have been made by scientific men, it is known that water can be decomposed, that is, the two gases can be separated. If two thin wires, connected with the poles of a galvanic battery, be so placed that one end of each shall enter a glass vessel, a portion of water contained therein will be decomposed, and the gaseous product will be collected in tubes, fixed immediately over the point of each wire. I do not suppose that you can understand fully this matter now, yet it will be well to fix it in your memory.

Flora.—Pray, Mr. Professor, how can air exist in the water? You told us at the last evening, when we were talking about the atmosphere, that there was air in the water, and then, a short time after, you said air was lighter than water, and that it rose in bubbles to the top of the water.

Prof.—A very proper question. It is now rendered very certain that water is composed of very small particles, nearly or quite round in form, and that the spaces between are filled with air just like a teacupful of fine shot or mustard-seed, only infinitely smaller. These particles cannot be seen, they are so small, and the air in water, when it rises in any considerable quantity, displaces them. Liquids when left to themselves, naturally form into the globular shape. Shot are made by pouring melted lead through a sieve, at the top of some high building. As soon as the drops are left to themselves they acquire the proper shape, and before reaching the ground they cool and become hard. Drops of rain, when falling, are round. Hail stones are rough when they reach the ground. Now can any one tell me why they are not round like shot, for they are made in the same way substantially?

George.—Perhaps it is the wind; for I have noticed that high winds generally accompany hail-stones.

Prof.—You are doubtless correct. There seems to be some dispute about the precise way in which hail-stones are formed. It is, however, true that they are frozen drops of rain. There are strong reasons for believing that electricity, that subtle fluid which pervades all creation, has some connection with the formation of hail. Another theory is that the hail-stones, at first, are no larger than the smallest drops of rain, and that in falling through a cloud other drops are attached to them, and become frozen; thus causing them to grow larger and larger, until they reach the ground.

Flora.—How large hail-stones ever fall?

Prof.—It would be impossible to say, as there are frequently hail-storms in mountainous countries which are uninhabited. I have seen them of considerable size myself. I sat under the shelter of a huge rock, high on the White Mountains, many years ago, with a friend during a very severe hail-storm. It was in June, and one of the hottest days of the season. The storm lasted but a very few minutes, not more than five, yet in that short period a great quantity of hail fell. I could have easily picked up a bushel of hail stones as large as butter nuts. Hail-storms are very common in the south of France, and on the Pyrenee Mountains. The hail-stones which fall there are frequently as large as a hen's egg; and there is no reason to doubt that they have fallen twice that size. But I think we are wandering from our subject somewhat.

I have told you that water can be decomposed, and that the two gases, of which it is formed, weighed and measured.

Helen Williams.—What if the two gases be put together again?

Prof.—If the two gases are put together again and inflamed, they became water as before. But they must be in the exact proportions I have named. If we take three parts of hydrogen to one of oxygen, and explode them, one part of the hydrogen will remain uncombined. Oxygen and hydrogen, when mixed in the right proportions to form water, are very explosive, and it is unsafe to experiment with them, except in very small quantities.

Water freezes at thirty-two degrees above zero. Fresh water congeals much quicker than sea-water.

Henry.—I once heard an old sailor say that the ocean, in some places, had no bottom. Don't you suppose that he knew better?

Prof.—I cannot tell. A single moment's reflection would convince any person, not a complete idiot, that the ocean must have a bottom. The ocean is so deep in some places that no bottom has ever been found by sounding, and perhaps this was what the sailor meant. There are various obstacles to prevent sounding to a great depth. One reason is the motion of the ship tends to curve the line, so that the sinking of the lead is impeded. Scoresby sounded the Greenland Ocean to the depth of seven thousand two hundred feet, over a mile and a quarter, without finding any bottom. Others have sent the lead still deeper; and it is at least probable that the ocean is somewhat deeper, in some places, than the height of the highest mountain, or over five miles. Whether any unknown fishes or sea-monsters lie at this great depth, we cannot tell.

Flora.—For my part, I do not understand how fishes separate the air from the water when they breathe.

Prof.—God has provided them with apparatus, perfect and complete. The water is thrown off through the gills. If you were to hold a fish's gills, so that it could not open them, the creature would soon die.

George.—Several years ago I heard a person say that it would not kill fishes to freeze them. I suppose he must have been mistaken.

Prof.—No; he was without doubt correct. Fishes are cold-blooded, and in that respect differ from all other animals. I have never seen the experiment tried, yet there is abundant evidence to prove that not only fishes, but frogs, snails and lizards, after being frozen hard, solid as a stone, are capable of being reanimated. Sir John Franklin, the enterprising navigator, recently in the northern seas, and about whose safety so much interest has been manifested, both in this country and Europe, while at Fort Chipewyan, in March, 1820, makes the following notes:

"'It may be worthy of notice here, that the fish frozen as soon as they were taken out of the nets, and in a short time became solid masses of ice. Of course they exhibited no signs of life. If, however, in this completely frozen state they were thawed before the fire, they recovered their animation. This was particularly the case with the carp, and we had occasion to observe it repeatedly, as Dr. Richardson occupied himself in examining the structure of the different species of fish and was always, in the winter, obliged to thaw them before he could cut them. We have seen a carp recover so far as to leap about with great vigor, after it had been frozen for thirty-six hours.'"—Christian Union.

Training for the Life to Come.

It gives dignity and importance to the most insignificant things in our experience if we habitually look upon them as a part of our education for the future world. There are a thousand little things, important for the present welfare, that we do not regard as having any bearing upon the endless hereafter. The child is taught industry, economy and thrift, because these elements of character are the conditions of success in this world. He is given a practical education, is taught such branches as have an immediate application in his daily work. He learns a trade that he may win his bread, and provide for his temporal comfort. Thus a great part of the training of youth has reference mainly to the preparations for the life that now is.

The toil of men in the field of active pursuits is incited, first of all, by the great argument of necessity. Food and raiment, and an enjoyable home, can only be secured by the drudgery of daily labor. Much of it is spent in menial services, or in attention to details which in themselves have no interest or significance whatever. The farmer plods wearily after the plow. It is the same dull round of sowing and reaping, and the effort to extort from the soil that which is yielded with reluctance to his persevering industry. The mechanic shoves the plane and drives nails, he lays brick and plasters walls, he builds houses and repairs them. The thrifty housewife is busy all the day with the affairs of kitchen, laundry, and the sweeping, dusting, and mending and making. Woman's work is never done, and much of it is made up of items both petty and irksome. Clerks, sewing women, agents in all sorts of business, find nothing in their tasks beyond the money they command. It is very much the same with the merchant who is engrossed with the management of heavy operations, and with lawyers and doctors who spend their lives in ministering to their clients and patients.

What a world of care, anxiety and weariness is represented by these manifold aspects of human activity and toil! And then we are to consider in this connection the failures, the poverty, the sore travail, the sharp pain of body, the heartaches that are incidental to almost every condition. Surely all must have large reference to our eternal future. They must be for our learning not with sole nor with chief regard to this world. There must be something in these petty and grovelling affairs which necessarily occupy the most of our time that tells upon a nobler future. The earthly ends are ennobled by the love and sacrifice and patience that are in them. But these ends are only shadows of something higher. The discipline of the boy which fits him for the work of this life is also fitting him for some grander arena, and that which prepares him for his work here only introduces him to the more thorough school which is to complete his character, and open to him the boundless future.

The real discipline is in the practical and the arduous pursuits, in the duties which in themselves we loathe, and in the things that annoy, vex and disgust us. For a time it would seem best that we should be bound down to the clods of earth, and that the powers and aspirations which have been divinely breathed into us should, for awhile, be chastened and repressed by this worldly turmoil and care. Out of this dark and trying condition, pure and noble souls come up, like the verdure and bloom that springs from the garden mould. It is the hardness of our lot, in this ever-pressing round of trivial care and labor, that makes up the training element in it. The discipline that comes from what is seemingly mean and contemptible is what the soul needs for its future destiny. The temptation to fret and pine under this dispensation of forced and uncongenial toil must be met and cured by the abiding conviction that it is a stage in the process by which the blossoms and fruitage of the skies are to be reached.

We do not now refer to the discipline of affliction in its deepest manifestation. It is more difficult to see the good in our allotments of lowly toil, and exacting and wearisome duties, than it is to realize the nilsaron of sorrow and bereavement. Our self-respect and our claims upon the respect of others are raised, consciously, by mighty and exceptional griefs. These griefs command the homage of men as they do the special notice of the divine promises. They lift the soul up so powerfully and so graciously that a sense of their exalting influence is felt and realized. But these daily and hourly servitudes, and this inexorable bondage to the tyranny of earthly needs, require a patience, submission, and a faith of a higher order.

Our blessed Lord, found in fashion as a man, "took upon him the form of a servant." The most of his earthly life was probably spent in Joseph's work-shop. Obscure toil was his. Those were long years, weary ones, that he spent in such work as the poorest peasant might have done. The healing hands, the miracle-working hands, the hands afterward lifted in blessings as he ascended, were used to the rough tools of the carpenter. This mind of minds, this grandest and purest of souls, was for a period subjected to the ordeal of the most lowly and the most trying of earthly conditions. It was a part, and much the longest period of his human training. It is so with the most of his disciples. We are moving in the Master's footsteps, if the training be accepted by us with a contented and courageous spirit. There is a joy set before us as there was before Him. Those who endure and labor with cheerful patience shall in due time go up from this trailing school to the thrones and glories of the brighter world.

Notes from Nashville.

Mr. Editor: You will be glad to know that the disposal of Publishing House bonds goes bravely on. The Rev. Drs. McFerrin, Young and Fitzgerald returned last week from Louisville, where they had a kind reception, and a liberal response to their appeals. The editor of the Advocate has visited a number of places in the interest of the House, and especially of the Advocate, whose circulation is constantly increasing. The paper is now cut open for the convenience of subscribers, and the advertisements and official documents are cut down, so as to give more space for reading matter of a popular cast. These are grand improvements, and will tend largely to the extension of the circulation. It is the great central organ of the connection, and everybody ought to have it. We must be more connectional. Let us get the Publishing House out of its embarrassments, and so prepare the way for the issue of new publications. I have recently examined the manuscripts of a number of works, some of which I should like to edit for our new catalogue, and others for their respective authors. But where are the sinews of war?

I am glad to see that our New Orleans Christian Advocate is placed on a solid basis, and I congratulate all concerned on its successful management. Now let "the patronizing Conferences" rally to its support, and push its circulation. Indeed, it would not hurt our friends in any part of the connection to peruse its columns. More I must not say in your presence, Mr. Editor.

Last week was a lively time in the metropolis of Tennessee. Our Medical College had its commencement on Thursday night. The Masonic Temple was crowded with the elite of the city, and the great ones of Church and State. The platform exhibited many professional gentlemen of high standing, including the governor of the State, and, I was going to say, the Bishop of Tennessee, Dr. McTyeire, but that is a title monopolized by my friend, Dr. Quintard, whose clergy and people are but a handful compared with those of the other Bishop, who claims no such distinction—nor, indeed, does our Roman Catholic brother, "Father Feehan, Bishop of Nashville"—though there are some people in Nashville of whom he is not Bishop! But that is a digression. Dr. Maddin, president of the faculty, called on Dr. Kelley to offer prayer, which he did appropriately. C. W. White, of Kentucky, delivered a good address as valedictorian. One hundred and fifteen received diplomas—the largest graduating class since the war. An amusing mistake (of the bovine species) was committed in the paper reporting proceedings. The diplomas are conferred by Chancellor Searcy, of the University of Nashville, and Chancellor Garland, of Vanderbilt University. The paper in question reported Chancellor Searcy as conferring the degree on 115 graduates—now take 10 from 115, the remainder 0 was, of course, the number on whom Chancellor Garland conferred the degree! The fact is, only about twenty of them matriculated in the Nashville University; four-fifths of the entire members matriculated as Vanderbilt students. Three or four of the number were ad eundem. The honorary degree of meritelne was conferred on Calvin Jones Moore, of Anderson county, Penn., by Vanderbilt University. Gold medals were distributed to deserving students, with an eloquent and appropriate address by President Maddin. A capital charge was delivered to the graduating class by Prof. W. L. Nichol—it was, indeed, a noble address. President Maddin announced that the names of the alumni of the institution who fell as martyrs during the late epidemic in Memphis and Vicksburg were to be inscribed on a tablet, to be hung on the walls of the college. He then introduced Dr. Jerome Cochran, of Mobile, an alumnus of the institution, and a member of the Yellow Fever Commission, who delivered an elaborate address of about an hour's length. His voice is not powerful, so that he was not heard by many of the audience, and as he did not discourse on the fever, or those who fell martyrs to it, whose heroism the college wished to commend and commemorate, some impatience was exhibited before he closed his address. The president called on the writer to dismiss the large assemblage with the benediction.

The Rev. Dr. Milburn, "the blind man eloquent," delivered a couple of lectures in McKendree Church lecture-room last week—one on "Milton," and one on "What a Blind Man Saw in Paris." I was precluded attendance, I have heard the latter lecture. I was very desirous to hear the lecture on Milton. I had just been reading Dean Stanley's lecture on Milton, delivered in Westminster Chapel, on the anniversary of the "martyrdom" of King Charles the First, and I wanted to compare the learned dean with the eloquent orator. I wanted to hear Dr. Milburn repeat those magnificent lines (67–109) in "Samson Agonistes"—the best in the poem, which, as Dean Stanley says, shows a decadence in Milton's poetic power. It is an imitation of the Greek tragedy, and as such is a failure. Milton, himself blind, makes blind Samson say:

"O dark, dark, dark, amid the blaze of noon!"

Charles Wesley, personating a blind penitent sinner, gives us this parody of the passage:

O dark, dark, dark (I still must say)
Amid the blaze of gospel day!

Milburn, blind also, could repeat that passage with great force and touching pathos. I do not know whether he has ever done so.

Dr. Milburn preached on Sunday in McKendree and Carrol Street Churches. I was preaching elsewhere, and was denied the pleasure of hearing him. By the way, I heard a capital, exegetical, homiletical discourse in Vanderbilt Chapel in the afternoon by Prof. Dodd, on the First Psalm. Without a particle of pedantry, he brought out the singular point and beauty of the Hebrew original. He was short and sweet. I am in danger of being neither in this rambling scrawl; so here shall be an end.

Social Drinking.

A few weeks ago a notable company of gentlemen assembled in the ample parlors of the venerable and much-beloved William E. Dodge, in this city, to listen to an essay, by Judge Noah Davis, on the relations of crime to the habit of intemperate drinking. The company was notable for its respectability, its number of public men, and the further fact that it contained many who were well known to be wine-drinkers—unattached to any temperance organization. No one could have listened to Judge Davis' disclosure of the facts of this subject without the conviction that it was a subject worthy the attention of every philanthropist, every political economist, and every well wisher of society present, whether temperance men or not. These facts, gathered from many quarters, and from the best authorities, were most significant in fastening upon the use of alcohol the responsibility for most of the crimes and poverty of society. Some of them were astounding, even to temperance men themselves, and there were none present, we presume, who did not feel that Judge Davis had done a rare favor to the cause of temperance in thus putting into its service his resources of knowledge and his persuasive voice. How many were convinced by the facts detailed that evening that they ought to give up the habit of social drinking, we cannot tell. The probabilities are that none were so moved, for this habit of social drinking, or rather the considerations that go with it, are very despotic. The idea that a man cannot be hospitable without the offer of wine to his guests is so fixed in the minds of most well-to-do people in this city that they will permit no consideration to interfere with it. People in the country, in the ordinary walks of life, have no conception of the despotic character of this idea. There are literally thousands of respectable men in New York who would consider their character and social standing seriously compromised by giving a dinner to a company of ladies and gentlemen without the offer of wine. It is not that they care for it themselves particularly. It is quite possible, or likely, indeed, that they would be glad, for many reasons, to banish the wine-cup from their tables, but they do not dare to do it. It is also true that such is the power of this idea upon many temperance men that they refrain altogether from giving dinners, lest their guests should feel the omission of wine to be a hardship and an outrage upon the customs of common hospitality.

We have called these things to notice for a special reason. The company of wine-drinkers who made up so large a portion of the number that filled Mr. Dodge's rooms on the occasion referred to must have been profoundly impressed by the revelations and arguments of Judge Davis. They could not have failed to feel that by these revelations they have been brought face to face with a great duty—not, perhaps, the duty of stopping social drinking, and all responsible connection with it, but the duty of doing something to seal the fountains of this drink which has contributed so largely to the spread of crime and poverty and misery. A man must, indeed, be a brute who can contemplate the facts of intemperance without being moved to remedy them. They are too horrible to contemplate long at a time, and every good citizen must feel that the world cannot improve until, in some measure, the supplies of drink are dried up.

Our reason for writing this article is to call attention to the fact that there is something about this habit of social wine-drinking that kills the motives to work for temperance among those who suffer by coarse and destructive habits of drink. Temperance is very rarely directly labored for by those who drink wine. As a rule, with almost no exceptions at all, the man who drinks wine with his dinner does not undertake any work to keep his humble neighbors temperate. As a rule, too, the wine-drinking clergyman says nothing about intemperance in his pulpit, when it is demonstrably the most terrible scourge that afflicts the world. There seems to be something in the touch of wine that paralyzes the ministerial tongue on the topic of drink.

We fully understand the power of social influence to hold to the wine-cup as the symbol of hospitality. It is one of the most relentless despotisms from which the world suffers, and exactly here is its worst result. We do not suppose that a very large number of drunkards are made by wine drunk at the table in respectable homes. There is a percentage of intemperate men made undoubtedly here, but perhaps the worst social result that comes of this habit is its paralyzing effect upon reform—its paralyzing effect upon those whose judgments are convinced, and whose wishes for society are all that they should be. It is only the total abstainer who can be relied upon to work for temperance—who ever has been relied upon to work for temperance; and of Mr. Dodge's company of amiable and gentlemanly wine-drinkers it is safe to conclude that not one will join hands with him in temperance labor—with Judge Davis' awful facts sounding in his ears—who does not first cut off his own supplies.—J. G. Holland, in Scribner.

Sunday-School Libraries and Librarians

Nothing is more essential to the machinery of a good Sunday-school than a well-selected library. Books continue their instruction after the Sabbath has passed, and teachers and scholars are at home. Their efficiency is beyond possibility of computation. Thomas Carlyle has well said: "The true university of these days is a library of good books." Much has been done to furnish our Sunday-schools with literature. Great talents and large culture have been consecrated to this special work. Doubtless results have followed which eternity alone will reveal. Yet we find here a difficulty and a danger. To secure a ready sale and large profits, unwholesome and sometimes pernicious books have been dedicated to children, catalogued with Sunday-school publications, and hurried upon the market. The shelves of libraries are burdened with Mother Goose stories and sentimental tales, whose very extravagancies provoke and nurture the habit of incredulity and positive skepticism in the young mind. We need to carefully select books pure from any taint of error, and wholesome in moral and religious instruction. This should be prayerfully guarded by the officers and teachers of every school.

But after a library has been accumulated it is of next importance to have it judiciously managed. A good librarian must be selected—neat, punctual, methodical, courteous, cheerful and attentive. Thousands of dollars have been squandered, and the Sunday-school's spiritual efficiency largely impaired by incompetent and unsystematic librarians. Books are given out, and no record kept. Soon the library is gone beyond possibility of recovery. Every librarian should have a well matured system, and work it so efficiently that the books will be both preserved and read. Many systems have been invented and several patented. The one known as Ray's patent, in our judgment, has superior advantages. It has been used for several years in the Methodist Sunday-school at Jackson, Miss., and under the skillful management of that model librarian, Mr. George S. Green, has never lost a book. In one instance he recovered a volume by mail from a family which had moved away, and by oversight had carried it off in their library. We have a different system in Vicksburg, which works admirably well.

This is a matter not to be lightly esteemed. Enterprising Sunday-school workers will appreciate the above. C. B. G.

El Evangelista Mexicano is the title of a neat monthly paper, printed in the Spanish language, and published in the City of Mexico by Guillermo M. Patterson. This Guillermo is none other than the Rev. W. M. Patterson, superintendent of the missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Mexico. We have before us Tomo 1, Numero 1, dated Mexico, Enero, 1879. We suspect that Enero may be Spanish for January, but our stock of Spanish is very small and very rusty. We are glad to welcome the new missionary paper, published on missionary soil, and in the very tongue of the people to whom we are sending the gospel. What is most remarkable of all is that the composition and press work are done by Bro. Patterson himself, with his own hands. St. Paul might have done this way had there been any printing press in his time. The following printed circular from Bro. Patterson has come to hand:

THE CITY OF MEXICO MISSION OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

Your special attention is called to our mission work in the great republic of Mexico. One year ago this mission was confined to the City of Mexico, and consisted of 2 preachers, 2 teachers and 7 members. At present there are 7 regular stations, each one in the midst of a vast population, many of these already anxious to embrace our holy religion. There are in the field 11 native preachers, 7 teachers and 150 members, many others being "on trial." The Lord of the vineyard has thus favored the labors of this year. The field open to us promises a still greater harvest in the future. The people esteem our cause more and more favorably.

We are greatly in need of more means to support this great work of the church. If the Woman's Missionary Society, or Sunday-School Missionary Society of your charge can aid us at this time by raising funds for some of our schools, or any other special object in the mission, it will be very encouraging to the laborers in the field, and very profitable to our Saviour's cause in Mexico. All amounts raised or promised may be reported to the board in Nashville, at as early a day as possible. This earnest appeal to the church is made in the hope of a cordial response from many of the friends of missions. Correspondents on this subject may expect to receive prompt attention.

The United States Circuit Court, sitting in New Orleans, has been for some time engaged in the trial of citizens of Louisiana charged with violations of the laws at the fall election. The Natchitoches case, in which over fifty of the best citizens of that section were under trial, was brought to a conclusion on Friday last, the jury bringing in a verdict of not guilty. The trial of another company of citizens from Caddo parish is now under way. And there are several other cases yet to be heard. There may have been some irregularities in connection with the late elections in some parts of the State, but not more nor more serious than occur in some of the Northern States on such occasions. We doubt whether there will be any convictions in any of these cases. Certainly there ought not to be, unless they show stronger grounds for the prosecution than those in the Natchitoches case. But it is a cruel thing to drag hundreds of innocent men from their homes and business, putting them to great expense, inconvenience, and material sacrifices to gratify the vindictiveness of party spirit. It is the remnant of a stupendous tyranny that has spread its blighting influences over the South for the past fifteen years, and a part of the political machinery constructed for the purpose of subjecting the white to the negro race, and to maintain the supremacy of a party. It would seem, to the dispassionate observer, that these political prosecutions were instituted for other purposes than for the promotion of justice.

We regret to learn that Prof. C. G. Forshey is lying very sick at his residence in Carrollton, Seventh District of New Orleans. Some months ago he had a stroke of paralysis, from which he had somewhat recovered, when a second attack, a few days ago, rendered him altogether helpless and speechless. Some time before this last attack he returned to the church of his early choice, and was received into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by Dr. Walker, pastor of Carondelet Street Church. Prof. Forshey is widely known as a student and writer, and for his long devotion to those branches of science bearing upon the improvement and commerce of the Mississippi river.

Neither congregation nor church, family nor State, art nor science, nay, not even the holiest exercises of piety, are an end in themselves; but only serve as means to the great art of life, the birth of eternal life in the human soul, the invisible child of God.—Bunsen.

—Ingersoll denies the being of God. Who is happier by such unbelief? The vicious it may be who will rejoice that they will have no account to render of their lives, the thief and the murderer who may hope that no retribution will visit them for their deeds. He denies that men have a Saviour. Who finds comfort in that denial? The abandoned sinner it may be who has no desire to renounce his sins; but not the earnest hearted man or woman whose moral natures recoil at sin, and whose consciences tell them that they and all others have sinned. He has no hope of heaven. Is there comfort in his hopelessness? Every human heart which has sorrowed over the grave of a parent or child, husband or wife, brother or sister, feels that a darker gloom gathers over the grave when all hope of the hereafter is shut out by the clouds of unbelief. No heaven? There is no comfort in that to the mother as she closes the eyes of her babe and sees it wrapped in its white shroud; no comfort to the wife as she returns to her cheerless home from the grave of her husband; no comfort to the child as the mother lies down in her tomb. There is not one solitary promise in all of this man's preaching but decay and death for the body and the silence of eternal death for the soul. There is the chill of the grave in such a gospel.

—We are very much afraid that but few of our people properly understand or appreciate what is meant by the Psalm when it says: "Sing unto the Lord." One of our best men said, in our hearing, a few days ago: "Not until within the past few years did I think that I was singing unto the Lord when in His house, but simply singing because I liked to sing." Is not this about the experience of most of our people? How few sing in sincerity "unto the Lord," making melody in their hearts, as well as with their lips. We very much fear that much of our modern song service has but little of the true service of the blessed Master in it. The soul, rightly exercised, can be made as joyous and happy in singing the praises of God as in any other way. Many of our best hymns have the very marrow of the gospel in them, and ought to be sung not only with ordinary understanding, but with a profound understanding of their import and teaching. "Let us sing unto the Lord, and make a joyful noise to the God of our salvation."

The Criminal Disease.—Stealing is now called a "disease," kleptomania is its name; and drunkenness is now called a disease, "dypsomania" is its name; and as crimes against the person may be committed under the influence of dypsomania, and crimes against property may come under the head of kleptomania, it is plain that rascals are hereafter to be called invalids. It is a much milder name. A man gets tipsy and kills his neighbor, he is an invalid, a dypsomaniac. A man wants money, and robs his neighbor; he is an invalid, a kleptomaniac. Crime is no more, it is all disease.

—Retrenchment is the demand of the day. The secular and religious papers are full of it. Dunnings are made upon Legislatures that they must not adjourn until they have established a decided reputation as reformers. This is as it should be. Economy and honesty should be the leading characteristics of every financial department of the Church and State and family. But where should we begin? This is an important question. Too often retrenchment begins where it should end. They tell me say stop my tobacco, cigars and snuff. We hear nothing about ribbons, jewels, ornaments and trinkets being discontinued. Times are hard, but pride cannot be rebuked, but is fostered.

But there must be retrenchment somewhere. A beginning must be made, and too often they begin at the house of God. I will give less for the support of the ministry this year than last. The collections ordered by the Conference must allow me to save a few dollars. Church collections must not expect much help from me this year. The poor must remember that these are hard times. The widow and orphan cannot expect me to give as much help to them as I have formerly done. Times are hard. See that you begin at the right place, reader.

Northwestern Christian Advocate.

—We have no crusade against the Chautauquan, though we do now suggest that the art of toleration of brotherly hints be put into the course of study. Not long since we humorously suggested that the old timer Sunday-school teacher introduced more Scripture into his pupils' minds than the average modern teacher. We have the hardihood to repeat the persuasion, promising that we refer to memorized Scripture. Will even the Chautauqua Assembly Herald risk assertion of the contrary? The fact is, the old-time Sunday-school did little else than hear children recite Scripture from memory, while the Chautauquans do almost everything else. Modern methods are excellent and commendable, save in the one vital point we name. Our present point is not incited solely by the Assembly Herald's reply to our comment. When we criticise just one particular, those floods of hurt indignation should be stayed by the memory that we indorse ninety-nine per cent. of Chautauquan methods.

Two Changes.

A unity man, says the Methodist, writes to us: "The North Carolina Conference sessions appear to have been an unusually important one, and to have eventuated in a separation between the white and colored members. The question was brought up on a resolution emanating from the white session, and after considerable debate the vote was nineteen for separation and eighteen against. The matter came up a second time, when the motion was carried by a majority of twenty-four against one. Bishop Peck then announced that the new Conference would be called the 'Southern Central.' At present it consists only of the white work of the North Carolina Conference, but it is expected that at the next General Conference it will have added to it part of the Holston, and perhaps even of the South Carolina Conference. If so, it will have quite a large territory. It is worthy of remark that the objection to the change came chiefly from the colored brethren, who did not seem to be desirous of running alone, and who, at length acceded to it somewhat reluctantly. Only one white member voted 'no,' and it is observable that there is a growing conviction in the South that mixed Conferences are not, on the whole, successful as a matter of fact, whatever may be said of the principle."

"On other feature of the late Conference deserves mention as showing the altered spirit of the times. Twice before has this Conference met in Greensboro without receiving any substantial tokens of fraternity, but this time Drs. Wilson, Wood and Burton were introduced as delegates from the North Carolina Conference of the Church, South, and on the Sabbath their church in the city was supplied by our Dr. Fuller in the morning and by the Bishop (Peck) in the evening, and quite a number of Southern Methodist homes were opened for the entertainment of the brethren. Thus it is evident we are moving on in the fraternal line, and, all things considered, the progress is by no means a slow one."

Four Per Cents. in Louisville.

The Southern Methodist of March 6 says:

We referred in our paper last week to the visit to this city of Rev. Dr. Young, the secretary of Vanderbilt University, and Rev. Dr. Wilson, our Missionary Secretary, with others.

The special object was to offer to the citizens of Louisville the four per cent. Publishing House Bonds, the proceeds of which are to liquidate the present indebtedness of that institution.

During the twelve years of our administration as General Book Agent, we always found Kentucky standing in the front whenever demands were made for the benefit of the Publishing House, and we are gratified that, notwithstanding the stringency of the times, the church here has not and will not relax her efforts in aiding to save this grand and noble enterprise.

In this good work as in every other the Methodists of Louisville and friends of the church have always borne a prominent part, and now in the terrible struggle through which the house is passing they add to the relief thirteen thousand dollars by the purchase of bonds.

The temperance movements have several different forms of pledges. The straitest total abstinence pledge is, to our mind, the best. The only way to keep a good conscience, and to insure ourselves against drunkenness, is to neither buy, sell or use liquids as a beverage. The following has been sent us by somebody. It is a very good thing in its way. If there were no treating the evil of intemperance would be considerably reduced, and we trust the anti-treating league may find universal favor:

ANTI-TREATING PLEDGE.

For the purpose of discouraging the pernicious custom of "treating" to drinks we, the undersigned, hereby promise that we will not drink, at the expense of other persons, any spirituous or malt liquors, wines, cordials or cider; and that we will not invite any person to drink of the above-named intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

The person who procures this year the best list of signers to this pledge will get a valuable premium. All papers favorable to humanity please copy.

D. C. Hartman,
Sec. Anti-Treating League,
East Baltimore, Md.

The Book Committee, says the Methodist, found no difficulty in filling the place made vacant by the death of Dr. Nelson, without going outside of their own number; indeed, it is said that there were three other competent men among the Eastern ministers on the committee, The Rev. Sanford Hunt, D. D., who becomes junior book-agent at New York by this election, is about fifty-four years old, is well known to all the members of recent General Conferences, and is believed by his numerous friends to possess the special gifts required in his new office. It is not a place that any sensible man would desire. Its duties are arduous, and its responsibilities must weigh heavily upon any man possessing the moral sensibility which the office requires. The senior agency and the missionary treasurership fall to J. M. Phillips, Esq., whose fitness and fidelity have been proved by long service in the publishing department of our church work.

The Interior last week preached a crusade against chalk. It reports a superintendent who preaches the gospel on his "blackboard with white chalk, red chalk, green and yellow chalk." The editor exclaims in agony: "Oh, that deadly chalk! that has killed the spirit of revival in the churches;" and inquires: "Shall we revise our creed, and say the most fatal hindrance to a revival, is not in the world, the flesh and the devil, but in that zealous young superintendent of the Sabbath-school with his ungodly chalk, drawing the walls of Jericho?" The only way, thinks the Interior, to have revivals in city churches, is to chase the "chalky superintendent off the platform."

Congress adjourned at noon, March 4. The legislative, judicial and executive appropriation bills failed, and hence an extra session has been called March 18. The repeal of certain obnoxious election laws, and of that relic of infamy, the jurors' test oath law, were in these bills as amendments, and neither party would yield. We trust the new Congress will move rapidly, do a few wise things, and then adjourn.

An elect lady, one who contributes to our columns occasionally, and works for the Advocate, writes: "I do not forget to pray for the editor, and 'Bless the editor of the Advocate' is one of the petitions often heard in our little prayer meeting." Many thanks to our devout friends for this remembrance at the throne of grace. God bless them, and all of our subscribers, and the children.

Rev. John A. Ellis, presiding elder of the Seashore district, Mississippi Conference, passed through the city last week on his way to a quarterly meeting at Covington. He reports affairs in his district as doing well. His predecessor, Bro. Thomas Price, left the work in good order, and ready for the new administration.

In an obituary recently published of Capt. Puckette the types call him commodore, where the writer intended commander.

—The Southern Cultivator for March has been received. It is an excellent number.

"Company Manners" for Every Day.—A little more formality in serving the family meals wouldn't harm some households. There is no need of saving all the "company manners" for company; if you do, the children, at least, will be found wanting when the occasion comes. The necessity of cheerfulness and contentment at meals cannot be too often enforced. The wisdom, on purely physical grounds, of tranquil mind at meal times is as old as Bacon, in our language, and as ancient as the patriarchs in practice. The time given to the table ought be doubled in many families, and the cheerfulness, good-nature and domestic conversation increased in like ratio.—Golden Rule.

A well-meaning but inconsiderate zealot, while conversing with several friends dropped to say something derogatory to a church—not his own. A young lady among his hearers, a member of the church spoken against, burst into a flood of tears. "Why, what's the matter, Miss?" "I would prefer, sir, for you to speak against my mother rather than against my church," she replied. And hers was the genuine spirit of love and devotion—let it be ours also.

"For her my tears shall fall,
For her my prayers ascend,
To her my cares and toils be given,
Till toils and cares shall end."

—Western Methodist.

His Own Critic.—When in good humor Dr. Johnson would talk of his own writings with a wonderful frankness and candor, and would even criticise them with the closest severity. One day, having read over one of his Ramblers, Mr. Langton asked him how he liked that paper. He shook his head and answered: "Too wordy." At another time, when one was reading his tragedy, "Irene," to a company at whom in the country, he left the room, and, somebody having asked him the reason of this, he replied: "Sir, I thought it had been better."

The "News" Then.—Dr. Leonard Bacon thinks there are some things in the past and the present which are alike, and regards the following: About sixty years ago a somewhat typical minister of a Connecticut church made a visit to Boston and returned. A trip which by no means was so easy then as now.

"Well, doctor," said one of his parishioners to him, "do you bring us any news from Boston?"

"Yes," he replied. "The Lord reigns, and the devil is trying to."

"That was the summary of the news thirty years ago, and so it is to-day.

As weeds grow fastest in fat soil, so our corruptions grow and thrive most when our natural state is most prosperous. Therefore God's love and care of us constrain Him sometimes to use severe discipline, and to cut us short in our temporal enjoyments.—Bishop Hopkins.

The Norman Castles.

The castles built in the era immediately following the Conquest were very numerous, and, considered in connection with the enormous number of religious foundations, which date from the eleventh and twelfth centuries, the building activity of that age was, perhaps, unexampled. In their construction, everything was sacrificed to military necessities, without the slightest concession to any rival consideration. Not a stone was laid except in the strictest conformity with the condition of the problem, and every inch of the structure, from basement to battlement, was the expression and result of a single purpose. The very profiles of the copings were devised to deflect or check the flight of the arrow, and indeed every part of the work bears testimony to the overruling sway of an iron age. The rough fancy of the Norman breaks out here and there in the ornament he loved so well, and with which the ecclesiastical buildings of the age abound, but never to the prejudice or even to the apparent weakening of the main purpose of the building. Cushioned capital, and zig-zag billet and chevron are found, but only in the crypt, or on some inner gateway, or for the adornment of the little oratory—seldom absent—nestling in the thickness of the mighty walls. Yet, in spite of the absence of deliberate artistic aim, the art instinct of their builders is everywhere felt. By fortuitous combinations of line and mass, the picturesque grandeur of the early castles is not exceeded by any of the works of man, nor is there probably any class of building the world over which has afforded the artist such universal aid and delight. To the novelist and the poet they are a never-failing source of inspiration. Need I mention Scott? The sight of a castle stirred his heart like the sound of a trumpet.—Magazine of Art.

C. T. Leathrop, Publisher.

We refer parties needing steam engines, boilers, mills, gins, presses, etc., to the advertisement of H. Foster Coleman & Bro., No. 12 Union street, New Orleans, as they being manufacturers and dealers of well-established reputation.

The air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To those disposed to economize this popular hotel offers an opportunity seldom found at so thoroughly a first class house, having reduced its rates to $2 and $2.50 per day.

W. C. Shepard & Co. sell chamber sets, white stone, $3; fancy, $5; dinner sets, white stone, $2; semi-china, $15 and $18; china, 124 pieces, $25.

Pianos and Organs.—See what Louis Grunewald, of 14 to 22 Baronne street, says in his advertisement. If you require a piano or an organ go to Grunewald's, and he will suit you in the price and the instrument. Give him a call.

Stoves.—J. H. Campman, 133 Poydras street, has been in business a great many years, and has enjoyed the confidence of all with whom he has done business. He is the sole agent in this market for the stoves which he advertises in this issue, all of which have given perfect satisfaction wherever used. We commend the claims of John Campman to the attention of every one who desire to deal with a worthy gentleman and an honorable merchant. Read advertisement.

Watches and Jewelry.—Otto Schwaner, 17 Baronne street, has a fine assortment of watches and jewelry, which he is selling at reduced prices; and to those who are looking for bargains in his line we would say call and see this reliable merchant; and you will be pleased.

Diebold Safe and Lock Company.—A. Roy, 27 Canal street, is agent for these celebrated safes. He is confident of giving satisfaction, both as to price and quality.

Soap.—The soap manufactured by Procter & Gamble can be had by all the leading grocers in the country. Our worthy citizen, C. A. French, is the agent at this point for it.

Shrimp, Fresh Okra and Artichokes.—On this page will be seen the advertisement of the reliable house of C. W. Dunbar & Sons, 3 Tchoupitoulas street. It is one of the most extensive establishments of its kind in the country. The Philadelphia grocerers in the following flattering letter to it:

"Ten years of practical experience in packing the fruits and products of our Southern coast has enabled Messrs. C. W. Dunbar & Sons, of New Orleans, to carry off the silver medal of Paris, which was the highest award given to manufacturers of the class which they represent. It is well known that Louisiana shrimps and artichokes are superior to any others, and the canning of Messrs. Dunbar is fast getting into consumption in all parts of the country, while their ripe figs and oranges in cans are, without fevered respectable rivals. All these goods are destined to enter into very general consumption, and are furnished at so much lower prices than would be at first expected, that they leave good margins of profit for dealers, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. By reason of their perfect flavor and fine quality, in addition to the above articles, this enterprising and successful house is manufacturing the finest cane syrups in the world for Europe cannot show anything superior to their products in purity and flavor, or appearance, and we are sure that it is unequaled here. We cordially recommend their goods to the trade.—Philadelphia Grocer.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

National Surgical Institute.

The annual visit of an examining surgeon from this well-known institution will be made to New Orleans on March 15th. He will bring with him skilled assistants and workmen from the Home Institute, and will remain until April 15th. The preparations now making for this visit are extensive and elaborate, and, when completed, will be amply sufficient to meet increased demands.

In its chosen specialties, paralysis and its results, deformities, diseases of joints, plastic surgery, hemorrhoids, fistula, etc., this institution is unexcelled.

Refers, by permission, to the many well known citizens of New Orleans, who are its patrons. For further information write to National Surgical Institute, Indianapolis, Ind., Philadelphia, Pa., or Atlanta, Ga. Head quarters 185 St. Charles street.

Pozzoni's Medicated Complexion Powder is acknowledged by thousands of ladies, who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not roughen the skin, chap, blister, or leave black spots in the pores. Mothers can apply it to infants who become chafed with a surety of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price 50 cents and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot 607 North Sixth street, St. Louis (Limited Notice.)

The American Jewelry Company of Cincinnati, O., are specializing on the way of the Lefevre Diamonds. These Diamonds are as pure and brilliant as are the genuine jewels when they initiate. The Company publish an interesting work for free distribution, in which the history of these celebrated jewels is told. The gentlemen who compose this firm are endorsed by well known commercial houses, both in Europe and America.

To One and All.—Are you suffering from a Cough, Cold, Asthma, Bronchitis, or any of the various pulmonary troubles that so often end in Consumption? If so, use "Brown's Pure Cod Liver Oil and Lime," a safe and sure remedy. This is no quack preparation, but is regularly prescribed by the medical faculty. Manufactured only by A. B. Wilcox, Chemist, Boston. Sold by all druggists.

Sudden changes of the Weather often cause Pulmonary, Bronchial, and Throat troubles. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" will allay irritation which induces coughing, often times giving immediate relief. Twenty-five cents a box.

American Enterprise.

The greatest success attending any commercial house is that of the American Jewelry Company, Cincinnati, O., whose energy in utilizing the late discovery of the eminent French chemist, Lefevre, by which pure crystals found in the Sierra Nevada are transformed into almost perfect and indiscernible imitation of the real diamond, which this Company mounts into jewelry made of solid gold for $1. It has attracted attention at this and thousands throughout the entire United States, and in every instance the articles are pronounced perfectly wonderful as the price.

From the well-known Confederate Officer, Col. H. H. Masser.

St. Louis, April 1, 1877.

Messrs. J. & P. Maguire:

Dear Sirs: I have been for about seven years a great sufferer from Catarrh, the result of the Sixth contracted and aggravated by four years service in the Confederate Army in the swamps of Arkansas and Louisiana. I have for the past two years used your Continuous Blister, and have been entirely relieved of the grievous enlargement, and always on exposure to cold. I use it to relieve of present irritation, and have had no serious attack since. I recommend it to all. Respectfully, H. H. Masser.

A Remedy That has Been Remedied.

There is a remedy to be had by almost every one in the Cod Liver Oil, but it is not always that it is taken. Many a Cod Liver Oil has caused fear in the minds of the victims of debility from reaping the benefits of its peculiar healing and nutritive properties. The almost tasteless emulsion, Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil and Lime, a safe and sure remedy. This is no quack preparation, but is regularly prescribed by the medical faculty. Manufactured only by A. B. Wilcox, Chemist, Boston. Sold by all druggists.

To Have Soft Hands.—It is said that ten cent's worth of tartaric acid used when you wash your hands, by dipping one wet finger in the powder and rubbing the hands well, and then washing off in clear water, using soap and clear water, will clean every stain, and the hands will be as soft and white as a baby's.

Breakfast Muffins.—House-keepers will find the following as a dainty substitute for bread at breakfast: Two eggs well beaten with one cupful of sugar, and a little of butter the size of an egg; to this add one pint of milk, with a teaspoonful of soda, one quart of flour, and two tablespoonfuls of cream tartar; bake in muffin rings on top of the range, or in gem pans in a quick oven.

Fish Fritters.—Take cold codfish, soak it over night. In the morning throw the water off the fish, put on fresh, and set on the range until it comes to a boil. Do not let it stand, as that will harden it. Then pick it up very fine, season with pepper, mace, and perhaps a little salt. Make a batter of a pint of milk and three eggs, stir in the fish, and fry in small cakes. Any kind of cold fish makes nice fritters.

Apple Short Cake.—Make a soft dough as for biscuits; roll out thin and put a layer in a pan; on this spread a layer of sour apples; sprinkle over sugar and slices of with small lump of butter; then put on a layer of dough, another of apples and a very thin layer of dough, and bake in a very quick oven.

Sweet Butter-Trees.—Spruce butter-tubs are the best; white birch makes a sweet butter-tub from the oak or the butter and injures its appearance; white ash gives the best results, having a keep sweet and imparting a pleasant flavor. Keep sweet and imparting a pleasant flavor. Keep sweet and imparting a pleasant flavor.

BEYOND THE RANGE OF VISION.—Hitherto man's knowledge of the extent of the universe has been bounded by the limits of vision. During the day, when the range of sight is narrowed by the sun's excessive brightness, we see but a minute fraction even of the little world we inhabit. At night a wider range of vision is possible, and some thousands of stellar and planetary bodies are added to the domain of positive knowledge, thus enlarging man's idea of the magnitude of the universe. But the increase of knowledge, which darkness gives, is almost infinitesimal compared with the wider view opened up by the telescope. That the most powerful telescopes enable us to penetrate to the limit of the universe no one imagines. Our positive knowledge ends with the limit of vision. We have supposed that this would always be so. Hitherto science has given no hint of the possibility of exploring the vast beyond, from which no visible ray of light has ever been detected, or is ever likely to be detected, by the most far reaching and sensitive optic aids. But now there comes a promise of an extension of knowledge to fields of space so remote that light is tired out and lost before it can traverse the intervening distance. This new agent is the tasimeter, by which it is possible not only to measure the heat of the remotest visible stars, but, Mr. Edison believes, to detect by their invisible radiations stars that are unseen and unseeable. Mr Edison's plan is to adjust the tasimeter to its utmost degree of sensitiveness, then attach it to a large telescope, and so explore those parts of the heavens which appear blank when examined with the highest powers of the instrument. If at any point in such blank space the tasimeter indicates an accession of temperature, and does this invariably, the legitimate inference will be that the instrument is in range with a stellar body, either non-luminous, or so distant as to be beyond the reach of telescopic vision; and the position of such a body can be fixed and mapped the same as if it were visible. As the tasimeter is affected by undulations that the eye cannot take cognizance of, and is withal far more accurately sensitive, the probabilities are that it will open up hitherto inaccessible regions of space. Possibly, too, it may bring within our ken a vast number of nearer bodies—burnt-out suns, or feebly reflecting planets—now unknown because not luminous.—National Repository.

PETROLEUM AS A WOOD PRESERVER.—It is strange that the value of petroleum as a preservative of wood is so little understood or realized. It is well known that in time it will leak out of the best wooden barrel, and that it will penetrate where water would not, and also that where it has penetrated water cannot come. It is not a paint, and it is useless to mix with any pigment whatever, as it cannot be made to dry and harden on the surface. Four years ago I applied it as a priming to the siding of our house, which was badly weather-beaten, with paint flaking off, as is so often seen. I put on all that the siding would absorb, then left it to the action of the air and the hot sun for about six weeks. I then covered it with two coats of white lead and linseed oil, and it has stood beautifully. I also applied it to a line of rough picket fence, afterward covering with mineral paint, as well as if the boards had been planed. The woodwork of all my farm tools is kept full of it, and in drawing manure, when the liquids find their way into every crevice and joint of a wagon, I find it pays to be well furnished with a pint or two of petroleum. Finding my machine oil gone last summer in the hurry of harvest, I thought of the pail of petroleum, and, pouring off the top, found at the bottom just what was wanted. In numberless ways has its value been proved to me, and a barrel of light petroleum is one of the things that I should not know how to do without.—W. J. F., Castile, N. Y.

Mr. Joseph Harris recommends petroleum as excellent for preserving wood from the weather. A neighbor of mine built a door yard fence some two years since of pine timber, and covered with crude petroleum; it seems so far to be as complete a protection as a coat of linseed oil, the water standing on it in globules. This gave me faith enough to try it on a roof; I had to send to New York for it, and pay ten cents a gallon. I have not just applied it—never handled it before—it seems very thin to apply as a paint, and runs more like water than oil; penetrates the wood rapidly, and must, for a while at least, keep the water out; how long, time must determine. My experience is not very complete, as you see, but I can but offer such as I have in answer to an inquiring friend.—Correspondence of New York Tribune.

There died in Bedford, England, a short time ago, John Howard, who was born in the year that John Wesley died, and whose desire had long been that he might live to the age of Wesley—a desire which was gratified, for he died at 88, the exact period of Wesley's life. He was an iron manufacturer, and had accumulated a large fortune. He had been Mayor of Bedford four times, its senior magistrate for many years, and for sixty-five years of his life it was his custom to preach by appointment. When 82 years of age and obliged to sit while he spoke, he would go even miles to fulfill an appointment. He has a son in Parliament, of whom his last words were: "Don't be carried away by the tide, but keep the end in view."

CAREFUL INSTRUCTIONS.—"Represent me in my portrait," said a gentleman, to his painter, "with a book in my hand, and reading aloud. Paint my servant, also, in a corner where he cannot be seen, but in such a manner that he may hear me when I call him."

The Loquet-LeRoy Institute

AND KINDERGARTEN DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, 280 Camp Street.—This institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses MOSE (Cecelia W., Sallie L., and Corinne, the latter relicts of the late R. H. Rapal, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successors of Mme Loquet-LeRoy, whose good will and right to conduct the School under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No change whatever in the conduct and management of the school. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to the institution, and that of their friends, and the public generally, promising strict devotion to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge. C. W. MOISE, Principal.

REFERRING TO THE ABOVE MADAME LOQUET-LEROY announces to her friends and former patrons the entire confidence she has in her successors being in every way suited to the high trust they have assumed. She speaks for them a continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded her, and that she will still be actively connected with the institution. For terms and particulars apply to the principal.

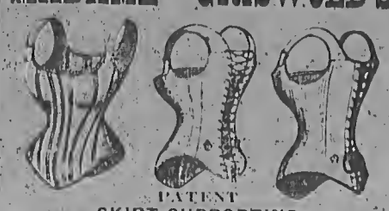
MILK OF MAGNESIA.
IS THE best preparation known for all disordered conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHE caused by acidity of the stomach. The pleasant taste and milk-like smoothness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuading to induce them to take it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and will act as a laxative when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The smoothness of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a fractional part of a single drop magnified 20 diameters. The first the calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the MILK of Magnesia now offered. The difference between these is most striking, for whereas the undissolved precipitates and particles in the drop of calcined Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the MILK of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable precipitates, in fact is perfectly dissolved.



Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it, and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others find already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing VOLUNTARY TESTIMONY.

"Extract from the Hall index" Tuesday, Dec. 23, 1878.
"The Pulvermacher Electric Belt is recommended to general use by the following reasons: First, for its wonderful properties for the cure of diseases of the kidneys, stomach, liver and blood; secondly, for its electric simplicity, and the fact of its being applied outside, rendering it possible for any suffering person to be their own physician, a rational remedy is universally acknowledged to be safe. Another advantage is the facility with which the progress of the disease and cure can be watched, and if the Belt is not quite in the right place it can be very easily readjusted so as to reach the part affected. The Pulvermacher Electric Belt, and its perfections has been hailed with delight not only by the sufferers who have regained health, enjoyment and a new lease of life through its beneficent qualities, but by the medical profession who very frequently prescribe its use to their patients."

are indorsed and approved by the first eminent medical and scientific authorities in the world, by the Faculties of France, England, Austria, Prussia, Belgium, and Queen Victoria, as well known as is shown to the extraordinary cures effected by Pulvermacher's Electric Belts and Bands in upwards of one hundred medical and philosophical works.

The English Scripture Revision Company have completed their second and third revision of the New Testament, after having spent three hundred and thirty-seven days on the work since June, 1870. The company numbers twenty-four, and the average rate of attendance throughout has been fifteen. The changes that the American revisers may suggest have yet to be considered and voted upon.

A fast sabbath-breaker out West outdid his companions by advertising as the chief act of his Sunday morning sermon, "The funeral of Judas Isariot." He deserved the laugh which was raised against him when a keen wag of the town appended to one of his handbills the words, "Relatives and friends of the deceased are cordially invited to be present."

Tone of the market firm. Sales 35,000 bales.

A shopkeeper purchased of an Irish woman a quantity of butter, the lumps of which, intended for pounds, he weighed in the balance and found wanting. "Shure it's your own fault if they are light," said Biddy, in reply to the complaints of the buyer, "it's your own fault, sir, for wasn't it with a pound of your own soap I bought here myself that I weighed them with?" The shopkeeper had nothing more to say on that subject.

If you make up your mind to serve Satan, do not pretend to serve God; and if you serve God, serve Him with all your heart.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—Farmers, Families and others can purchase no remedy equal to DR. TOBIAS' VENETIAN LINIMENT for the cure of Cholera, Diarrhea, Dysentery, Colic and Sick Stomach, taken internally (it is perfectly harmless; see oath accompanying each bottle) and externally for Chronic Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cuts, Burns, Swellings, Bruises, Mosquito Bites, Old Sores, Pains in Limbs, Back and Chest. The VENETIAN LINIMENT was introduced in 1847, and no one who has used it hesitates to do so, many stating if it was ten dollars a bottle they would not be without it. Thousands of certificates can be seen at the depot, speaking of its wonderful curative properties. Sold by the druggists at 40 cents. Depot, 42 Murray Street, New York. 80

DISCOVERY BY which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. Three bottles for $5, $1 to accompany the order and balance to be paid when medicine is delivered.

GREENSBORO DISTRICT CONFERENCE, ALABAMA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.—Bishop Keener will hold the District Conference at Gainesville, commencing March 21, 1879. A full attendance from every charge is urged. Let prayer be made by all the charges for the outpouring of the Spirit upon the Conference. Hope all the pastors will bring the amounts to be raised for Bishops with them.

S. H. COX, P. E.

The District Stewards for Greensboro District, Alabama Conference, will please meet me at Gainesville, Ala., March 22, 1879.

S. H. COX, P. E.

THE District Conference for the Pensacola district will be held at Milton, embracing the fifth Sunday in March. As the time is near, the preachers in charge of circuits and stations will please forward to me, at the earliest possible moment, the names of delegates and others that will attend the Conference, so that we may provide for their entertainment. Please brethren, give immediate attention to this.

We trust that every one will come up in the spirit of pleading prayerfulness for the baptismal benediction upon the meeting, and upon all the churches of the district. E. P. BIRCH, P. C.

THE Alexandria District Conference of the Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will convene in Alexandria, La., April 18, 19, 20, 1879.

The preachers of the district will please bring with them their Quarterly Conference journals, and their Bishop's collection, with full statistics. Bishop Keener will preside.

C. KEESER, P. E.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—The Pensacola District Conference will convene in Milton, Fla., March 28, 1879, at eight o'clock, A. M. The opening sermon will be preached on the twenty-seventh instant, at half past seven o'clock P. M. Arrangements are being made to get half fare on the railroads.

J. M. BOLAND, P. E.

No man has come to true greatness who has not felt in some degree that his life belongs to his race, and that what God gives him he gives him for mankind.—Rev. Phillips Brooks.

When I think of the agencies which are ceaselessly at work to make this bad world better, I am thankful that I live.—W. M. Punshon.

The Duke of Buckingham, in the reign of James the First, had so many windows to his dwelling that it was known in London as the glass house. Numerous Scotchmen came to London with the king, who were obnoxious to the duke, and he organized parties to break their windows. Some Scotchman, in return, broke his windows, and the king remarked to the duke: "Strenle, those who live in glass houses should be careful how they fling stanes," and thus arose the well-known proverb.

TUTT'S PILLS.
SYMPTOMS OF A
TORPID LIVER.
Loss of Appetite, Bowels Costive, Pain in the Head, with a dull sensation in the back part, Pain under the shoulder-blade, fullness after eating, with a disinclination to exertion of body or mind, Irritability of temper, Low Spirits; with a feeling of having neglected some duty, Weariness, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the Eyes, Yellow Skin, Headache generally over the right eye, Restlessness with disturbed dreams, highly colored Urine.
IF THESE WARNINGS ARE UNHEEDED, SERIOUS DISEASES WILL SOON BE DEVELOPED.
TUTT'S PILLS
are especially adapted to such cases, a single dose effects a change of feeling as to astonish the sufferer.
A NOTED DIVINE SAYS:
DR. TUTT:—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.
REV. R. L. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.
The first effect of TUTT'S PILLS is to Increase the Appetite, and cause the body to Take on Flesh, thus the system is nourished, and by their Tonic Action on the Digestive Organs, Regular Stools are produced.
DR. J. F. HAYWOOD
OF NEW YORK, SAYS:
"Few diseases exist that cannot be relieved by restoring the liver to its normal functions, and for this purpose no remedy has ever been invented that has so happy an effect as TUTT'S PILLS."

THE GIFT OF TEARS.

O garden, once ablaom in purple glow,
Is thy life hard? Where chill November blast
Over thy haughty lines of corn has passed,
Bare husks of desolation rustle low.
From heaven itself my answer fell at last:
A silver miracle was quick downcast,
The silent, swift, white beauty of the snow.
Faint soul of mine! so may there fall on thee,
In thy late autumn, some sweet mystery,
Some whiteness uncontaminate of earth,
Some peace divine, whose high, celestial birth
Is of the starry lands unswept by death,
Where the eternal spring tide blossometh!

—Churchman.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

CINCINNATI, March 11.—Archbishop Purcell has received from Cardinal McCloskey assurance of assistance from Catholic congregations in the country. At a Conference held recently between the Cardinal and the Archbishops of Philadelphia, Boston and Baltimore, it was decided that the case of the Archbishop of Cincinnati should be given preference over all others. The matter will be brought before the bishops of the country immediately. Plans will be promulgated after Easter, and be presented to the different congregations through priests.

CINCINNATI, March 12.—The latest phase of the financial troubles of Archbishop Purcell and his brother was the filing to-day of an assignment by the archbishop himself.

In the deed of assignment he recites that his brother, Edward Purcell, acting as his agent and representative, had incurred certain liabilities on his account, that he had conveyed certain property to him to provide for the payment of such debts, which Father Edward had attempted to do by deed of general assignment, but it being contended that such assignment discriminated against his creditors and is applicable only to the creditors of Edward Purcell, and wishing to make equal provision for all, he declares that all this indebtedness was contracted by Father Edward, acting as his agent, and he therefore makes a general assignment to John B. Maunix.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 13.—S. D. Field superintendent of the Electric Light Company of San Francisco, has combined the principles of several electric machines, so as to work the electric light and telegraph wires at the same time. To-day one of his machines here worked fifteen different circuits, varing from 100 to 180 miles long. This is the first successful experiment of the kind.

HARTFORD, March 13.—The legislative committee on woman suffrage reported against giving women the right to vote in school district meetings, also on liquor questions and in elections where they are taxpayers.

PHILADELPHIA, March 13.—At the annual commencement of the Women's Medical College to-day, the degree of doctor of medicine was conferred on twenty female graduates from various States.

WASHINGTON, March 14.—Dr. Woodworth, supervising surgeon general of the Marine Hospital service, died this morning of erysipelas and pneumonia.

BOSTON, March 14.—The Cape Ann Argus, of Gloucester, contains nearly two columns in regard to the supposed disaster to the Gloucester fishing fleet, giving the names of the schooners with a list of the crews value and insurance, stating that thirteen vessels are supposed to have gone down in the February gales, carrying with them one hundred and forty-three men, and causing fifty-three widows and one hundred and thirteen fatherless children.

CLEVELAND, March 14.—The Right Rev. Bishop Gilmore has issued a pastoral letter to the clergy of his diocese, which condemns the Irish World, published in New York, for being antagonistic to true Catholic principles. It condemns labor unions for their secrecy; forbids Catholic parents, under threats of ex-communication, from sending their children to the public schools, where Catholic parochial schools are easy of access, and gives the Hibernians a severe reprimand for not allowing the priests to act as their spiritual advisers. The bishop urges upon Catholics the necessity of subscribing to the Diocesan Catholic Journal in preference to all others, and repeats his order to young Catholics not to marry outside of their religious faith. His letter concludes with important suggestions as to funerals, etc.

BALTIMORE, March 16.—Richard Cook Tilghman, chief judge of the Orphan court for Queen Annes county, is dead, aged 72 years. He was a graduate of West Point, being in the same class with Joe. Johnson and Jefferson Davis. At the marriage of General R. E. Lee he acted as groomsman.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., March 17.—There was a disturbance at Helena yesterday growing out of the difficulty between a white man and a negro. It assumed such proportions that the governor ordered the Birmingham rifles to the scene. Everything is now quiet and no further trouble is apprehended. Helena is the principle coal mining point in this State.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., March 17.—Ex United States Senator George Goldthwaite died suddenly yesterday.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 17.—A dispatch from Victoria states that the steamer California arrived from Alaska this morning with news that the Indians are preparing for war. Her British majesty's ship Osprey and the United States cutter Walcott have reached Alaska.

The chief received the Osprey cordially, but informed her commander they could take the Walcott whenever they choose. The Walcott has gone to intercept a flotilla of hostile canoes, which were on the way to destroy the town of Sitka. The Osprey reinforced the Walcott with a number of marines and a Gatling gun. The situation is alarming, and the Osprey will remain until relieved by an American man-of-war.

WASHINGTON, March 17.—In the Democratic caucus to-night the first ballot for speaker resulted as follows: Randall, 75; Blackburn, 57; McMahon, 3; Morrison, 2; Cox, 1. This insures the nomination of Randall for speaker of the 46th congress, on the first ballot.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, March 11.—The Pall Mall Gazette says: A private letter from a high Indian official states that the people of Cashmere are dying of famine, and that at the present rate of mortality the province will be nearly depopulated by the end of the year.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 11.—The Golos publication of mortality statistics of this city during the past week shows the typhus has increased in virulence. Spotted typhus is also prevalent, and two fatal cases of Siberian plague have occurred.

LONDON, March 12.—In the House of Commons last night the motion of Sir Mitford Lawson, declaring that the inhabitants of the various localities should have the means of restraining, by some efficient system of local option, the issue of liquor licenses, was rejected by a vote of 252 to 164.

LONDON, March 12.—The Times correspondent at Pesth says: For well nigh a week Szegedin, the second commercial town in Hungary, has been in imminent danger of inundation from the River Theiss, which flows through the town.

Several large dykes protecting the back of the town have been broken and the safety of the town now depends on the embankment of the Alfold Railway, to strengthen which all efforts are concentrated.

PESTH, March 12, Evening.—The latest telegrams announce that the flood with a terrific roar is rushing from two sides over Szegedin. The horrors of the situation baffle all description. The town is, in fact, destroyed; two-thirds of it are now submerged, including the Citadel and the Post and Telegraph offices. Whole rows of houses are falling. The orphanage and synagogue are destroyed. All the inmates of the former were buried in the ruins.

LONDON, March 13.—The weather for the past ten days has been bright and fine, affording ample facilities for preparation at Windsor for the celebration to-day, in St. George's Chapel, of nuptial of the Duke of Connaught, son of Queen Victoria, and Princess Louise Margaret, daughter of Prince and Princess Frederick Charles, of Prussia. To-day the sky is cloudless and the weather beautiful.

The marriage presents are displayed in the white drawing room of the castle, and are being added to up to the last moment.

LONDON, March 13.—The Standard's dispatch from Pesth says: A hundred square miles in the neighborhood of Szegedin are flooded. The crops in this district are lost. The government has spent forty thousand florins for relief of the inhabitants.

PARIS, March 14.—The governor has chartered the Marseilles steamer Picardie to fetch 600 amnestied communists from New Caledonia.

LONDON, March 15.—Another mail, with one week's later news, has arrived at Madeira from Cape Town, the latest date being February 25. The Zulus remained inactive. The only fresh fighting which was reported resulted in the capture of some cattle. British reinforcements having arrived on the frigate Shah, from St. Helena, it had been deemed best to effect the relief of Col. Pearson from his isolated position at Ekowe.

LONDON, March 17.—The Lahore correspondent of the Times telegraphs that sufficient rain has fallen throughout that province to insure the safety of the spring harvest, thereby entirely altering the financial and political aspects of the situation, and affecting even the military by facilitating the supply of grain and forage.

Y. M. C. A. in Mobile.

We are pleased to learn that steps have been taken to organize a Young Men's Christian Association in Mobile. This will be agreeable intelligence to all who are interested in the moral, social and intellectual improvement of the young men of our community. A meeting for organization was held on Friday evening, at the Franklin Street Methodist Church, which was successful beyond the hopes of the most sanguine. It was largely attended by the young men of the various Protestant denominations, and was enthusiastic, and marked with a most satisfactory unanimity. The consultation was full and unrestrained. Mr. A. C. Danner was called to the chair, and Mr. J. Howland was requested to act as secretary. The meeting was addressed by Rev. Drs. Burgett and Palmer, and Rev. Messrs. Lowry, Moore, Richardson, and Messrs. Wm. March, Ira W. Porter, Dr. W. J. Murrell, T. J. LaPrade, and others. Under the influence of the appeals made in behalf of the young men of our community needing Christian influence, it was determined, without a dissenting voice, to organize at once an association among the Christian, young men of this place. A committee was appointed to prepare a constitution and by-laws, and report at an adjourned meeting to be held next Friday evening, at the Franklin Street Methodist Church.—Register, March 9.

Against Sunday Liquor Selling.

The Temperance Alliance of New Orleans has adopted the following petition to be presented to the Louisiana State Convention which meets in April: We should like to have the sale of liquors as a beverage prohibited altogether, but all good citizens ought to be able to agree on the Sunday question:

"We, the undersigned representatives of the associations and congregations set opposite our respective names, and citizens having at heart the future welfare and prosperity of this city, and irrespective of party affiliations, do most respectfully, after mature reflection, and with the most unlimited confidence that your legislation will be for the happiness as well as for the prosperity of our people, pray:

That on the framing of a constitution for future guidance and government, you will embrace a clause therein prohibiting the sale of any spirituous or malt liquors, wine, elder, or any intoxicating beverage whatever, on Sundays.

The baneful results of which are so glaring and apparent as to require no further present quotation than the statistical exhibit of the annual expenditure in this State for intoxicating beverages, say $42,000,000 against a total value of our cotton, sugar and rice productions for the same period $40 000,000.

It is safe to say of this vast amount of wealth squandered in a manner totally unproductive of any result save crime, poverty, idleness, disgrace and wretchedness to those who expend it, as well as incalculable suffering to their dependents, that a greater proportion thereof is expended on Sunday than on any other day of the week, a great number of people receiving their compensation for labor on Saturday night, and expend their earnings on Sunday in strong drink.

Your decided action in this matter will divert large sums of money thus expended to investments more useful and harmless, reduce the expenses of the State and taxation for the arrest, punishment and maintainance of criminals and support of paupers and unfortunates, and cannot fail to receive the indorsement of a vast majority of all the people of the State as well as the most favorable opinions of the enlightened of the entire universe.

The Plague.

The Bulletin of the Public Health, issued by the Surgeon General of the United States Marine Hospital service, for the week ending March 1, 1879, says:

Official reports of European medical officers in China show conclusively that true "bubonic plague" has prevailed extensively in that empire during the thirty years preceding 1873, when it was supposed to be wholly extinct. The reports also show that, owing to the meager facilities for communication with Central Asia, virulent epidemics may ravage extensive districts of that country without any knowledge of their existence extending to Europe. The reports present records of the disease having prevailed in the province of Yunnan, to which it seems to have been introduced from Burmah, during twenty of the thirty years in question, varying in intensity in different parts of the province, and in different years. The appearance of the disease was coincident with the breaking out of the rebellion against the Imperial Government, which was longer maintained, and suppressed with more violent measures in Yunnan than in any of the other provinces; conditions which undoubtedly contributed greatly to its virulence, as did also the superstitious practice of refusing to bury the dead, who are exposed on a bier to the sun until completely decomposed. The plague was very prevalent in Yunnan in 1871-2-3, and in the latter suddenly reappeared in Mesopotamia and Persia, gradually extending its area until, in 1877, it reached the shores of the Caspian Sea, prevailing especially at the town of Retsch, which has a direct trade with Astrakan. In May and November, 1877, a fever of intermittent type, accompanied with glandular swellings, prevailed at the port of Astrakan and in Wetlyanka and in other villages of that province, and in November, 1878, a similar affection again appeared at Wetlyanka; few deaths had occurred up to this time, but about December 1 the disease assumed the malignant character that has marked the present outbreak. The report of the Russian Medical Service of the Interior for 1877, which has just been made public, announces that 341 cases of Siberian plague were reported to the government during the year, the mortality being twenty-one per cent.; the principal outbreaks occurred in the provinces of Viatka and Tchernigaw, which are at a considerable distance from each other, and were contemporaneous with or occurred soon after the virulent prevalence of the disease in Persia.

From the above facts, which have been obtained from official sources, and are in the main well attested, it seems proper to conclude that instead of the late outbreak being due to the spontaneous regeneration of the virus of the plague in the Valley of Volga, or, at the furthest, in Persia, the disease was reintroduced from China into Persia, and thence to Russia, local conditions in each instance probably favoring its development. Of these conditions no authentic account will be obtained until the International Commission of Experts, who are visiting the infected district, make their report. The return of cold weather, combined with the stringent measures adopted by the government, seem to have confined the late violent outbreak to the limited district where it first appeared. The American ministers to Austria and to Russia report that the disease has manifested such an extremely virulent and contagious character that great alarm exists in the whole of eastern Europe, and urge upon the government the necessity of taking measures to prevent the possibility of the introduction of the disease into the United States. The measures already taken by this government for preventing the importation of goods from the infected districts, except under proper precautions are, for the present, considered sufficient for this purpose, especially if the ports of entry are kept free from the unsanitary conditions that favor the spread of epidemic disease.

Amount of Liquor Drunk.

Mr. William Saunders writes to an English journal that he has put to the test of actual comparison the statement that the use of intoxicating liquors is much less frequent in the United States than in England. According to a detailed statement supplied to him by Mr. Nimmo, the Chief of the Bureau of the Statistics at Washington, the consumption of alcoholic liquors in the United States during the year 1877 represents, quoting the prices at the average retail cost, in the States, a sum of £118,150,958, more than $500,000,000. From the recently-issued Excise returns for the United Kingdom, it appears that the sum represented by the consumption in the United Kingdom last year, quoting the prices at the average retail cost, was £142,008,231. Reckoning, however, the American quantities at English prices. Mr. Saunders finds that the £118 150 957 is reduced to $93 114 278. Taking, says the writer, the population of the United States at 45,000,000, and the consumption at 93,000,000 sterling, we see that a pro rata consumption in the United Kingdom, with a population of 33,000,000, would amount to £68 000,000 sterling, whereas the consumption is actually £142 000,000 sterling, more than 700,000,000, showing an excess of £74,000 000, and that the consumption of alcoholic liquors in the United Kingdom is more than double that of the same population in the United States. Since 1870 the consumption in the United States has diminished, whereas during the same period that of the United Kingdom has grown from £118,000,000 to £142 000,000. These facts have an important bearing upon the severe international competition which is now taking place, and may with advantage be considered in connection with the necessitous condition of a large proportion of our population.

Search the Scriptures.

"Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life! In this command, what does the word "search" mean? Does it mean that we are to search for particular texts or passages? Or that we are to read it through so many times or learn to say by rote so many verses so that we may always have on our tongue's end a few dozen of hackneyed texts? These are questions we may well ask ourselves, and try to answer, with the understanding. How to read the Bible is one of the most important and serious of all other matters pertaining to our moral or spiritual welfare. To know the Bible by heart, and have it in the heart, are things as different as the poles. Call aloud in the congregation, and how many will respond affirmatively to the question: Are you acting out the Christian principle? They cannot say yes, because they do not read the Scriptures "searchingly." They read its commands, but do not search for the meaning, and then obey the command. We must not only say "Lord, Lord;" but do the will of the Father. David's delight was to serve God with the "understanding." He searched for the meaning of the law, and prayed that the "meditations of his heart and the words of his mouth might be acceptable." If the "meditations and words" are acceptable, the actions and works will be acceptable also.

Every one can repeat the Lord's Prayer. How many "forgive" as they wish to be "forgiven?" Everybody knows how to "give good gifts" to their friends. How many give them to their enemies? Self is a paramount object of love by all. How many love their neighbor in the same manner?

We should search the Scriptures for the great essential truths they contain, and these even he who runs may find and read. When we have found them we should heed them, live them, act them, and thereby work out a complete salvation of our souls. We may not be able to inwardly digest all these great lessons and truths that we may find by searching (very few there are that can do that,) but we may understand a few, and these few are easy to find. Our Heavenly Father has made us weak and frail for the very reason that we must always depend upon His grace and mercy. However long we may live, we never cease to be children in His sight, and the smaller we are the better it will be for us. So let us "search the Scriptures" as babes "desiring the sincere milk of the word."

That War of Ideas.

Our brilliant friend, the editor of the New York Christian Advocate, of fraternal fame, has lost the conservatism of a few years ago, and developed into one of the extremest politico-ecclesiastical reformers. Verily, he out Haven's Haven. He also has grown, strangely and incurably, color-blind. "The heart of Gen. Logan's family," which is his son, who lately stood by the side of a colored probationer in a Chicago church, and with him formerly assumed the obligations of a Christian, is made the text for a few thoughts on Bishop Haven's old theme. The bravery of young Logan, who, at the peril of life and limb, stood in the fore-front of battle, shoulder to shoulder, with his colored brother and received the right hand of fellowship from a minister of the gospel of peace, is convincing evidence to the "great official" that "it will be safe to trust Senator Logan anywhere." You see he has raised his family well—no caste prejudice among them.

But hear the young editor a little further:

One can hardly fail to put this incident by the side of the treatment now received in Washington by the wife of Senator Bruce (colored. Neither wife nor friend of any Conservative Senator, south of Mason and Dixon's line, has ever recognized her existence socially. Senators from both parties in the North have been represented at Mrs. Bruce's receptions. The war of ideas is not yet ended.

So the black flag has been raised and social recognition the wild tocsin of this "war of ideas." Wonder if that Louisville fraternal speech has not faded from memory!

IN THE VIRGINIA CITIES.—In Richmond, Lynchburg, Danville, Petersburg, Norfolk and Portsmouth in the last ten years, Methodism has gained the following percentage of increase, viz: Increase of membership, 72 per cent; increase of salaries paid, 79 per cent.; increase of collections for superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased members of the Conference, 68 per cent.; increase of collections for domestic missions, 77 per cent; increase of collections for foreign missions, 620 per cent.; increase of Sunday schools, 46 per cent; increase of Sunday-school scholars, 11 per cent.; increase of churches, 48 per cent.; increase of parsonages, 300 per cent; increase of the value of church property, 42 per cent. The increase of the membership of the church in these cities severally is as follows: Richmond, 66 per cent; Lynchburg, 98 per cent; Danville, 154 per cent; Petersburg, 68 per cent.; Norfolk, 9 per cent; and Portsmouth, 41 per cent. In the smaller towns and circuits of the Conference the increase is much smaller, averaging 48 per cent. These facts demonstrate that whatever may be the case in New York and in the cities of New England, and of old England too, it cannot be said that Methodism has waned in the cities of Virginia, or that its progress has failed to keep pace with the strides of population and the growth of other ecclesiastical bodies. On the contrary, they prove by their own incontestable logic, that Methodism is in the vanguard of Virginia's progress. They show that Methodism's greatest success has been won in the six principal cities of the State—the social and commercial centers of the commonwealth—where denominational competition has been most active and powerful, and where worldliness has erected its most formidable barriers to the popularity and power of Methodistic doctrines and usages.—Correspondent of New York Methodist.

American Bible Society.

The stated meeting of the Board of Managers was held at the Bible House, Astor Place, on Thursday February 6th, at half past three P. M., Wm. H. Allen, Esq., LL. D. President, in the chair.

The Rev. James M. King, D. D. read the ninetieth Psalm and offered prayer.

The death of the Hon. James B. McKean, one of the Vice Presidents of the Society, was announced, and a committee was appointed to prepare a suitable minute on the subject for the records of the Board.

Grants of books were made to the American Seamen's Friend Society and to several other organizations. Fourteen volumes in raised letter were given for the blind; 900 volumes were granted for the foreign field, making a total of 2 195 volumes. Also books to the value of $1 025 30 were granted, including $500 for colportage work, and $31 56 for railroads.

Appropriations in money were made amounting to $14 585 79; including $14 053 for the yearly estimates of the Levant Agency.

Among the foreign letters submitted to the Board for information or as the basis of its action, were communications from the Rev. Isaac G. Bliss, D. D., giving an account of an interview with the King of Greece, and an estimate of necessary expenditures for the ensuing year; from Dr. Gulick at Shanghai, December 25th, with a sketch of a day's colportage on the Yangtse River; from Dr. Gore, at Mexico, January 14th; Mr. Milne at Monte Video, December 12; Mr. Blackford at Rio de Janeiro, January 24; also from Rev. J. W. Butler of Mexico, and Rev. M. Phillips of Yucatan, with reports of sales of Scriptures; Rev. S. C. Damon of Honolulu, with a remittance in return for books donated; Rev. J. M. Eirkson and Rev. V. Witting, with reports of Bible work in Sweden; Rev. W. H. Gulick, with an account of sales at the Santander fair; and Rev. S. C. Pixley of South Africa, in respect to the edition of the Zulu New Testament.

The receipts for January were $41,874 99; copies of Scriptures issued 58 266 volumes.

Dean Stanley lectured on "Presence of Mind" at the London Institution recently. To illustrate his subject, the Dean mentioned that in St. Giles in the Fields a clergyman was one Sunday going up to deliver a sermon, when the sexton informed him, in a quiet manner, that the church was on fire. If that quiet remark had led to a loud exclamation great mischief would have been done; but the clergyman ascended the pulpit, calmly gave out the text of his sermon, spoke a few words, and then gave out the benediction. As a result, all got out safe, and the clergyman who exhibited such presence of mind was subsequently made a bishop.

PRAYER.

If, when I kneel to pray
With eager lips I say
"Lord, give me all the things that I desire—
Health, wealth, fame, friends, brave heart, resolute fire;
The power to sway my fellow-men at will
And strength for mighty works to bound all ills"—
In such a prayer as this
The blessing I must miss.

Or if I only dare
To raise this faltering prayer
"Thy will, not mine, Lord, that I am poor and weak,
And cannot tell what things I ought to seek;
Therefore do not ask at all, but still
I trust Thy bounty all my wants to fill"—
My lips shall thus grow dumb,
The blessing shall not come.

But if I lowly fall
And thus in faith I say
Through Christ our Lord, I pray Thee give to me
Not what I would, but what seems best to Thee;
Of life or death, of sorrow or of strength
Use to Thy glory as Thou seest it right"—
My prayer shall then be heard,
The blessing shall not fail.

Homer College.

Mr. Editor: Inasmuch as the resolutions of the late Louisiana Annual Conference, published in the Advocate of January 1, seem to have been intended by their mover, Bro. J. B. Walker, and supporters, as a severe censure of the Board of Trustees of Homer College, I have thought it eminently proper to present some of the facts and circumstances connected with that action of the board which gave rise to said resolutions.

Believing that the Board of Trustees and that very respectable minority of the Conference ought to be heard through the same medium through which that majority of two has so unqualifiedly denounced the action of the board, I hope you will publish this communication.

It is well known that the Board of Trustees of Homer College was incorporated by the Legislature of Louisiana under the existing charter, and that, too, at the instance of the Louisiana Conference.

One of the provisions of this charter confers upon it the power "to sue," and makes it "that it may sue" and subject "to be sued," and also imposes upon it the entire management of the finances of the college. I hope the reader, and you, Mr. Editor, will please remember that the present incumbents had nothing whatever to do with the drafting of the charter. This was supervised by the Louisiana Annual Conference.

In January, 1871, the Conference resolved that Homer College ought to be endowed, and appointed an agent to procure subscriptions therefor, and expressed its perfect satisfaction with the success with which he met at several successive sessions by formal resolutions. It also elected a president for said college, and endorsed the action of the board in electing professors for the same, all of whom were to be paid from the interest due and collectable on the obligation obtained by said agent.

When the first installment of interest became due, subscribers were requested to pay, to which request many responded favorably, while others positively refused, "unless compelled by law to do so."

About this time the salaries of the president, elected by the Conference, and the professors, were demanded, and in two instances suits had been instituted against the board for said salaries.

The board, through its financial secretary, continued to urge the payment of amounts due by subscribers, in order that it might liquidate its obligations, but many of them still refused.

A new difficulty now presented itself to the board. Many of those who had been paying refused to make further payments, unless others were required to pay, and in some instances parties who had paid notified the financial secretary that they would demand a return of what they had already paid, if efforts were not made to collect from those who refused.

About this time, and after waiting nearly two years, the financial secretary was instructed to institute suit against delinquent debtors, which he did, in a few test cases, prior to the session of the Conference at Alexandria in December, 1874. The Conference at this session seemed to be somewhat indignant at the board for the institution of said suit, which was manifested by formal preamble and resolutions setting forth the action of the board, and refusing to appoint the parties nominated by the board as president and financial secretary. This action of the Conference seriously interfered with the finances of the college, as many of the subscribers supposed the Conference had unlimited control of the board, and were very bold in expressing their determination not to pay, many of whom would doubtless have met their obligations promptly but for this action of the Conference.

The board was now forced to test its right to manage the finances of the college before the district court, and there obtained a decision in its favor. The case, however, was appealed to the Supreme Court of the State, which court affirmed the judgment of the court below. Thus it will be seen that the board has been sustained by the highest judicial tribunal in this State.

At the late session of the Conference in New Orleans, the Conference Committee on Education being aware of the dissatisfaction of many of the members of the Conference with the board because of the institution of the suits above alluded to, determined to investigate the action of the board in this connection; and after a thorough examination of the whole matter by this committee composed of ministers and laymen, some of whom entered upon the duties of said committee with strong prejudices against the board, said committee reported favorably on Homer College and the actions of the board. This report not being satisfactory to some of the members of the Conference, was amended by the adoption of the resolution offered by Bro. J. B. Walker, by that majority of two, and of two only.

Will you be kind enough, Mr. Editor, to publish the whole of the report of the committee with regard to Homer College? I will be obliged if you will.

Now let it be distinctly remembered that these resolutions censure the board only for doing its duty, and exercising its rights under the charter, as interpreted by the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana, for trying to collect the money with which to pay its honest debts, contracted with the appointees of the Conference and others who had labored faithfully in an institution of the church fostered by the same Conference, a majority of two of whom so severely censure the board; and for doing exactly that for which it, at the instance of the Conference, was incorporated.

I suppose, however, that the board will survive the adoption and publication of these resolutions of censure though I will not attempt to predict the effects on the mover and that majority of two.

I am glad, Mr. Editor, that the majority of the Conference who thus stultified themselves was only a majority of two.

Thos. J. Upton.

Homer, La., Feb. 17, 1879.

Note by the Editor.—The editor was one who voted with the majority, because we believed that the collection of the notes by suits was inexpedient, injurious to the church, and detrimental to the cause of education. Those who voted to condemn the course of the Board of Trustees were, we doubt not, actuated by the best of motives, and by a high sense of duty. We have never questioned the validity of the notes for which suits have been instituted, but we have felt that it was a mistake, a very serious mistake, to enforce collection by legal proceedings. This is the matter of difference between members of the Conference in reference to Homer College. There is no self-stultification in this, because the point of difference has not been as to the legal validity of the notes, but as to the expediency of suing on them. The majority of the members of Conference were unwilling to be held responsible as tacitly endorsing this course, and, as honest and conscientious men, it was their right and duty to give expression to their convictions, especially as they had reason to believe the interests of the church and the cause of religion were being greatly damaged by the suits. The lawful is not always expedient. As to the Committee of Education at the last Conference having reported favorably on Homer College, the report certainly was not favorable in reference to the course of the Board of Trustees on the only serious point in dispute. The conclusion of that report as found in the printed minutes, and all that is accessible to us, is as follows:

"The silence between the Louisiana Conference and Homer College has been broken by a report from the Board of Trustees presented to this body, in which reference is made to the past, with an implied, if not expressed, desire for relations of amity. The board nominates and asks our confirmation of R. A. Smith as president of Homer College. Your committee, understanding that the legal relations of this body to said college are to-day what they were from the beginning, and without any endorsement of the past acts of the board, or its future action without the consent of the Conference, recommend the confirmation of R. A. Smith as president of Homer College.

"Without any endorsement of the past acts of the board, or its future action without the consent of the Conference." How such language as this can be tortured into an approval of Homer College in reference to the point of disagreement is to us wholly inexplicable. Threats and menaces under the circumstances are in bad taste, to say the least, and we very much regret the tone of Bro. Upton's remarks on the Conference floor and in the above communication. In our endeavor to do justice to both sides, we publish his communication. For the brethren with whom we have been compelled to differ, we have only the kindest feelings, and by no word of ours would we disparage them, or question the high and honorable motives by which they are controlled. We have all along deeply regretted that this agitation has been kept up in the Conference, and we yet hope that the trustees will see their way clear to conform their action in the future to the wishes of the Conference. The institution about which this controversy has arisen ought to be saved to the church, and made a prosperous and useful school. While measures are persisted in which the Conference cannot indorse, the college can gain little, and it must suffer much. We wish for peace and harmony, and we trust that something may be done to promote these ends. In conclusion, we have no idea of initiating a newspaper controversy. Bro. Upton has spoken for the trustees. Our comments have been made in a temperate and respectful spirit, and here we wish the matter to rest, so far as the Advocate is concerned.

A Woman Full of Good Works.

Mr. Editor: I read with melancholy interest the account given by Bro. Galloway in the Advocate of February 13 on the death of that eminently pious Christian sister, Mrs. Virginia G. Mills. While reading this account I was forcibly reminded, that she "being dead, yet speaketh."

Now that my good friend has gone to her reward, I deem it due her memory to note at least two affecting and delicate incidents of my personal acquaintance with Sister Mills, which have embalmed her name in my memory.

These incidents occurred under circumstances which fitly and beautifully expressed the refined and graceful, as well as earnest piety and consecration to God, which so eminently marked her life.

I was invited to call one day at her house, in Warren county, Miss., and baptize her infant son, the same who just preceded her to the grave. It was one of the most solemn and impressive services of the kind I had ever witnessed. The presence and power of God were sensibly felt. It was no mere formality, but that heartfelt consecration of Hannah, giving her darling Samuel up to God. After the baptism a few minutes were spent in social singing. I was about taking leave of the family, and a half eagle in gold was dropped into my hand. It was wholly unexpected, and I felt it was wrong for me to receive it, but it might appear that I was accepting a fee. When I hesitated my good friend assured me that no such thing was intended. Her husband, Judge Mills, joined with her in saying it was rather an offering to God and an expression of good will to the minister. I have known but few instances of the kind since in a ministry of nearly thirty years.

About three years after this I met Sister Mills again, and under the following circumstances: I had left home very early in the morning, having been detained by domestic affliction, hoping to reach an appointment thirty miles away by eleven o'clock the same day. I left my wife and children (some of them sick), with very scant supplies, and had not one cent of money. It was a week day. I was riding rapidly, and met a carriage, without observing who was in it; was in the act of passing, when I heard a female voice: "Is not that Bro. H.?" Responding affirmatively, I checked my horse; the carriage stopped. Returning to the carriage I recognized Sister Mills, then living in Anostra county, and in a different pastoral charge. After the customary salutation, and inquiries after health, etc., she said: "Bro. H., I have been anxious to see you for some days, as to ascertain your address." With this she drew from her satchel a silken purse, in which were several pieces of gold coin, and she continued: "I made a cotton crop myself this year, with my little trash gang. I promised the Lord that I would give the proceeds to such traveling preachers as in my judgment were most needy. I hope you will not take it offensively that I have included you in the list, and I ask you now, in the name of the Saviour, to accept your part of the proceeds of my crop," and handed me $20 in gold. Then pronouncing her benediction upon my labors, she left me, and went her way. I do not remember that I have ever spoken to her since. That was nearly twenty-five years ago.

These little tokens of true Christian sisterhood were but a tithe of the generosity of this good woman in the days when she had the means to do good. Though now there are few who are able even to do as well, yet I am sure if the Spirit was present there would be more frequent recurrence of these delicate and grateful attentions among Christian people toward their pastors, and others who often need what they might bestow, and yet not deprive themselves.

H. J. Harris.

Clover Hill, Miss., Feb. 19, 1879.

"Murphyites Dead" in Jackson, Miss.

Mr. Editor: There are a few of us here who, like Elijah of old, feel that we alone have been left, the only difference between our case and his, we are sure that we are not mistaken, as to the number left.

When we look around us and see the poverty, the ignorance of our country, the numbers that fill our State prisons, and a thousand other woes that I need not here mention, and when we think that three-fourths of all this is caused by the use of strong drink, what should we think of a minister or any Christian who would condescend to stoop so low as to "touch," "taste" or "handle" the "unclean thing?"

What check can be brought to bear upon our young men when they start off in the broad road of intemperance, when all they have to do is to look further down the road, and there see some of the prominent men of our country, some of whom are professed Christians, in the broad road that leads to destruction—men of standing, men of honor, men whom the young desire to follow? Such as they do more harm than a thousand drunkards; for where is the young man that will take a drunkard for his pattern? You won't find one in a thousand, but hundreds who start off with this plea: "These men drink moderately, so can I. I know when to stop. I am a man." Many have started off with this plea, and have prematurely filled the drunkard's grave. Eternity alone will have to reveal the number. They find out too late that they are not such men. "Look not upon the wine." "If eating meat cause my brother to offend I will eat no meat while the world stands." Oh, for more that have self-denial enough to adopt this sentence!

There are a few of us who feel that Satan is gaining too many souls by means of the wine-cup in this place, and we have labored to prevent it. When we started the Murphy movement here we received the cold shoulder of the very ones that should have been our supporters.

The question then arises: What shall we do? Shall we say; Go on young men, drink, but drink moderately. Do we desire to make more drunkards than we already have? Why look at the state of things now even, when it has to contend with the opposition of temperance people. Take these away, and what will be the result.

Mr. Wesley saw the danger of using it, and hence we find that it is condemned in the Discipline of our church, except as a medicine. And this is a very dangerous way to use it, for oh! how many use this cloak to justify them in the abusive use of it.

Some doctor has truly said that there was always hopes of reforming a man so long as he did not take it as a medicine; but when he did he was past all hopes. Yes, the Murphy movement is dead here; but why did it die is the question.

From the Work.

Pearlington, Mississippi Conference.

Mr. Editor: This circuit is about up to time in the matter of attention to its preacher. When the present incumbent arrived he found a neat, comfortable parsonage in charge of a committee of ladies, a smoking dinner in the stove, and many of the substantials and luxuries of life in the store-room. And since his arrival many such testimonies have found their way to the store-room. We might deal in personalities, and give details, but that would take up too much time and space. So you may just say Pearlington circuit is all right on this subject, and we trust on all subjects pertaining to the kingdom of God.

Yours in Christ,

Charles W. Calhoun.

Religion is the tie that connects man with his Creator, and holds him to his throne. If that tie is sundered or broken, he floats away a worthless atom in the universe—its popular attractions all gone, its destiny thwarted, and its whole future nothing but darkness, desolation and death.—Daniel Webster.

Obituaries.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

Mrs. Susie A. Vinson, wife of Mr. U. C Vinson, and daughter of Wm. H. and Sarah T. Flowers. She was born in Fayette county, Ga., January 31, 1855.

The writer became pastor of the church in Greenville in 1869. Mrs. Jennings, the wife of the late Dr. J. M Jennings of the Alabama Conference, formed a bible class in our Sunday-school, composed of girls and young ladies. In less than two years they were all happily converted to God. I will never forget the hour when, during a protracted meeting, she came to me and said: "Bro. Motley, the last one of my class has been converted." How it rejoiced her heart to see those committed to her charge rejoicing in their "first love." They all joined the Methodist Church. One of that class was the subject of this memoir. Susie Flowers was an attractive girl. Her personal appearances her virtues of mind and heart, her cheerful and lively disposition, made her a favorite among her associates. She was acknowledged worthy of the strongest friendship; and in return she gave the offering of an unselfish attachment. In the home circle she was looked upon with a pride worthy of her noble qualities of mind and heart.

By the Spirit of God, in her conversion, she was invested with the charms of the Christian graces. As she bloomed into womanhood, she carried along with her the influences of an early piety: and maintained, amid the revolities of society, her Christian integrity. In May, 1874, she was married. She entered upon this new relation with a sense of the duties incumbent on her as a wife; and for the discharge of those duties she had the resources of grace accumulated since her espousals to Christ. She proved herself worthy of the trust of her husband. God gave them a little boy—as a mother, she recognized her obligations, and sought to discharge them faithfully.

One who knew her well thus speaks in reference to her last hours: "She was rational up to within a few minutes before her death, and seemed to realize fully the nearness of her dissolution, and talked calmly of death and the bright future that awaited her. The only regret she expressed was the parting from her husband, little boy, and other loved ones, while yet so young. She charged her husband to train their child in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord." Her death was triumphant. Sometime before the end she would, although nearly exhausted, sing, occasionally, a verse of her favorite hymn: "Nearer my God to Thee."

W. M. Motley.

Thomas K. Young, M. D., the son of Dr. Thomas and Mrs. A. A. Young, was born July 3, 1850; graduated as A. M. from the Southern University on the twenty-third anniversary of his birth, July 3, 1872; and as M. D. from the University of Louisiana March 15, 1871. He immediately began the practice of medicine in the community where he had been reared, and soon attained distinction in the profession by his skill and success.

Myra E. Patton, the daughter of Robert S. and Angie M. Patton, was born May 7, 1857, and graduated from the East Mississippi Female College, June 10, 1875. Both families were of Claiborne county, Miss. Dr. Young and Miss Myra were married June 21, 1877.

Living remote from all infected districts they felt secure from the Southern plague, and when informed of severe illness in the family of Mr. Patton, did not suspect the presence of yellow fever; but one of the family had visited Fort Gibson at too late a date, and carried to his home the fearful infection; mother and son died. Our dear young friends finding themselves unexpectedly in a yellow fever atmosphere, determined to remain to nurse the sick of Mr. Patton's household. Heroically did they minister to the sick and dying until they were stricken down, and died, the husband October 5, the wife October 8, 1878. In the bloom of early youth they consecrated their lives to Christ, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Their earthly prospects were flattering, they promised not only to excel in the domestic and social relations of life, but also as cultivated Christians, in usefulness, as members of the Church. To human eyes it appears a mysterious providence that these two highly accomplished and lovely young Christians should be called away from earth so early in life. They were the children of the church, and were the objects of God's constant care and love, and it he saw best to take them from the dangers, trials and responsibilities of this present evil world to the joys of the heavenly, we have the consolation of believing the great object of their probationary being has been accomplished. They left a sweet little babe, who is well cared for by her widowed grand-mother Young. Thomas and Myra Young "were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided."

Mrs. Judith Miller, aged sixty-nine years, died in Waterproof, La., February 11, 1879, of pneumonia.

Again have the heavenly gates been ajar and dear Aunt Judith has passed the pearly portals—forever done with life's toils and cares—"asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep." She had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for thirty-nine years. She was a resident of Delhi, La., but at the time of her death was visiting relatives in Waterproof. She was very prayerful during her illness, and expressed perfect resignation to God's will. Her last words were comforting to her family and friends: "Rock of ages." Yes, she is safe in the cleft of the Rock, and in the enjoyment of that "Peace that is as a river."

It has not been long since she mingled her tears of sympathy with the writer for the loss of my own dear loved ones who left me so recently, and are quietly sleeping in yonder cemetery. How I weep with those who weep for her, having the sweet comfort of knowing "there are no tears in heaven." A world of change is this; to the unchangeable we tend, and whatever sorrows we have in life they work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory in that "unchangeable home, that mansion above."

A Friend.

Bro. William Bilbo died, at his residence in Lake Charles, Calcasieu parish, La., at fifteen minutes past twelve o'clock on Sunday morning, January 19, 1879. Our deceased brother was born in the State of Mississippi, March 25, 1814, and came to this State when he was about eighteen years old. He was one of the first settlers in this vicinity, and one of our first members. Bro. Bilbo, as a man, was a good one—one of these rare jewels of humanity so seldom found in this age—a man true to his friends under all circumstances. As a citizen, he loved and worked for the welfare of his country. As a church member, he was a model for all to follow. Converted to God when a young man, he remained true to his vows. He was always ready to attend upon the ordinances of the church, and help to support its institutions. His house was to the writer an ark of refuge, to which he could always turn knowing that a brotherly welcome awaited him. We looked upon him as a Christian father and brother in the full sense of the word. From his lips the young itinerant always received that sympathy so much needed and so anxiously looked for. He had an encouraging word, and much godly encouragement to give the young minister of Christ. He loved the church, he loved its ministry with a warm love, with a love that sacrificed self, and we loved him and always planned our work so as to have him for a starting point. But God, who knows best, has called him from the earthly church to the Church triumphant in heaven. Dear brother, we cannot write more about thy exemplary life. Thy name and deeds have left a sweet savor upon our memory, which Time with all its changes can never efface.

P. Gallin.

Izilee Thomas Lavelle Rye was born May 22, A. D. 1848, in Coosa county, Ala., and died at his home in Kemper county, Miss., December 10, 1878. On the thirtieth of March, 1870, he was united in marriage to Miss Frances Lee Montague, with whom he lived happily until his death. He was the son of Rev. W. S. Rye, who was a Methodist preacher in Alabama forty years ago, and lives now in Kemper county, Miss. In his childhood he was obedient to his parents, and loved them devotedly. Being surrounded by religious influences in childhood, it is not surprising that he became religious early in life. In the year 1868 he was converted at home—the home of his childhood. Thus the father and mother reaped the reward of faithful training and pious example. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at New Hope camp ground, in 1871, under the ministry of his uncle, Rev. D. G. W. Ellis. From the time of his conversion his life was a model of Christian purity. He told the writer, last summer, that he had never doubted his conversion. Bro. Rye was a sweet spirited man, and beloved by all who knew him. Kind and gentle in his family, the loss to the wife and sweet little babe is irreparable. Last year he appeared to be unusually happy in his religious experience, often being happy all day while at work. His sufferings were great during his sickness, but his death was as calm and beautiful as the setting sun.

D. A. Little.

Rev. John J. Harper was born in Auburn, Ala., June 15, 1840, and died near Rocky Springs, Miss., October 29, 1878. He was raised by a pious mother, his father having died when he was quite young, and he embraced religion in his youthful days. He came to Mississippi when a young man, and was married to Miss O. B. Towers, November 12, 1860, who was taken from him and their seven children by death, August 21, 1878. She had been a member of the church from her youth, and, although she was reserved in her religious profession, her life was circumspect and her death peaceful, her last testimony clear in the hope of a blissful immortality. Only a little over two months after her death her little daughter, Mattie, followed in the yellow fever epidemic, and in a few days more the husband and father. They have joined each other in the spirit world, and six are left behind to follow on. May the good Shepherd lead them and feed them in green pastures. Bro. Harper was a useful man in the community, and gave his influence to the support of education, morality, and all the enterprises of the church. A few years of his life were spent in teaching school, and in this avocation he was successful in giving satisfaction to his patrons, and was greatly beloved by his pupils. This was perhaps his appropriate field for labor. He was a pious man, and his intentions were good, and his benevolence was so large that he sometimes transcended his ability in his efforts to meet demands upon him. He had held various offices in the church, as trustee, Sunday-school superintendent, steward and exhorter, but he was impressed with the duty of preaching the gospel. The Quarterly Conference, recognizing his feelings and qualifications, granted him license, in 1877, to preach the gospel. He then began to exercise his gifts in that way, and had been preaching about a year when he died. He was thinking seriously about joining the itinerancy, and had asked advice from the writer in regard to it; but the way was not clear, and he was directed to follow the openings of Providence. Death decided the question. He rests from his labors.

JESUS ONLY.

Thou one stald Rock in life's tempestuous sea,
To Thee I come!
Henceforth—all else unstable—but in Thee
I find my home.
Rest of my soul, once weary, peaceful now,
The central object of my spirit's joy art Thou.

Though All should cast me out, yet still in Thee
I'll put my trust;
Mine is a treasure time and tide defy,
And moth and rust.
Give me, O Lord, the sympathetic heart
That lives upon Thy love, and cannot live apart.

O Jesus! fix thine image on my soul,
That there I may
Gaze on Thy beauty till I am made whole;
And every ray
From this world's sinking suns that own not Thee
Dies down in Thine own light and its obscurity.

Ecclesiastical Gimcracks.

BY THE REV. C. A. STORK, D. D.

I suppose you have heard of the going over of Dr. Gaus, of the Reformed Church of this city, to the Church of Rome. It has made quite a stir in religious circles here; and, as he was a near neighbor and acqualntance of mine, it seems to bring the matter of going toward Rome close home. He was, I believe, thoroughly honest in his convictions, and, though I deplore his error and the scandal his going has made, I have nothing severe to say of him. I have no doubt he has suffered very deeply in the step he has taken. He has gone, and a great chasm separates us, and with him I have no more to do.

But now comes the question of how he came to go. To answer that, we should have to get inside of his breast, there are so many invisible influences that unite to impel a man to such a step. But at the very time his departure was announced I received by mail a publication which set me thinking about the path by which nearly all these converts to Rome take their departure.

I will copy the title of this document and then make some comments on its contents: "Cox & Sons' Illustrated Catalogue of Church Furniture, Decoration, Gothic Metal Work, including Church Plate and Lighting Arrangements, Altar Cloths, Carpets, Hangings, etc."

It is a quarto pamphlet of fifty pages, crowded with a vast collection of church belongings, the most of which, I think, might be classed under the title of Ecclesiastical Gimcracks. I do not wish to be disrespectful to my brethren, who look upon these belongings as sacred and essential to God's service; but, as I look over these pages, crowded with things the meaning of many of which are buried in deepest mystery to my mind, there is only one word expresses my feeling about the matter. I say to myself: "Gimcracks." I want to be reverential and sympathetic; but I cannot help it—the word will steal to my lips: "Gimcracks." I think of the time when Christ took a fishing-boat for his pulpit, and preached to the crowd on the shore; of the first church that met in the upper room at Jerusalem; and it seems a long way we have come to "Messrs. Cox & Sons' Illustrated Catalogue of Church Furniture."

I know we must not think of the simplicity of the Early Church in its arrangements as anything essential. We may be as gorgeous and elaborate in our churches as the New Jerusalem pictured in St. John's Revelation, and still be as truly Christian as any conventicle in a barn. But the trouble with these brethren who are sidling off to Rome, and on the way patronize Messrs. Cox & Sons with their "Illustrated Catalogue," is that all their gorgeousness and elaborateness of church furnishing is something very sacred to them. These wonderful articles of church furniture, with the wonderful names and occult uses, are as awful in their eyes as the Urim and Thummim and the Sacred Ark and the Mercy Seat to the Jew.

I look down this index of 176 separate articles of church belongings, and I am lost in the abyss of my own ignorance.

Let me tell you some of the sacred things I find here. Near the top of the list I read: "Affinity Tables." And pray what is an "Affinity Table?" Do you know, my brother, who are learned in all things that pertain to the church? I know what chemical affinity is, and elective affinity we understand; but what is an "Affinity Table?" What do they do with it? Can it mean a table that has a leaning in a certain direction? But a table in the house of the Lord ought not to lean at all; but stand bolt upright.

"Credence Brackets" I turn over to the page where these are printed; but I cannot see how a "Credence Bracket" differs from the things my wife sticks in every corner to hold vases and flower-pots. What is a "Credence Bracket?"

"Fauld Stools" Who knows what a "Fauld Stool" is? Is it only a churchly way of spelling folding stool? I suspect "fauld stool," after all, is only our common camp stool used in crowded churches.

Then there are "Litany Desks;" though what one wants with a special desk for the litany passes me. And there are "Maniples," whatever they are; and "Chalice Veils" and "Pastoral Staves," and "Pede Mats." What can a "Pede Mat" be? And then there are "Sedilia." That, I take it, means seats. But how do "Sedilia" differ from vulgar benches and chairs, and stools and pews? And there are "Fontlets." That, of course, means little fonts, and we all know the use of fonts. But what is the peculiar function of a "Fontlets." Do they baptize and sprinkle the "Fonts" and thumps at the "Fontlets?" That is putting a very fine point on the matter of baptism.

But the thing that puzzles me most of all in these sacred pages is a picture of what is entitled a "Polished Oak Font Bucket" Here it is, as much like an ordinary well-bucket as one pea is like another, only on the metal hoops are engraved the words: "One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism" Now what is that "Font Bucket" for? Do they draw the water out of the well with it for baptism; or do they carry the water to the font in it; or do they use it to take the water out of the font after the baptism is over?

And so I might go on. There is food for thought in this "catalogue." But, among the many puzzling things in the collection, there is one I have made out, and I confess it fills me with admiration. It is called a "Devotional Chair." "A Devotional Chair!" And what can that be? Is it according to antiquity and the fathers to perform one's devotions sitting in a chair? In the Scriptures the saints did not sit in chairs when they approached God. They stood up to adore, or kneeled to supplicate, or fell on their faces to confess. But I turn to the picture. It is a chair with a double seat. That is, there is the usual seat in the ordinary place, and below it, where the lower rounds should be, is another seat. And what is that lower seat for? I will tell you, and then you may admire with me this bit of sacred ingenuity. When you begin your devotions you meditate or read your Bible. This you do seated on this upper seat. But presently it is time to pray. Then you rise, turn back the upper seat, which is hinged at the back, and lo! there is the lower seat, just the right height for your knees, while on the top of the chairback is a convenient rest for the head.

Now that is ingenious. That is one article in this great catalogue of "The Christian is taught of God, by His Word and the Holy Spirit, to trust in the promises of salvation through the work of Jesus Christ. He finds his guide in the Word of God, and commits the keeping of his soul into the hands of God. He looks for no assurance beyond what the Word can give him; and if his mind is troubled by the cares and fears which may assail him, he can go nowhere but in prayer to the throne of grace and to Scripture." "The Christian religion is a revelation. The natural man cannot know it. There is no philosophy in my religion." But though the natural works of God can never by any possibility come in contradiction with the higher things that belong to our future existence, and must, with everything concerning Him ever glorify Him, still I do not think it at all necessary to tie the study of the natural sciences and religion together, and in my intercourse with my fellow creatures that which is religious and that which is philosophical have ever been two distinct things."

In 1854 he delivered a course of afternoon lectures at the Institution, Prince Albert in the chair. In the opening sentences of the lecture on deficiency of judgment Faraday said: "I shall be reproached with the weakness of refusing to apply those mental operations which I think good in respect of high things to the highest; I am content to bear the reproach. Yet even in earthly matters I believe "the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead,' and I have never seen anything incompatible between those things of man which can be known by the spirit of man which is within him, and those higher things, concerning his future, which he cannot know by that spirit."

Faraday came to the study of the laws by which God governs the forces of nature fully convinced that there could be no more noble subject for the exercise of man's intellect. But he approached the Deity in his rule over men now and forever, saying: "The Lord is in His holy temple, let all the earth keep silence before Him." In that sense the devout philosopher did keep his religion and his science apart, but he could not, and probably had no wish to keep them absolutely separate. Take, for instance, the following extract: "When I consider the multitude of associated forces which are diffused through nature, when I think of that calm balancing of their energies which enables those most powerful in themselves, most destructive to the world's creatures and economy, to dwell associated together and be made subservient to the wants of creation, I rise from the contemplation more than ever impressed with the wisdom, the beneficence and grandeur beyond our language to express of the Great Disposer of all."—Sunday Afternoon.

The Vision of Faith.

In the exercise of our perceptive faculties, in order that the reality of things shall be detected, proper subjective powers of appreciation are requisite. The seeing is not all of the eye, nor the hearing of the ear. The same field of vision presented to different spectators, though in all alike the organs of sight may be unimpaired, will show to each different objects of sight. The perceptive faculties lie back of the organs of sense, and these lay hold of, or pass over, the things presented to the outward senses, according to the beholders' several mental aptitudes. The artist sees one set of properties in a landscape, and the civil engineer quite another, and the farmer and the military commander each sees his own set of properties, differing each from all the others. So in the exercise of religious faith there must be a subjective adaptation of the soul to the things presented for its acceptance in order that its evidences shall produce their proper convictions. And because these subjective conditions are largely, though for the most part indirectly, subject to our volitionary actions, our inability to believe becomes sin, and the blindness of unbelief becomes manifest.

In all rational inquiries a readiness to accept the truth on proper evidence is a condition requisite to success, and therefore a specifically skeptical habit of mind is unfriendly to rational inquiry. And because the unrenewed heart in man is both without spiritual perceptions, and also opposed in character to spiritual things, its normal state is one of stubborn unbelief, which must be reversed by an exterior force before it can believe the truths of God's word. In our Lord's time his words were spoken to the promiscuous multitude, and while some believed, and others believed not, he charged the unbelief of these to the blindness of their hearts, and yet held them guilty for their lack of faith.

It must, therefore, be accepted that simply rational conviction, however clear and comprehensive, is not the same with Christian faith; a man may possess that in all its completeness, and yet remain, spiritually, an unbeliever. But the converse of this statement is not true, since no one can have the faith that comes by the Divine Spirit who denies the essential truths of religion. Christian faith is not independent of the rational belief of the truth, but it is also something incomparably more and higher. It is a recognition, as real entities, of things that lie quite beyond the range of the senses, and that are not detected by the farthest researches of the understanding. Man is a living soul, dwelling in a spiritual world, and in his essential nature he is endowed with powers adapting him to know and appreciate spiritual things. True sin has blinded his spiritual vision, and blunted the soul's sensibilities; but his wonderful capabilities still remain to him, not enabling him to effectuate his own redemption, but to receive it from another. To produce in man the power to believe is the work of the Holy Spirit, who not only gives light to the soul, but also that power to see, when the light is given. The words of Christ spoken to the outward sense, and received in the natural understanding, are not immediately life giving. The Divine Comforter must reveal in the soul the words of Christ, must reproduce them to the quickened powers of the spiritual nature, in order to their effective action. The faith faculty of the soul is, in the carnal mind, so dulled by original sin, that there is no longer either power to know the truth or to obey it if it were known. As with natural vision, which requires both the eye and the light, so the vision of faith demands the presence of the corrected faith faculty, and the illumination of the Holy Spirit shed forth upon the sacred verities of the gospel.—National Repository.

DOGMATIC THEOLOGY.—A speaker in a Baptist meeting said: "I have been in the Indian Territory, and I tell you the Indian Baptists believe in dogmatic theology. At each door of every Baptist church stands a deacon with a hickory rod, watching for the dogs; and when one comes within his reach, he catches it." Country churches nearer home would not be injured by having some expounders of dogmatic theology.

Religious Intelligence.

—The General Synod of the Moravian Church, which meets every ten or twelve years, is announced to meet at Herrnhut, Saxony, May 26, 1879. Important matters relating to the peculiarities of the denomination are to be considered.

—The total amount of money received by the American Board of Commissioners for foreign missions, in November, was $20,611 61. The total amount received by the American Baptist Missionary Union for foreign missions was $6,494 50.

—The Baptist Missionary Union supports two colleges—one in Burmah and one in India—for the higher culture of Christian young men; and two theological seminaries for training a native ministry, besides a mission-school for each missionary to fit the native helpers for their work.

—The mission to the Friendly Islands has ceased to be a charge, and has become a contributor to the treasury of the Wesleyan Missionary Society to the amount of from £1,000 to £2,000 a year—a larger sum of money, probably, than had ever been seen in the entire group before the introduction of Christianity.

—The California Advocate, of the fourteenth ultimo, says: "On Sunday the Rev. O. Gibson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, baptized nine Chinese converts in Oakland, and a Chinese woman and her children at the mission in this city. The attendance at the chapel on Jackson street and at the mission-house is increasing."

—The late Princess Alice had once been brought to admire the writings of Strauss, and was thought to have sympathized with some of his views, but the death of her little son, says the Record, became the means of leading her to think, "so that she finally came to seek and find peace in a firm faith in Jesus Christ."

—At Newark, England, a series of evangelistic services, conducted by Mr. Robinson Watson, of Liverpool, has resulted in great good, from 150 to 200 persons having been led to religious decision and to connect themselves with the Methodist or other churches. Mr. Watson has for several years past been engaged in this work, and has been instrumental in great good.

—The Scottish Council of the Liberation Society has issued a series of "Suggestions for the Guidance of the Friends of Disestablishment in view of the approaching election." They recommend an uncompromising policy, and the refusal of support to any candidate who is opposed to the putting of all good subjects on a footing of religious equality before the law.

—Pope Leo in a recent letter to one of the German Bishops said: "We have turned our thoughts in preference toward the noble German nation; but God alone knows whether the work is near being crowned with success. He also declared that he should continue the same path he had hitherto pursued. In conclusion the Pope said: "We must pray God to lead the noble and powerful Emperor of Germany and the personages at his side to show proofs of more disposition toward good will.

—As an indication of the rapidity with which Christianity is making its way in Japan, it is stated that one of the leading printing-offices in Tokio has begun the publication of a paper in the interests of the Christian religion as a matter of enterprise. It is solely a native undertaking, none of the missionaries having anything to do with it.

CEYLON.—Protestant missionaries went to Ceylon about sixty-five years ago. There are now about thirty European and American missionaries on the island, ninety native ministers, and about thirty thousand native Christians; 2,943,597 copies of Bibles, Testaments and portions, were circulated by the British and Foreign Bible Society within its financial year just closed. The expenditure for this enormous issue at home and abroad amounted to £227,865 15s, being an increase of £10,475 5s, as compared with the previous year. This increase is wholly due to the expensive and costly effort made in connection with the recent war in the east of Europe.

—In a letter from Miss Lochie Rankin, the first lady sent out by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, dated at Yokohama, Japan, she says: "We were met by Mr. Maclay, who brought me a letter from Mr. and Mrs. Lambuth, and kindly took our whole party to his pleasant home. The voyage was a very pleasant one, despite the seasickness. We leave for Shanghai this afternoon, on the Nogoya Marie."

—Something has given way in Scotland. The Glasgow Established Presbytery has adopted a report approving the running of street horse-cars "within certain assignable limits" on Sunday for the accomodation of church-goers. It was reasoned that, if the rich were allowed the use of their private carriages on Sunday, the poor should not be deprived of such accomodations as they could afford. On the other hand, a meeting of workingmen disapproved the Sunday cars, and the Rev. Fergus Ferguson sent them a letter sympathizing with their views.

—A London mercantile house, Messrs. Hitchcock, Williams & Co., St. Paul's Churchyard, is the home of a missionary society of the young men of the establishment, which held its thirty-sixth anniversary December 13th. One of the heads of the house made an address, in which he mentioned the fact that one of the clerks—"another one," he said—had entered the missionary work, and was about to go out to North Queensland. Then addresses were delivered by several missionaries. This Society contributes to the principal missionary societies and pays half the cost of supporting a city missionary in its own district.

—The See of Durham, with its handsome income of about $40,000 a year, is to be filled by Canon Lightfoot, at Lord Beaconsfields's nomination. Dr. Joseph Barber Lightfoot, who is so well known in this country as a biblical scholar, was born in 1829, educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, ordained deacon in 1854, and appointed professor in Cambridge in 1875. He will take his seat in the House of Lords at once. He will be the 821 occupant of the See of Durham. The Times says:

"On the Episcopal Bench the Bishop of Durham ranks next after the Bishop of London and before the Bishop of Winchester. Half a century ago it was generally considered the wealthiest and best endowed bishopric in England, and its holder was a sort of prince bishop, the very assizes being held, jointly, at least, in his name. But these and other secular prerogatives were lopped off from the See by successive enactments, the great wealth of the See being handed over at the same time to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners."

—The amount necessary to establish a Protestant daily newspaper in Paris is reported to be subscribed, namely $40,000, represented by 2,000 shares of $20 each. M. Revellaud has declined the editor's chair, not from any lack of interest in the project, but because of the large field opening before him as an evangelist and the frequent calls for his services. His religious addresses are attracting large audiences and are followed by most encouraging results. Definite and full reports are not yet published, only an item now and then comes to the light. For example, it is reported that at one place, after two lectures, 200 of the audience renounced Popery, and formed a Protestant congregation.

—The Rev. R. W. Dale is one of three writers on the question whether Revival Services have been a blessing to the church? In the February number of the English Congregationalist. In the course of his article he gives the following testimony respecting the character of Mr. Moody's converts in Birmingham: "I think," he says, quoting from the secretary of his church, the Carr's Lane; "that 150 additions to Carr's Lane may be considered as the result of Mr. Moody's mission, and that 120 maintain their profession—100 still with us. Half of the 150 were strangers to Carr's Lane. It should be understood that of the 20 per cent. who do not maintain their profession there are some of whom we have simply lost sight, through the removal to other congregations or other towns, without giving us notice. We do not know that they are all doing badly. They have simply disappeared. Some must have died." He also says Mr. Moody's meetings gave a "permanent impulse to our work, raised the general temperature of our church life, brought into Christian work those who were not at work before, and inspired those that were with more earnestness."

CHURNING.

I'm such an unfortunate dog, oh, dear
To leave my nap and the sunshine clear,
And down in the cellar—the cold dark place—
I must turn my steps and sorrowful face,
And begin the daily churning.

To be sure I've enough to eat, you know,
And I can rest while the men must mow;
But oh! how I'd like to hide away
When I hear them come to the door and say
"It's time for the dog to be churning"

So here I tread, and the wheel goes round,
And the dasher comes down with a dismal sound;
But after awhile the butter is done,
Then off I go to some richer fun
Than this weary, dreary churning.

There's a lesson, though, in this work of mine,
That thou, little one, may'st take to thine
We each have our duties, both great and small,
And if we want butter for bread at all,
Some one must do the churning

And then, again, I think that this life,
With its tread-mill of duties, joy and strife,
Is like to a churn—Press on! Press on!
For by and by the work will be done
With no more need of churning.

The Old Man Always Right.

BY HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN.

I take it for granted that you have been in the country, and seen a very old farm-house with a thatched roof, and mosses and small plants growing wild upon the thatch. There is a stork's nest on the summit of the gable; for we can't do without the stork. The walls of the house are sloping, and the windows are low, and only one of the latter is made so that it will open. The baking-oven sticks out of the wall like a little fat body. The elder-tree hangs over the paling, and beneath its branches, at the foot of the paling, is a pool of water in which a few ducks are disporting themselves. There is a yard dog, too, who barks at all comers.

Just such a farm-house stood out in the country; and in this house dwelt an old couple—a peasant and his wife. Small as was their property, there was a single article that they could do without—a horse, which made a living out of the grass it found by the high-road. The old peasant rode into town on this horse and often his neighbors borrowed it from him, and rendered the old couple some service in return for the loan of it. But they thought it would be best if they sold the horse, or exchanged it for something that might be more useful to them. But what might this something be?

"You'll know the best, old man," said the wife, "It is a fair day today, so ride into town, and get rid of the horse for money, or make a good exchange, which ever you do will be right to me. Ride to the fair."

And she fastened his neckchief for him, for she could do that better than he could; and she tied it in a double bow, for she could do that very prettily. Then she brushed his hat round and round with the palm of her hand, and gave him a kiss. So he rode away upon the horse that was to be sold or to be bartered for something else. Yes, the old man knew what he was about.

The sun shone hotly down, not a cloud was to be seen in the sky. The road was very dusty, for many people, who were all bound for the fair, were driving, or riding, or walking upon it. There was no shelter anywhere from the sunbeams.

Among the rest was a man trudging along, and driving a cow to the fair. The cow was as beautiful a creature as any cow could be.

"She gives good milk, I'm sure," said the peasant. "That would be a very good exchange—the cow for the horse."

"Hallo, you there with the cow" he said. "I'll tell you what—I fancy a horse costs more than a cow, but I don't care for that; a cow would be more useful to me. If you like, we'll exchange."

"To be sure I will," said the man; and they exchanged accordingly.

So that was settled, and the peasant might have turned back, for he had done the business he came to do; but as he had once made up his mind to go to the fair, he determined to proceed merely to have a look at it; so he went on to the town with his cow.

Leading the animal, he strode steadily on; and after a time he overtook a man who was driving a sheep. It was a good fat sheep, with a fine fleece on its back

"I should like to have that fellow," said our peasant to himself. "He would find plenty of grass by our paling, and in the winter we could keep him in the room with us. Perhaps it would be more practical to have a sheep instead of a cow. Shall we exchange?"

The man with the sheep was quite ready, and the bargain was struck. So the peasant went on in the high-road with his sheep.

Soon he overtook another man, who came into the road from a field, carrying a great goose under his arm.

"That's a heavy thing you have there. It has plenty of feathers and plenty of fat, and would look well tied to a string and paddling in the water at our place. That would be something for my old woman; she could make all kinds of profit out of it. How often she has said: 'If we only had a goose!' Now, perhaps, she can have one; and if possible, it shall be hers. Shall we exchange? I'll give you my sheep for your goose, and thank you into the bargain."

The other man had not the least objection; and accordingly they exchanged, and our peasant became proprietor of the goose.

By this time he was very near the town. The crowd on the high road became greater and greater; there was quite a crush of men and cattle. They walked in the road, close by the palings; and at the barrier they even walked into the toll-man's potato field, where his one fowl was strutting about, with a string to its leg, lest it should take fright at the crowd, and stray away and looked very cunning. "Cluck, cluck" said the fowl. What it thought when it said this I cannot tell you; but as soon as our good man saw it, he thought, "That's the finest fowl I've ever seen in my life! Why it's finer than our parson's brood hen On my word, I should like to have that fowl. A fowl can always find a grain or two, and can almost keep itself. I think it would be a good exchange if I could get that for my goose."

"Shall we exchange?" he asked the toll-taker.

"Exchange" repeated the man; "well, that would not be a bad thing."

And so they exchanged; the toll-taker at the barrier kept the goose, and the peasant carried away the fowl.

Now, he had done a good deal of business on his way to the fair, and he was hot and tired. He wanted something to eat, and a glass of brandy to drink; and soon he was in front of the inn. He was just about to step in when the hostler came out, so they met at the door. The hostler was carrying a sack.

"What have you in that sack?" asked the peasant.

"Rotten apples," answered the hostler "a whole sackful of them—enough to feed the pigs with."

"Why, that's terrible waste! I should like to take them to my old woman at home. Last year the old tree by the turfhole only bore a single apple, and we kept it on the cupboard till it was quite rotten and spoilt. 'It was always property,' my old woman said; but here she could see a quantity of property—a whole sackful. Yes, I shall be glad to show them to her." "What will I give? I will give my fowl in exchange."

And he gave the fowl accordingly, and received the apples which he carried into the guest-room. He leaned the sack carefully by the stove, and then went to the table. But the stove was hot; he had not thought of that. Many guests were present—horse dealers, ox-herds, and two Englishmen—and the two Englishmen were so rich that their pockets bulged out with gold coins, and almost burst; and they could bet too, as you shall hear.

"Hiss-s-s, hiss-s-s." What was that by the stove? The apples were beginning to roast.

"What is that?"

"Why, do you know—" said our peasant.

And he told the whole story of the horse that he had changed for a cow, and all the rest of it down to the apples.

"Well, your old woman will give it to you well when you get home!" said one of the two Englishmen. "There will be a disturbance."

"What—give me what?" said the peasant. "She will kiss me, and say 'What the old man does is always right!'"

"Shall we wager?" said the Englishmen. "We'll wager coined gold by the ton—a hundred pounds to the hundred weight!"

"A bushel will be enough," replied the peasant. "I can only set the bushel of apples against it; and I'll throw myself and my old woman into the bargain—and I fancy that's piling up the measure."

"Done—taken!"

And the bet was made. The host's carriage came up, and the Englishmen got in, and the peasant got in; away they went, and soon stopped before the peasant's hut.

"Good evening, old woman."

"Good evening, old man."

"I've made the exchange."

"Yes, you understand what you're about," said the woman.

And she embraced him and paid no attention to the stranger's guests, nor did she notice the sack.

"I got a cow in exchange for the horse," said he.

"Heavens be thanked!" said she. "What glorious milk we shall have, and butter and cheese on the table! That was a capital exchange!"

"Yes, but I changed the cow for a sheep."

"Ah, that's better still!" cried the wife. "You always think of everything. we have just pasture enough for a sheep. Ewe's milk and cheese, and woolen jackets and stockings. The cow cannot give those, and her hairs will only come off. How you think of everything!"

"But I changed away the sheep for a goose."

"Then this year we shall really have roast goose to eat, my dear old man. You are always thinking of giving me pleasure. How charming that is! We can let the goose walk about with a string to his leg, and she'll grow fatter still before we roast her."

"But I gave away the goose for a fowl!" said the man.

"A fowl? That was a good exchange," replied the woman. "The fowl will lay eggs and hatch them, and we shall have chickens; we shall have a whole poultry-yard! Oh, that's what I was wishing for."

"Yes, but I exchanged the fowl for a sack of shriveled apples."

"What? I must positively kiss you for that," exclaimed the wife. "My dear, good husband! Now, I will tell you something. Do you know, you had hardly left me this morning, before I began thinking how I could give you something very nice this evening. I thought it should be pancakes with savory herbs; I had eggs and bacon, too, but I wanted herbs. So I went over to the schoolmaster's—they have herbs there, I know—but the schoolmistress is a mean woman, though she looks so sweet. I begged her to lend me a handful of herbs. 'Lend!' she answered me, 'nothing at all grows in our garden, not even a shriveled apple. I could not even lend you a shriveled apple, my dear woman!' But now I can lend her ten, or a whole sackful. That I'm very glad of. That makes me laugh!" And with that she gave him a sounding kiss.

"I like that" exclaimed both the Englishmen. "Always going down hill, and always merry, that's worth the money." So they paid a hundred weight of gold to the peasant, who was not scolded, but kissed.

"Yes, it always pays, when the wife sees and always asserts that her husband knows best, and that whatever he does is right.

Death Settled That Question for Him."

So writes a minister of a brother who was perplexed about his duty to enter the traveling ministry. He was taken away from the scene of all perplexing questions. Before he had made up his mind on one there came an end to all. In his case it was well, for he was a conscientious and faithful Christian man. It may be otherwise sometimes. Halting and hesitating, and wasting the precious years, the opportunity passes, and life ends before the mind is made up. Death settles the question as to the performance, but the responsibility travels on, and meets us hereafter. The call to preach may be sometimes settled in this way, because there has been waywardness and perverseness in resisting it. The call to other religious duties—to enterprises for the furtherance of the gospel, building of churches, devotion to specific church work—are revolved, and remain long unsettled, until death comes in to decide. The last hours of Christians bring revelations of what had been thought of and meditated, and partly purposed, and of what they would have done had life been spared. Gifts and legacies for benevolent objects have occupied the mind, and the conscience has been troubled about the stewardship of money which might be devoted to the advancement of Christ's kingdom. Plans are, however, not matured, conclusions were not regarded as urgent, the debate between conscience and covetousness has gone on, and death comes in to settle the question.

Often while men are revolving the subject of making their wills, and considering what disposition to make of their estates, there comes a knock at the door, and there is no further trouble about it. The rich man thought within himself: "What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow my fruits?" His plans to pull down and build greater, and then to enjoy his abundance, were determined on. But he was never permitted to carry them out. God settled all for him in a single night. How many dreams of pleasure and of prosperity are thus dispelled by the dread summons? Thousands of young men are trying to decide upon the business of life, but, before the next Christmas bells ring, the matter will be determined for many of them in a way they do not now think of. Parents are anxiously thinking of the careers that their children will enter, and the probable success that will crown the choice. In many cases there will be a sad intervention thought of, but not seriously considered, and there will be no further care as to their future in this world. Men are debating with themselves concerning business enterprises, investments, and the best methods of making and taking care of their fortunes. Some are planning a trip to Europe, a summer in the mountains, the purchase and embellishment of new and beautiful homes. Laudable projects they may be, and reasonable, but the dark shadow will fall upon some of them.

And in mercy this will sometimes be. Nearly wound up in his affairs, and at the end of his row, the unfortunate toiler sees no way out of his troubles. It looks like want, humiliation and endless turmoil ahead. There are storms breeding, calamities impending. But they are not certain to reach us. The worried and baffled are taken from the evil to come. The concern of some is for old age, with its poverty and infirmities, but in the majority of instances this matter will be settled for us before the trial comes. As things are in this world, the ministrations of death are often strikingly benignant. They come in to solve many difficult complications, and to save from troubles that have no other cure. In deaths that seem most afflictive, in that of the young, prosperous and successful, there may be the settlement of questions which could only be settled best in this way. In almost every case death settles many questions for us. It comes to the most in the midst of purposes and plans not consummated—often not begun—and there is a wisdom and a mercy in it not always revealed to the bereaved.

The settlements of death, however, in regard to matters of religious duty, may be clouded by our unfaithfulness. Delay to act in the service of Christ, to promote religious enterprises, and to consecrate ourselves and our substance, may work irreparable damage. The matter will be settled, but in the wrong way for them who have been slack in their doing. Neglected opportunities, slothful and churlish stewardship of the Lord's goods, and a spirit of vacillation in regard to the calls of duty, will be settled. Thoughts, convictions, plans, intentions, will all be settled. But how? The most serious aspect of the subject is in its application to those who have delayed repentance. It is a question with which all have to do. The choice is not made. There are years of struggle with conviction, with the strivings of the Holy Spirit, and the decided step is not taken. The matter is fixed for some future time, indefinitely put off, or left to the chances of the death-bed. This is a question that death settles—the momentous question of accepting or of rejecting Christ. If we have not settled it for ourselves, it is then settled quickly and forever.

This, at least, is a question that should not be pending when that last call comes. In whatever condition our business affairs may be, and however circumstanced in regard to temporal things, the spiritual house should be in order. The invitation has been given to come out on the Lord's side, the opportunity for special prayer and instruction has been extended to inquirers, but the services of the Sabbath, or those of the camp meeting, close, and no decision has been reached. The sermon, the voice of conscience, the still small voice of the Spirit, the passing privileges, all urge to an immediate decision. But the occasion passes, and the choice is not made. And then days, or weeks, or years of unrest and inward debate follow, and at last death decides the question. The tree lies where it falls. There ends the suspense, and salvation is no longer open to the fitful and changing convictions of a procrastinating spirit.

God.

God is illimitable, immutable unconditioned. Forgetfulness of these stupendous facts is one principal cause of our misapprehension of the Divine Being. We are so prone to look at Him from our human standpoint, and suppose Him conditioned much like ourselves. We can grow wiser, better and happier, and in our haste and thoughtlessness we are apt to think God can make progress too. It is hard for us to conceive that it is impossible for God to become any happier than He now is—than He has been from everlasting and shall be to everlasting. When we do a beneficent and benevolent deed it relatively increases our blessedness, and to our finiteness, it seems so natural to conclude, it ought to increase the blessedness of God. For example, over a wide area, a drought is prevailing, vegetation is withering, the streams are running dry. Animated nature mourns, and men's hearts fail with fear; but, anon! the clouds arise and spread their sable wings from horizon to horizon, and the rain pours down in ample and refreshing flood. The brooklets awake and sing, the woods and fields rejoice in new and verdant robes, and all animated life is glad. Now such an extended scene of happiness, spreading out like a beauteous picture under the eye of God, and exhaling the odor of thankfulness to Heaven, ought, to our mere finite conception, to make the heart of God thrill with sensations of new and intensified rapture. But it is not so. He is infinitely self-sufficient in Himself—perfectly and eternally happy. It is really a higher and more worthy conception, which revelation gives us, that God lavishes all this blessedness without any purpose or expectation of increasing His own; but from the overflowing of an infinite lovingness.

As revelation is made to finite creatures, it must of necessity be let down to the level of our capacity; and hence it is that God is so humanized. He is an infinite Spirit, and, as such, necessarily without body or parts; yet, to help our humble thinking, He is represented as having bodily members. We read of His "eyes," His "ears," His "arm" and His "hand." So also the Infinite is represented as having affections and intellectual attributes like our own. He is declared to be "angry," not that we suppose the divine complacency is perturbed and diminished as it is with us when we are angry, but, perhaps, no better word in the speech of the millions for whom revelation is designed, so well expresses the opposition and disapprobation of God to that which is evil in His sight. So the Lord is represented as trying men to see what was in them, that He might know their hearts. We suppose that this by no means implies that God has learned something He did not know before, but simply that God, by His dealings with men, was developing what was in their hearts, which He already knew to be there. So, too, the pictured scene of the last great day represents God as opening "books," as though He sought among the records of the past what had been the lives of those who stand before His judgment seat. But all who reflect on the character of God, as He has revealed it, know that the final inquisition is not to teach God anything. He will get no additional information, but the judgment is for the information of finite creatures, and to vindicate before all finite intelligences the ways of God to man. God has no need to study, he never reasons to arrive at conclusions, but with one all-comprehensive and exhaustive glance He sees all that has been and all that shall be. The remotest future is as the present, for with him "One day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." As He is present from infinity to infinity, so He is from everlasting to everlasting. In our expressions, and in our conceptions, it is wise and important that we clearly discriminate between the finite and infinite, otherwise we shall minify and degrade the sublime ideal of the Infinite as it is presented to us in His own inspired word. We rejoice that it has pleased the Great I Am, in His gracious intercourse with men, to speak to us as a loving Father, in language let condescendingly down to our level. While we inhabit material bodies, and live in a material world, we have no words with which to describe the spiritual, for in our present circumstances we cannot conceive of the spiritual. So it was when St. Paul was permitted to gaze with spiritual eyes, and hear with spiritual ears, he said it was impossible to utter these things in speech. This explains why the descriptions of God materialize and humanize Him, so that we may in some sort approximate and apprehend Him; and not to think that He is a man as ourselves. W.

The Death of Elisha.

Death is said to bring "the honest hour." This is, however, to be doubted. A proverb nearer the truth is that the ruling passion asserts itself in death more distinctly if possible than at any other time. In this way death may be the honest hour in furnishing the world with the great motive from which the actions of life arose. In this respect the death of Elisha furnishes us with an instructive lesson. He had no estate of goods and chattels, stocks, bonds, houses or lands, to dispose of by will, His only earthly possessions had been sacrificed long ago, when he first became the pupil and servant of Elijah. He had no accounts to settle with God and conscience; no regrets or sighs for a misapplied life; no advice to friends to profit by his failures; not a word or thought of self. This obliviousness of self is the sublime part of the death scene. Joash, the king of Israel, comes in weeping and repeating the words which Elisha had uttered at the ascension of Elijah: "My father, the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof;" but the dying man says: "Take bow and arrows." "The arrow of deliverance of the Lord" now became the watchword.

The scene which followed is best described in the simple words of the inspired narrator. All attempts to adorn it weaken its unaffected grandeur. Royalty though present plays but an insignificant part in the scene. Little souls would have asked that the hand of the king might condescend to perform some slight ministration, but the old prophet simply says: "Open the window eastward." It is done. "Shoot." He is obeyed "Smite the earth." Three times is his command executed, and then a pause. "Thou shouldst have smitten six times—now thou shalt conquer but thrice." The great lesson to be learned from this: The principle which has governed a man's life will govern his death. As the principle of unselfish patriotism and rigid devotion to God had been the mainspring of the prophet's life, so it shone out in his death. He had not been anxious about his success in life, and he had no concern upon that score now. His people's welfare was at his heart. Future ills which he should not see or feel troubled him; future happiness to be enjoyed by a succeeding generation was a boon to be secured by him before he closed his eyes.

There is often much selfishness displayed by Christians who in a fit of pious forebodings say: "Thank God, I shall not live to see those sorrows." This is not religion—it is selfishness. Such persons will shirk the burdens of the present if they can without public shame or dishonor. They will lay down the cross if nobody is watching them. They will evade paying a debt if there is a chance offered. Their maxim is: "Let posterity work out its own hard problems"—narrowed down it is: "Let others take care of themselves." But the dying prophet bore one burden through the gates of death—the anxiety for posterity's welfare.

As has been stated, the principle governing life is manifest in death. A selfish life is certain to be followed by a selfish death. How often are well-meaning and sympathetic preachers and pious people imposed upon by this selfish class! It is no uncommon thing for people whose whole life has been one of selfishness to send for ministers or pious persons when they are about to die. Many of the most fervent petitions are these offered for those who never thought of supporting religion, either materially or spiritually, and who do not even think of leaving any tangible proof of a change of disposition in their wills. They are making all they can out of pious people and God, even in the article of death. I have seen some very selfish people dying, and I have seen some of the unselfish die. I have ministered and prayed by the bedside of both classes. The former are trying to pump every sign of life out of you, and appropriate it to themselves; the latter leave you feeling as though your spiritual life were duplicated. Let men beware. God is not mocked. The selfish man cannot drop his selfishness just before he goes into the coffin. Balaam prayed: "Let me die the death of the righteous;" but he wanted to live the life of the sinner. As he lived, so he died. Elisha, on the other hand, spurning the paltry pelf of the world, and losing all thought of self in the good of his people, found a death in which every anxiety for self was lost. The death of selfish men is invariably a scene which mars whatever might seem glorious in their previous lives, but that of the unselfish throws light over even what seemed to be shadows; and as the blackest cloud reflects the brightest bow, so out of the darkest period of their life springs diviuest glory.

"Faith Itself is a Method."

BY DOUBLE U.

One of the commonest rules in practice is to adapt means to ends. And so used to this habit is the human mind that to question its propriety would be to put in doubt your sanity; high or low in the scale of endeavor the rule operates.

Induction is the method of philosophy, experiment the method of science, and, may it not be added, faith is the method of righteousness. The end sought in philosophy is wisdom, the end sought in science is use, the end sought in religion righteousness; each is an acquisition made, and requires like capacities. Life is blank without an object, and no engagement can be proceeded with without a method. Righteousness is as much a human quality as knowledge or skill. The one is a quality of character, the other of mind, the other of sense. If philosophy is a legitimate pursuit, and rightly attractive to minds of a high order, if science is equally ennobling and compensative, flattering in its success to the highest ambition of personal distinction, is not righteousness as rational an attainment, more persuasive to its pursuit on account of its excellence and rarity than the others? What acquisition is more solid, or splendid, or ever was rated at so high a worth?

The capacity for righteousness is equal to that for wisdom or skill. Justness in all the dealings of life, purity of private manners, and piety toward God, are the elements, and in combination constitute righteousness. Now what attainment, under whatever view of life, is comparable to righteousness? But it is not innate, connate, nor comes in course of events, nor by sudden act or supreme fiat. We gain wisdom by method, the use of force by method, we must needs also gain righteousness by method. The theory of righteousness is that as a quality of human nature it was lost, and, if restored, must be regained, its acquisition being subject to the law that governs all human acquirements: "Seek and ye shall find," as direction and prediction covers the entire sphere of life. It is an object, and its pursuit is by method, and that method is discovered to be faith.

That faith is the method of righteousness is as little lacking in exemplary proof as in real fitness, though the reason for it be as difficult to assign as in other and like cases where the fact is not more evident, but that it is so adapted is signified by the usual sign affixed "by." If, however, it may not add to the conception of faith to call it a method, it nevertheless ranks it with the intelligible means used confidently and constantly in pursuit of the gains of life.

But faith itself is also of human quality—i. e., it partakes of the mental and moral states of the mind and sense that individualizes it. What there is of appreciation, acquisitiveness and will, expressed in faith, is of the inspiration of mind, its resources methodized and addressed to the object coveted. In this view faith is as subject to the desire and habits of the mind as any other method the same mind is in the habit of operating, else the definition of faith, the authoritative statement of its effects, the assigned causes and criticisms upon its smaliness, or insufficiency would not apply, personal responsibility for faith, assigns to it the use of an established method. What has been done through faith is held to be possible still, and always to faith; by faith righteousness of life has been attained, and this through a provision of grace and mercy that illustrates most strikingly God's mindfulness of man, not above what we are able to do, but within the actual compass of every capacity in which faith can find a ground, and excite an application, righteousness and final salvation are made accessible.

Archbishop Purcell, of the Roman Catholic Church in Cincinnati, is involved in financial difficulties. It seems that he has received more than six millions of dollars from all classes of his Catholic subjects. This money was deposited with him for safe-keeping, and was used by him for the purpose of building churches, convents, and for various ecclesiastical purposes. It was a sort of savings bank, and we suppose a good deal of the money was invested in various securities. But the business was managed in a very singular way. No books were kept, and the money was received and paid out in a reckless and haphazard manner. Now the money is gone, the most of it nobody seems to know where, and the assets to pay depositors amount to not more than five hundred thousand dollars. A bad failure this, and due to management that appears to have been most criminally negligent. Such a defalcation ought to be thoroughly investigated and exposed, but neither the secular press nor the Catholic authorities seem to care to give the public light on the subject. The Independent speaks of the matter in a tone of great moderation when it says:

We do not now speak of the childish way in which the accounts of the deposits were kept, or rather not kept, and of the total ignorance of the Vicar-General as to the amount of his liabilities. We only speak of the use to which the Brothers Purcell put moneys they received, and the excuse they give for their failure.

They say, and every one believes them, that they have not used the money on themselves; that they have not eaten nor drunk it, nor spent it in extravagant luxury, or in speculation. They have only used it for ecclesiastical purposes, to build and support churches and convents, and monasteries and schools.

But this is precisely what the money was not given to the Brothers Purcell for. It was given to them as a trust fund, because they were supposed to be trustworthy priests, to keep safely for the use of the depositors. The depositors gave what they wished to give for the support of the church. What they wished to keep for themselves they deposited with the Brothers Purcell. But the Brothers Purcell had a deep and commendable interest in the church, of which they were high dignitaries. Instead of keeping the money deposited with them in such a shape that it could be returned when the depositors wished, and instead of putting it where it would draw an income sufficient to pay a reasonable interest, these ecclesiastics put it into lands and buildings, from which it could not be withdrawn at the demand of the depositors, and where it would not return a cent of income. They had no way to pay even interest, except out of the fresh deposits of their victims. This was an absolute robbery of their depositors; as gross and as absolute as any that can well be imagined. The money which was deposited for one purpose was used for another. So far as productiveness was concerned, it was extinguished. It might as well have been cast into the sea. A catastrophe was inevitable.

It seems almost incredible that this could have been done, and that the excuse can be given that the defalcation was committed for religious purposes. And yet this is all the excuse that can be given, and it must be accepted, we suppose, as freeing the Brothers Purcell of intentional fraud. Whether under criminal proceedings it would relieve them from conviction we are not sure. Men have gone to prison for much less offenses. But we have no doubt that in their pitiable incompetence, and their overmastering love for the church, they thought they were doing right. They did not see the danger before them. But it is no less a defalcation.

Elihu Burritt, whose death, says the Independent, occurred on the 7th inst., will be missed by a host of true friends and admirers. He was one of those honest, earnest men whose aims command universal respect. He was born in New Britain, Conn., in 1810, and was known as "The Learned Blacksmith." He wrote much, especially for temperance and cheap postage and against slavery. He also published several works.

Notice of meeting of trustees of Seashore Camp-ground will be found on eighth page. Let all interested refer to it.

The postoffices of all the preachers of the patronizing Conferences, and the places at which they will represent the interests of this paper, are desired the earliest day possible, to enable the publisher to send forward the lists of subscribers for correction and collection.

The publisher also wishes to be notified of any change in postoffices, failures to receive the paper promptly, or other matters of interest that have not received prompt attention. It is his wish to correct all errors in accounts, and that every agent and subscriber shall be satisfied.

In ordering changes be sure and give the place from as well as that to which the paper is changed. Attention to this is of the very highest importance.

Among the Editors.

Christian Neighbor.

—Walking so many miles in so many hours by a class of men who probably could not be better employed, has been, off and on for several years, of world-wide interest to rings of other people of equal worth to the progressive Republic of America. Besides that fool rolling a wheelbarrow across the continent there has been a woman or two on the turf, and why not she too? for both sorts of horses run races. A little further along the line of progress they may go on "all-four." Then, with correspondents from enterprising dailies, trotting or wheeling along at the side or in the rear of the racers to send dispatches every hour to a reading world waiting in breathless anxiety to hear the very latest news from a dog-trot—then, the elite with such appetizing can relish their breakfast and discuss the merits of the all four mode of running versus the old bi-ped style.

Central Methodist, Ky.

—There are some mysteries we shall probably never be able to solve, one of which is, why the secular press has so much to say about the short-comings of Protestant ministers, and so little about those of the Catholic church? For instance, we mention the case of Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, who has made way with four million dollars of money belonging to his people.—All sorts of crookedness is reported, but the papers make bare mention of the fact, and in terms of tenderest sympathy. Such conduct upon the part of a Protestant minister would call forth column after column, with startling head lines, and fearful denunciations. Why the difference? We will be debtor to the paper which will enlighten us at this point.

Texas Christian Advocate.

—In a certain town in Texas, after an able address from a temperance lecturer, the audience called on the prosecuting attorney to address them. He commenced by protesting against the call as unreasonable. He reminded them that he was the prosecuting attorney in that court. He made his living by prosecuting crime. If there were no crimes committed, no criminals to be indicted, no fighting and broils, no shooting nor murder, his occupation would be gone. And then if there was no liquor sold in the saloons and corner groceries, no whisky drank to drive men into reckless deeds, there would be peace and harmony in society, and the prosecuting attorney would find but few men to prosecute and would have but few fees to collect. The grog-shop furnished him the best practice his office could have. "And now," said he, "you ask me to make a speech against that business which puts money in my pocket." The crowd saw the point and that speech was the most successful of that hour.

Northern Christian Advocate.

—That he might impress the sublime thought of the omnipresent and ever-working God on the mind of his son, Dr. Beattie wrote with his cane the name of the boy in the rich soil of his garden, and sowed mustard seed in the channels. After a few days he led the lad into the garden and showed to him his own name growing green and fresh from the soil. "How is this?" said the young and wondering lad. "O, it is mere chance," replied the father. "The winds and rains have sported with the seeds and have intelligently done this." "Not so," said the young, intuitive and unsophisticated philosopher. "Somebody has done it. Why is it my name; why here and nowhere else; and why now for the first? The reasoning was natural and sound. Now, the infinite somebody in nature, in history and in grace, is God. We have only to recognize the fatherhood of God, and all analogy teaches that He would make, that He has made a revelation to His intelligent, moral and responsible creatures. A father communicates to and advises his children; a master, to his servants; the learned and benevolent, to the ignorant and needy; and a governor, to his subjects. God who has spoken to us. "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by His Son." "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." This style of faith is grand. It is a source of strength. Unbelief is occasion of weakness and the root of all infidelity. "Have faith in God." "They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed." Perfect peace, a mind stayed on God, and trust in Him are correlatives. "O Israel, trust thou in the Lord."

Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

—It is time for sober people, and sober people are in the majority, to take hold of this question of the whisky traffic with both hands

Press and pulpit should show it up in its true colors. There is no occasion for soft words and velvety criticisms. Let us use words that speak the truth. The whisky traffic is a shame to those who are engaged in it, and a curse to the country that tolerates it. Moral suasion is a farce when applied to men who care for nothing so they make money. There are people we should talk to of their evil ways with tears in our eyes; the whisky seller is not one of them.

We are persuaded that good people should unite to make war—unending war—upon the traffic. They should employ every weapon known to the law. They should use, vigorously and wisely, every legal means for crippling and destroying the business. All legal preventive measures should be employed. Sober, working people should not allow a bar-room opened when they can prevent it. All legal repressive measures should be employed to the fullest extent the laws of the land allow. Every violation of the law by whisky sellers should be punished to the full extent of the law. Especially should selling intoxicating drinks to minors be visited with swift, certain, condign punishment. We have laws to meet this horrible abuse of the rights of business—laws to punish men for making drunkards and criminals of our minor children. Let them be enforced. Let the honorable judges and solicitors do their duty; let the grand juries investigate, without fear or favor, every probable violation of the law on this subject. Put the young men, the boys, on the stand. Ninety-nine in a hundred of them will swear the truth and tell where the whisky was sold to them. Let the grand juries find true bills, and then let solicitors, petit juries and judges do their duty faithfully and fearlessly.

Since our first notice of the new Quarterly Review we have been able to examine it with some degree of care, and the favorable impressions formed at first have been fully confirmed and strengthened. There is a good variety in the topics, embracing subjects of theology, science, literature, philosophy and exploration. The articles are all of them able and instructive, and the most of them are written in a popular and entertaining style. We are well satisfied with this initial number, and we congratulate the editor, contributors and publishers on the excellence of their work. There can be now, we believe, no reasonable doubt of the success of the undertaking. If the preachers will take some pains to obtain subscribers, and to extend the circulation of the Review, it will be an assured success. A great church like ours ought to have a periodical of this sort, and must have it. The resources for its production are abundant, and its publication will develop and bring out writers whose pens will honor the church, and do much to vindicate our doctrines and institutions. Let us give the Review a hearty support. It should have readers in every pastoral charge, and we should be glad to see it in every Southern Methodist home.

There is no end to the marriage notices that we have published during the last three months. Judging from these, the Advocate must be a very popular paper, indeed. We congratulate the many happy pairs whose consummated bliss has been recorded in our columns. We think that they ought to regard these notices in the light of a premium for one year's subscription, and add the weekly visits of the Advocate to their already brimming cup of happiness. There is no better domestic investment than this. Then, there is no sort of news so eagerly sought as that of who are getting married. Ours is the paper in which to keep posted in this line. Therefore let the recently married subscribe, and those that expect to be, and those who have been long settled in the "honorable estate." The mention of the Advocate will not dampen the joys of the wedding hour. We are anxious that the young people start right in this lifetime partnership. The Advocate should always come in when people join the church or get married. The preachers all think so. May they not forget to mention the matter.

Our esteemed brother and welcome contributor, Rev. T. A. S. Adams, in a note of recent date, informs us that the institution over which he presides—Soule Female College, Murfreesboro, Tenn.—is six weeks advanced in the spring session, and that the pupils are making good progress. From what we hear of this institution, it is vitally important to Methodism and to her educational interests that it meet with a hearty and extended patronage. The location is beautiful and salubrious, and at a point where a large and prosperous school should, by all means, be maintained. The advantages which Methodists neglect and waste are enough to endure success to rival enterprises. They ought to patronize their own schools and their own literature. These are the most potent auxiliaries of the church in giving permanence and character to her work; and in maintaining and extending her influence among the more intelligent of the people.

Death of Rev. P. H. Napier.—The workmen are falling. The following note from Rev. L. Carley, written from Enon, Perry county, Miss., March 7, 1879, brings us the sorrowful tidings of the death of a most worthy and devoted minister:

"Dear Brother: I write to inform you of the death of Rev. P. H. Napier, a superannuated member of the Mississippi Conference. He died on the third of March of asthma, at his residence in Jones county, Miss. He had been afflicted with nervous gout for more than a year, and was superannuated at our last Conference. He died in great peace, and the burial services were attended by a large number of friends, which fact evidenced their high appreciation of him. Please give notice of his death in the Advocate."

To the Conference Societies of the Woman's Missionary Organization.

The General President, Mrs. Juliana Hayes, of Baltimore, has called a meeting of the General Executive Association, to be held at Louisville, Ky., May 15, 1879. By reference to the Constitution, Conference Societies will find they should prepare to send two delegates, elected for the purpose, in addition to the Corresponding Secretary of each Conference Society. Please do all that is necessary to secure a full attendance.

By order of the President,

Mrs D. H. McGavock,
Cor. Secretary.

The Rev. Dr. B. M. Palmer, of New Orleans, preached, says the Nashville Christian Advocate of March 15, in the chapel of Vanderbilt University last Sunday afternoon. The sermon was worthy of his reputation and of the large and intelligent congregation present. It was full of thought and fervor. The discourse had special adaptation to young men, and will not be forgotten by the large body of students who heard it.

Dr. Palmer visits Nashville in the interest of the Southwestern Presbyterian University.

The meeting at Ashland, says the Richmond Christian Advocate of March 13, continues, and a number, from fifteen to twenty, have professed faith in Christ. The most of these are from the students at college. This will carry joy, or ought to, to the hearts of parents, and beget an earnest spirit in all who love the church, the young men and the college—to pray for the further outpouring of the saving power of the Holy Ghost.

Books.

The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life. By H. W. S. Willard Tract Depository, Boston.

This is a practical explanation of the blessing of a full salvation. Substantially, it is consecration and trust. The author vindicates the scripturalness of such an experience, treats of the difficulties concerning consecration, faith and the will, and sets forth the nature of growth, service, guidance, temptations, failures, doubts, and concludes with chapters on practical results, the joy of obedience, the joy of union. The style is clear and simple, the spirit of the writer earnest and tender, and the work is free from all extravagance. Those who are seeking pardon or a deeper work of grace, and all careful and troubled and tempted believers, will find it a profitable and helpful work. The volume is a 12mo of 199 pages. We are indebted to Mrs. Jefferson Hamilton, of Mobile, for the copy in our possession. She has found it a means of great spiritual good to herself and to many others, and would heartily commend it to all who hunger and thirst after righteousness.

Scotch and Irish Seeds in American Soil. By Rev. J. G. Craighead, D. D. Philadelphia Presbyterian Board of Publication.

The object of the work is to give the early history of the Scotch and Irish Churches, and their relations to the Presbyterian Church of America. The work is of peculiar interest to readers of the Presbyterian faith, but it is a work of value and interest to all who have a taste for ecclesiastical history. We have been able only to glance at the several chapters, and cannot, therefore, indulge in extended criticism. The Presbyterian Board would hardly send it forth with its endorsement if it were not a work of merit. The volume is a 12mo of 418 pages. Our friend, D. L. Mitchell, 91 Camp street, New Orleans, has it on sale.

The Temperance Reform, and its Great Reformers. Edited by Rev. W. H. Daniels, A. M. With an introduction by Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D. Nelson & Phillips, New York: Hitchcock & Walden, Cincinnati.

The volume is a stout one of 612 octavo pages, and is an illustrated history of the temperance movement in this country from the earliest inception of it down to the present day. The "Temperance Blue Laws of the New England Colonies," the liquor laws of the States, and a sketch of the various temperance organizations, are given. Portraits and biographies of the most noted advocates and workers in the temperance movement are also given, with selections from their writings and addresses. The "Crusades," the evangelistic temperance work, and the Murphy temperance movement, are fully exhibited. We know of no single work that gives such a complete account of the history and literature of the temperance reform. It is a volume to be read, and one that will interest from beginning to end. People who have not given the subject of temperance much thought will do well to buy the book, and it will be a treasure to our temperance friends. For sale by G. T. Lathrop, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. Price, $2 postpaid.

Home Comforts, or Things Worth Knowing in Every Household. Edited by Edwin T. Freedley. Philadelphia: Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger, 1879.

The editor claims that the work is a digest of facts established by science, observation and practical experience respecting the art of living well and cheaply, preserving health and prolonging life. It certainly covers a great deal of ground, and treats of important matters pertaining to housekeeping, diet, disease and medicine. There is in the book much valuable information. The foot note at the beginning of Chapter 15 is decidedly objectionable—the last part of it on moral grounds. For sale by F. F. Hansell, 3836 Camp street, New Orleans. Price, $1 50.

We refer to parties needing steam engines, boilers, mills, gins, presses, etc., to the advertisement of H. Dudley Coleman & Bro., No. 9 Union street, New Orleans, La., they being manufacturers and dealers of well-established reputation.

The air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To those disposed to economize this point, the hotel offers an opportunity seldom found, of securing highly first class house for $2 and $2 50 per day, reduced rates to $2 and $3 per day.

W. C. Shepard & Co. sell chain, for sash, white stone, $1, fancy, $2; flower pots, white stone, 1c. each and up, $5 and $6, china, $21 dozen, $3.

For particulars regarding Electric belts address Pulvermacher Galvanic Company, Cincinnati, Ohio. sew

Photographs.—Washburn's, corner Canal street and Exchange Place, is one of the best places in this country to have your likeness taken, at least they say so.

Dry Goods.—For everything in the dry goods line call on that reliable firm, D. H. Holmes. They have just received an elegant assortment of fresh goods. See advertisement.

Shirts.—For shirts and gentlemen's furnishing goods go to that reliable gentleman C. Leighton, corner Canal and St. Charles streets. Orders from the country will receive prompt and careful attention.

Louisiana Ice Company.—The above company have an advertisement in our issue of to-day. Offices, 27 and 29 Front 12 Crossman and 50 Bienville streets. This is one of the largest concerns of its kind in the country.

Plantation Hardware and Agricultural Machinery.—The merchant or planter who comes here in quest of hardware and agricultural implements will find that B. J. West can supply their exact wants with goods that come from the best-known manufacturers, and at prices that give our market a decided advantage over other and more remote points of trade. Mr. West has been prominently identified with the business for the past twenty-two years, and is undoubtedly the foremost man in his line to-day in the city. His stock of steam engines, saw mills, steam pumps, sugar-mills, horse powers, evaporators, reapers and mowers, wood-working machinery, saws, plows, etc., cannot be surpassed in the South. The reader should make a note of this house when visiting or ordering merchandise, and he will be supplied upon the very lowest and most liberal terms governing the trade here or elsewhere.

Lhote & Co.'s Lumber Establishment.—The representative of the Advocate visited, a few days since, the above establishment, which covers four squares of ground on St. Louis, Franklin, Toulouse and Marais streets. It has a frontage of 1,000 feet, and runs back 600 feet. The buildings upon the grounds number some forty—manufactory, warehouses, supply houses, dwellings, stables, etc. The manufactory is an immense building of two stories, with 180 feet front by 180 feet deep. Here machinery of all kinds for planing, sawing, etc., is in operation. On the ground floor are to be seen handsome double engines of 50 horse-power, each with double steamboat boilers. It would take several columns of our paper to do justice to this concern. As we cannot spare that number, suffice it to say that as regards convenient location, central position for delivery and shipment, as well as for the general excellence of the materials furnished by this old house, their facilities are unexcelled. Contractors and dealers can always rely upon having the best of work by skilled workmen, and ready made stock of sash, doors and blinds can be had in any quantity. One important feature of this establishment is the plantation cabins, which are below the prices of any other concern. Their knowledge of the wants in this line, as well as their large means, give them this advantage. Their up-town office is at 32 Carondelet street, where a telephone connects it with the yard. The Advocate is under obligations to Mr. George Lhote for courtesies extended the representative in giving him information, on which this article was written. See advertisement.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

National Surgical Institute.

The annual visit of an examining surgeon from this well known institution will be made to New Orleans on March 15th. He will bring with him skilled assistants and workmen from the Home Institute, and will remain until April 15th. The preparations now making for this visit are extensive and elaborate, and, when completed, will be amply sufficient to meet increased demands.

In its chosen specialities, paralysis and its results, deformities, diseases of joints, plastic surgery, hemorrhoids fistula, etc., this institution is unexcelled.

Refers, by permission, to the many well-known citizens of New Orleans, who are its patrons. For further information write to National Surgical Institute, Indianapolis, Ind.; Philadelphia, Pa., or Atlanta, Ga. Headquarters 163 St. Charles street. 4

Pozzoni's Medicated Complexion Powder is acknowledged by thousands of ladies, who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not roughen the skin, chap, blister, or leave black spots in the pores. Mothers can apply it to infants who become chafed with a surety of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot, 607 North Sixth street, St. Louis (Lindell Hotel.)

Sisters of the Good Shepherd.

St. Louis, January 3, 1878.

We have been using Maguire's Cundurango for some years past, and always with most astonishing success. As a remedial agent in derangement of the Liver, we believe the Cundurango to be unsurpassed by any other preparation in the market.

Sisters of the Good Shepherd.

Multitudes of People require an Alterative to restore the healthy action of their system and correct the derangements that breed into it. Ayer's Sarsaparilla tones and vitalizes the blood, and restores the vigor of health.

What is Chyle?—It is the nutritive portions of the food, or the products of digestion, that furnishes the material that not only sustains life but supplies the waste the system is constantly undergoing. Hence, when there is a derangement of the digestive organs, and an impairment of the nutritive functions, there is usually a deficiency of this element and a corresponding waste of the body. This is the characteristic feature of Consumption, Scrofula and all Wasting Diseases. Therefore it is imperative, that a nutriment should be taken that is largely Chyle producing, and that will not tax the organs of digestion. Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda is not only a nutrient but a tonic for the nervous system, and in all wasting diseases as a remedial agent has no equal; is also agreeable to the taste.

Throat Diseases often commence with a Cold, Cough, or unusual exertion of the voice. These incipient symptoms are allayed by the use of "Brown's Bronchial Troches," which if neglected often result in a chronic trouble in the Throat. Twenty-five cents a box.

Wilbor's Cod Liver Oil and Lime.—The great popularity of this safe and efficacious preparation is alone attributable to its intrinsic worth. In the cure of Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Wheezing Cough, Scrofulous Humors, and all Consumptive symptoms, it has no superior, if equal. Let no one neglect the early symptoms of disease, when an agent is at hand which will cure all complaints of the Chest, Lungs or Throat. Manufactured only by A. B. Wilbor, Chemist, Boston. Sold by all druggists.

American Enterprise.

The greatest success attending any commercial house, is that of the American Jewelry Company, Cincinnati, O., whose energy in utilizing the late discovery of the Intrigat-French chemist, Lemoyne, by which jewelry dais found in the Sierra Nevadas are transformed into a most perfect and indistinguishable imitation of the real diamond, which this company is furnishing jewelry made in solid gold for $5. It has attracted attention all over the lands throughout the entire United States, and in every instance these gems are pronounced perfectly wonderful at this price.

Woman comes to the front in scientific horticulture as well as in the learned professions. At a late meeting of the Illinois Horticultural Society, as reported in the "Prairie Farmer," Miss Emily A. Smith, an accomplished entomologist, gave a lecture on bark lice, the result of her own investigations. The insects infesting apple trees, orange trees and maple trees received special notice. Bark lice have little foe of their own, which prey upon them and keep them in check, and the field spiders and lady bugs are particularly fond of them also. In the way of artificial preventitives, hellebore in solution, lime dust and crude carbolic acid are the best. She had used the latter successfully with a Babcock extinguisher, at a cost of twenty cents per tree, where kerosene had failed.

At the same meeting tree blight was discussed, and Professor Turner made a suggestion that will attract attention in these diphtheritic days. He said that the black patches of blight were full of living organism bacteria just as is the "false membrane" in cases of diphtheria and it was possible that these bacteria were the causes of the blight. Another member was inclined to accept this idea. Since he had been careful to remove these patches and anoint the wounds with lamp black and turpentine his trees had escaped. In trimming trees affected with blight he always dipped his knife in turpentine before beginning on another tree.—Christian Union.

FRIED CAULIFLOWERS.—Clean and wash the cauliflower well and throw into salted boiling water, boil for about ten minutes if the head is large or until half cooked. Drain and cut into small portions, dip those in batter for frying vegetables and fry in hot fat. Take them out with a skimmer and lay in a colander, sprinkle with salt and serve hot. These will be found excellent if not allowed to cool.

THE USEFUL DOGS.—We do not understand why the sheep growers who are clamoring so loudly for a stricter dog law, do not ask the Legislature to exempt the shepherd dog from taxation. This dog, when promptly trained, is the friend and protector of the sheep, and worth as much as a boy would be to watch over them and bring them to the fold at night. A friend reshing in this country, who has kept sheep for forty years, says he would not part with his shepherd dog for $50. For the past thirteen years, during which time he has owned such a dog, he has never had a sheep killed by dogs, and considers his flock as safe from damage in this way as any other kind of stock he raises. Besides taking care of the sheep, the dog brings up the cows and horses from the pasture when told to do so, and makes himself generally useful about the place. He is worth almost as much as a hired man and he is considered invaluable on the farm. The breeding of such dogs surely ought to be encouraged by law, and farmers and breeders ought to insist that a discrimination be made between their canine friends and foes. Watch dogs are often very useful in protecting the women and children in the absence of the men, and property too, at night, and when the family are away from home. It would seem that such dogs should pay a smaller tax than the useless curs so common throughout the country. The terriers, as has been shown by some of our correspondents, are very valuable where rats abound, and all farms are liable to be infested with these pests. Some encouragement ought to be given to those who are raising this breed. We have no sympathy with the common, useless dogs of the country, but would like to see a discrimination made between them and breeds of dogs which are useful to farmers and others.—Rural World.

GLYCERINE IN DIPHTHERIA.—According to the Medizin Zeitung, of Vienna, Professor Clar's success with the use of glycerine in diphtheria admits of no doubt. He first prescribes a gentle aperient, either in the form of a manna draught, or of a few grains of calomel, which last he holds to be a powerful antiphlogistic remedy, and when properly used of great value. Coincidentally he directs cold compresses or cloths to the neck and head, or even to the chest, carefully renovated according to the elevation or depression of the temperature, cold or iced water being at the same time given as a drink, and then commence at once the use of iron-glycerine, which consists of two ounces of anhydrous glycerine and twenty drops of the liquor sesquichloride of iron. Of this mixture, half a teaspoonful is given every half hour throughout the day and night. As soon as the symptoms appear to be mitigated, the quantity is diminished to a teaspoonful every second hour, and in the intermediate period, a mixture composed of glycerine two ounces, borax two grains, is similarly given by a teaspoonful at a time. The iron-glycerite is progressively given at longer periods, and is gradually replaced by the borax-glycerine.

CEMENT FOR PRUNING.—Dr. T. H. Hoskins, of Vermont, who has had much experience in orchard management, finds the following composition for a cement to defense wounds made by pruning, the best he is acquainted with: One quart fine North Carolina or pine tar is to be boiled slowly for three or four hours. Add to the boiling tar four ounces of tallow and one pound of bees-wax, and stir all till well mixed. Remove the vessel from the fire and stir the contents till partly cooled. As soon as the cement begins to thicken, stir in a pound of powdered and sifted clay, previously prepared. Stir till nearly cold, to prevent the clay settling. In summer, this cement is just soft enough to be easily spread with the point of a knife. It excludes moisture, and does not harden or crack. The boiling of the tar is necessary to drive out the turpentine. This application is similar to, but better than the simpler mixture of pine tar and brick dust, the editors of the Country Gentleman say they employed many years ago for the same purpose.—Southern Cultivator.

SOUR MILK CAKES.—One quart sour, or "loppered" milk; about four cups sifted flour; two teaspoonfuls soda, dissolved in boiling water; three tablespoonfuls molasses; salt to taste. Mix the molasses with the milk. Put the flour into a deep bowl mix the salt through it, make a hole in the middle, and pour in the milk, gradually stirring the flour down into it with a wooden spoon. The batter should not be too thick. When all the milk is in beat until the mixture is free from lumps and very smooth. Add the soda-water, stir up fast and well and bake immediately. "Loppered" milk, or "clabber," is better than buttermilk.

To make Washington pie, take one half cup of butter, two of sugar, three eggs well beaten, (better with the yolks and whites beaten separately,) one cup of sour milk, one teaspoonful of soda, four cups of flour. If prepared flour is used, then soda need not be mixed. Bake in jelly pans. When done, pile two or three layers of the cake one above the other, spreading jelly or jam between each cake.

Tubs and pails saturated with kerosene will not shrink and dry up, the hoops will not fall off, and there will be no necessity for keeping these articles soaked.—Scientific American.

CLEANING SILK.—White or light silk may be cleaned by rubbing it on both sides with bolted meal, and carefully dusting it with a bit of silk or a fine handkerchief. The same process may be used on kid gloves.

TOBACCO CLOTH.—Two ounces of fine cut tobacco boiled in a gallon of water is used by dealers for renovating old clothing. The snuff is rubbed on with a stiff brush, the goods are well cleaned, and, strange to add, no tobacco smell remains.

Amendments to Charter
OF THE
MERCHANTS' MUTUAL
Insurance Company.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 10, 1879.

AT THE REGULAR MEETING OF THE Board of Directors, held on the thirteenth of January, 1879, the following members being present:

Messrs. P. Fourchy, P. Maspero, D. Faijo, J. B. Lallande, M. W. Smith, Ed. Toby, John Geddes, J. J. Fernandez and Charles Lallie.

Upon the petition of a large majority of the stockholders the following amendments to the charter of the Company were unanimously adopted, under the powers vested in the Board of Directors by the fourteenth article of the charter:

ARTICLE EIGHTEENTH.

The first article of the charter is so amended as to postpone the expiration of the charter until the thirty-first day of May, eighteen hundred and ninety-nine, unless the affairs of the Company be sooner liquidated, by a vote of two-thirds of the members of the corporation.

ARTICLE NINETEENTH.

The capital stock of the Company is fixed at six hundred thousand dollars. This change to take effect from the first day of June next, when new certificates of stock will be issued. The new shares to be one hundred dollars each. Certificates to be issued for fractional parts of a share to be ultimately consolidated into full shares by purchase or sale.

I, the undersigned, Recorder of Mortgages in and for the parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, do hereby certify that the within and foregoing amendment to the charter of the Merchants' Mutual Insurance Company is this day recorded in this office, in book 142, folio 295 and 296.

1879 - SHADINES - 1879

NINTH SEASON.

Our this season's catch now ready is the finest we have ever produced. Years of trial have proved their undoubted Superiority, Purity and Economy, and being unexcelled as a Preserved Fish they are now a recognized favorite in the world's market.

The unparalled success in former seasons induced the packing of Imitation goods by other parties, which were bought by some dealers through ignorance or for their cheapness. Such purchases were attended with the usual results.

The celerity with which a luncheon or meal can be obtained; (as they require no cooking or preparation, being always ready); render them peculiarly acceptable to travelers, pic-nic and excursion parties, or for general use; their delicious, piquante flavor satisfies the palate of the most fastidious, while their cheapness, (being now about one half of the original price), meets the requirements of the economical.

are packed in hermetically sealed tins, essentially boneless, in a mild, pleasing appetizing sauce, palatable to all, free from the oily properties of the Sardine, retaining only the natural of the Shad, and ready for the table at all times, for dinner, lunch or evening meal, by merely opening the box.

We are the only packers of the GENUINE SHADINES. They are our Trade-Mark.

SCRAPS.

Bookseller—"What sort of books do you want, sir?" Baggs—"Oh, such books as a gentleman generally has!" Bookseller—"And how many?" Baggs—"Wal, my library is twelve by fifteen, and I want it full." Bookseller—"Will you have them bound in Russia or Morocco?" Baggs—"Oh, don't send so far! Have them bound in London."—Harvard Lampoon.

"Where was Bishop Latimer burned to death?" asked a teacher in a commanding voice. "Joshua knows," said a little girl at the bottom of the class. "Well," said the teacher, "if Joshua knows, he may tell." "In the fire," replied Joshua, looking very grave and wise.

A preacher in Kentucky, the other Sunday, becoming exasperated, paused in his discourse to say: "Ladies, if you will give me your close attention, I will keep a lookout on that door, and if anything worse than a man enters, I will warn you in time to make your escape."

Jonathan says: "There's a sleigh, I guess." John—"You shouldn't say, 'I guess,' you know." Jonathan—"But you say, 'you know,' I guess." John—"But if I say, 'you know,' you say, 'I guess,' you know, but I don't say, 'you know,' you know."

"Editors can do anything." Of course they can—read, write, speak, preach, print and sing, without previous preparation. We know an editor who has never touched his hand to a type in his life, but we have seen his foot-print many a time.—Commercial Bulletin.

Narvaez was a Spanish soldier, and a devout Catholic. As he was about to die the priest asked: "Do you forgive your enemies?" The reply was a grim one: "I haven't any; I shot them all."

A citizen of a country town, noted for his dishonesty, was lately taken very ill, and, becoming alarmed, sent for a clergyman, who came to see him, and laid down the divine law to him with great faithfulness and emphasis. The sick man was much affected, and said: "Well, parson, I think you're right, and I've made up my mind that if I get well I shall in the future live principally honest."

Lord Campbell, it is well known, was fond of a joke, and sometimes had the tables turned upon himself. A few days before his death he met a barrister, who had grown very stout of late, and remarked: "Why, Mr. ——, you are getting as fat as a porpoise." "Fit company, my lord, for the great seal," was the ready repartee.

A GENERIC DIFFERENCE.—First school-girl (sweet eighteen): "I am so tired of walking along by twos and twos in this way! It's as bad as the animals going into the ark!" Second ditto (ditto, ditto): "Worse! Half of them were masculine!"—Punch.

When the barometers became so cheap as to induce agriculturists to buy them, a worthy farmer in Kilbride, Scotland, became the possessor of one. On a certain occasion it continued to rain while the mercury was rising, when the farmer, losing all patience, carried the instrument to the door, held it up toward the sky, and exclaimed: "In the name o' guidness, will ye no' believe your ain een?"

The cobbler's last words: "I feel that I wax weaker each succeeding day, and that I am fast approaching my end; a few more stitches and all will be over; and I shall go where there is rest for the weary sole, and every sorrow will be healed." Having said awl he wished, he calmly breathed his last.

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron, all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and life-sustaining elements. It is the purest, safest, and in every way the most effectual alterative medicine known or available to the public. The sciences of medicine and chemistry have never produced so valuable a remedy, nor one so potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula, and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Face-grubs, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ringworm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood, and cause derangement and decay. It stimulates and enlivens the vital functions. It promotes energy and strength. It restores and preserves health. It infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease or infirmities from impurity of the blood need despair, who will give AYER'S SARSAPARILLA a fair trial. Remember, the earlier the trial, the speedier the cure.

Its receipt has been furnished to physicians everywhere, and they, recognizing its superior qualities, administer it in their practice.

For nearly forty years AYER'S SARSAPARILLA has been widely used, and it now possesses the confidence of millions of people who have experienced benefits from its marvellous curative virtues.

Woodville, Miss.

The Loquet-LeRoy Institute

AND KINDERGARDEN DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, 280 Camp Street.—This institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses MOISE, Cecelia W., Sallie L., and Corinne, the latter relict of the late R. G. Raoul, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successors of Mme Loquet LeRoy, whose good will and right to conduct the School under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No change whatever in the conduct and management of the School. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to the institution, and that of their friends, and the public generally, promising strict devotion to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge. C. W. MOISE, Principal.

REFERRING TO THE ABOVE MADAME LOQUET-LEROY announces to her friends and former patrons the entire confidence she has in her successors, being in every way suited to the high trust they have assumed. She bespeaks for them a continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded her, and that she will still be actively connected with the institution. For terms, and particulars apply to the principal.

FITS OR EPILEPSY.

To the Editor of the Advocate:
DEAR SIR—Will you please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the cure of the above disease, and that by its use in my practice I have cured thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing, and will give
ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS
for a case it will not cure or greatly benefit. Indeed, so strong is my faith, I will send
ONE BOTTLE FREE,
together with a valuable treatise, to any sufferers addressing me, giving their name, express and P. O. address. Please allow this letter to any one you may know, who is suffering with this terrible disease, and oblige. Respectfully yours,
DR. H. C. ROOT, 183 Pearl Street, N. Y.

MILK OF MAGNESIA
IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach. The pleasant taste and milk-like smoothness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no permission to induce them to take it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and will act as a laxative when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The smoothness of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a fractional part of a single drop magnified 250 diameters. The first the calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia now offered. The difference between them is most striking, for whereas the undissolved precipitates and particles in the drop of calcined Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable precipitates; in fact perfectly dissolved.

Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it, and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others not already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing

"SUPERIOR NUTRITION THE LIFE."

IMPERIAL GRANUM
The Great Medicinal Food.
The Salvator for Invalids and the Aged. An Incomparable Diluent for the Growth and Protection of Infants and Children. A Superior Nutritive in Continued Fevers and a Reliable remedial Agent in all Diseases of the Stomach and Intestines.

THIS justly celebrated DIETETIC PREPARATION is, in composition, principally the GLUTEN derived from the WHITE WINTER FLINT WHEAT, a solid extract, the invention of an eminent Chemist. It has not only been highly recommended, but certified to by a large number of Chemists and Physicians—representing a very high degree of medical science—as the Safest, Most Acceptable and Reliable Food for the Growth and Protection of Infants and Children, and for Mothers Lacking Sufficient Nourishment for their Offspring.

Unlike those preparations made from animal or vitalous matter, which are liable to stimulate the brain and irritate the digestive organs, it embraces in its alimentary composition
That which makes strong Bone and Muscle. That which makes good Flesh and Blood. That which is easy of Digestion, never constipating. That which is kind and friendly to the Brain, and that which acts as a preventive of those Intestinal Disorders incidental to Childhood.

And while it would be difficult to conceive of anything in Food or Dessert more CREAMY and DELICIOUS or more NOURISHING and STRENGTHENING as ailment to Ayers, Pulmonary Complaints, Dyspepsia and General Debility, its RARE MEDICINAL EXCELLENCE in all INTESTINAL DISEASES, especially in Dysentery, Chronic Diarrhœa and Cholera Infantum,
Has been Incontestably Proven.

Anxiety about salvation is the most reasonable thing in the world; and we feel ready to ask, can that man have a soul, or know that he has one, who is careless about its eternal happiness? Is he a man, or a brute? Is he in the exercise of his reason, or is he a maniac?—John Angel James.

No man has come to true greatness who has not felt in some degree that his life belongs to his race, and that what God gives him he gives him for mankind.—Rev. Phillips Brooks.

When I think of the agencies which are ceaselessly at work to make this bad world better, I am thankful that I live.—W. M. Punshon.

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER.

FOR WOMEN & CHILDREN.

Females suffering from pain and weakness will derive great comfort and strength from the use of Benson's Capcine Porous Plaster. Where children are affected with whooping cough, ordinary coughs or colds or weak lungs, it is the one and only treatment they should receive. This article contains new medicinal elements, such as is found in no other remedy in the same form. It is far superior to the common porous plasters, the merits of electrical appliances and other exterior remedies. It relieves pain at once; strengthens and cures where other plasters will not even relieve. For Lame and Weak Back, Rheumatism, Kidney diseases and all local aches and pains it is also the best known remedy.

Ask for Benson's Capcine Plaster and take no other. Sold by all Druggists.

Price 25 cents.

COTTON.

The following report of the cotton market is taken from the Democrat:

Under the influence of stimulating advices from abroad, and an advance of 6@10 points in futures at New York, a good demand prevailed throughout the day, and prices ruled firm, with sales of 6,200 bales.

Tone of the market strong. Sales 85,000 bales.

An Englishman was accosted thus:—"What would you take to stand all night in the tower of St. Paul's?" "A beefsteak and a pint of beer," was the frank reply. The next one thus accosted was a Scotsman. Says Sandy, "What'll ye gie?" Lastly came along Patrick, and when asked what he would take to stand all night in the tower of St. Paul's, he wittily answered, "An' sure an' I'd be apt to take a bad cowld."

Every good and holy desire though it may lack the form, hath in itself the substance and force of a prayer with God, for he regards a prayer the moanings and sighings of the heart.—Hooker.

A German Jew was eating a pork-chop in a thunder storm. On hearing an unusually loud chap, he laid down his knife and fork and observed: "Veil, did any boty efer hear such a fuss about a little piece of pork?"

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—Farmers, Families and others can purchase no remedy equal to Dr. TOBIAS' VENETIAN LINIMENT, for the cure of Cholera, Diarrhea, Dysentery, Croup, Colic and Sea-Sickness, taken internally (it is perfectly harmless; see oath accompanying each bottle) and externally for Chronic Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cuts, Burns, Swellings, Bruises, Mosquito Bites, Old Sores, Pains in Limbs, Back and Chest. The VENETIAN LINIMENT was introduced in 1847, and no one who has used it but continues to do so; many stating if it was ten dollars a bottle they would not be without it. Thousands of certificates can be seen at the depot, speaking of its wonderful curative properties. Sold by the druggists at 40 cents. Depot, 42 Murray street, New York. 6p

C. KEENER, P. E.

INDIAN "IDOLATRY DOOMED."—An educated Babu was lately asked by Mr. Phillips of Jellapore what he thought the religious future of India was to be. The Babu considered the question a hard one, but said that "idolatry was doomed." It is impossible for the Hindoos to remain idolaters. Atheism could never satisfy a people for any considerable length of time. I have little hope of Brahmaism. Its votaries are already very much divided against themselves. I myself could be a Christian, if I could believe in the Divinity of Christ."

"Such testimony," says the missionary, "is not frequent now."

The Indian Evangelical Review says: "There is no city in India which manifests such energy in evangelistic work as Calcutta. The latest thing we have heard of in this line is nothing less than a thorough house-to-house visitation of the whole city, in the course of which a gospel and tract are to be delivered at each dwelling, and, so far as practicable, the inmates of every house to be conversed with on religious subjects."

TUTT'S PILLS.

SYMPTOMS OF A

TORPID LIVER.

Loss of Appetite, Bowels Costive, Pain in the Head, with a dull sensation in the back part, Pain under the shoulder-blade, fullness after eating, with a disinclination to exertion of body or mind, Irritability of temper, Low Spirits, with a feeling of having neglected some duty, Weariness, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the Eyes, Yellow Skin, Headache generally over the right eye, Restlessness with fitful dreams, highly colored Urine.

IF THESE WARNINGS ARE UNHEEDED SERIOUS DISEASES WILL SOON BE DEVELOPED.

TUTT'S PILLS

are especially adapted to such cases, a single dose effects such a change of feeling as to astonish the sufferer.

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS:

DR. TUTT:—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, flesh good, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.

REV. R. L. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

The first effect of TUTT'S PILLS is to Increase the Appetite, and cause the body to Take on Flesh, thus the system is nourished, and by their Tonic Action on the Digestive Organs, Regular Stools are produced.

DR. J. F. HAYWOOD OF NEW YORK, SAYS:

"Few diseases exist that cannot be relieved by restoring the liver to its normal functions, and for this purpose no remedy has ever been invented that has as happy an effect as TUTT'S PILLS."

DISCOVERY BY which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the Hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. Three bottles for $5, or to accompany the order and balance to be paid when medicine is delivered.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, March 18—The vice President called the senate to order at noon. The president's proclamation convening congress was read. The members elect were then sworn in. The iron clad oath was administered to those who were not and the modified oath to those who were engaged in the rebellion.

On motion of Mr. Wallace, the credentials of Mr Bell, of New Hampshire, was laid over till to-morrow.

On motion of Mr Bayard, a committee of two was ordered to be appointed to join such as may be appointed by the house to wait on the president and inform him that congress were prepared to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

Messrs Bayard and Anthony was appointed such committee, and the senate, at half past twelve took a recess till one o'clock.

At noon the house was called to order by Mr. Adams, the clerk who read the proclamation of the president convening congress, and stated that the time designated having arrived, the would call the roll, which, as clerk of the last house, he was required by law to perform. He there upon proceeded to call the roll by States, beginning with Maine.

The call of the roll showed the presence of 285 members, three members—O'Reilly and James of New York—being absent.

Mr Randall, on Proxy vote, Mr Garfield, of Ohio, and Mr Wright of Pennsylvania, were then put in nomination for speaker.

The vote resulted: Randall 143; Garfield 125; Wright 13; Wm D. Kelly, of Pennsylvania 1. Necessary to elect, 143. S. Randall having received a majority, was declared duly elected speaker.

NEW YORK, March 19—The New York Times, to day, publishes several columns of dispatches and letters, setting forth the present condition and future prospects of trades, manufactures and other branches in a large number of States. It says that the condition of business interests of the country, as compared with the outlook a year ago at this time, gives promise of a profitable season and the beginning of a return of national prosperity.

GALVESTON, March 20—A special to the Galveston News from Tyler says: A fire, at three o'clock this morning, destroyed fourteen business houses on the west side of the Public Square valued at 40 000. Insurance $10 000.

NEW YORK March 20—Over 1,000 000 was sent to New Orleans to-day from this city. The seven banks here which hold depositors of New Orleans banks, were called on to money, and promptly responded.

MEMPHIS, March 22—A storm of the severest nature swept over Memphis just after midnight. It came from the south-west and continued for three hours. During its progress lightning struck the Memphis Cotton and Woolen Mills, situated in the southern portion of the city, which were entirely consumed. The mills were valued at $90 000 and employed a force of 125 persons, who are thrown out of employment.

MACON, March 22—A tornado struck Milledgeville at two o'clock, to-day. The Ocouee River bridge was totally demolished. The loss is $9000. A negro and two mules were killed on the bridge. Stores were unroofed and, several small houses were blown down. The general damage about the city amounts to $80 000.

ST. LOUIS, March 23—About four hundred of the plantation negroes who recently arrived here from the South, left last night for Kansas, and about two hundred arrived by the steamer Helena from Mississippi this afternoon.

NEW YORK March 24—Talmage has secured the services of Rev. Dr. Spear as his counsel. His trial before the impeaching presbytery commences this afternoon, in the Clinton Street Church.

CLINTON, LA., March 24—At three o'clock yesterday evening, two of Lawyer Kernan's houses burned down and another house, belonging to Mayor Morris, and occupied by Mr. Welsh, was badly damaged. The fire is said to have originated in the kitchen flue of the house occupied by the Misses Nettles. Loss, $3,500. No Insurance.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, March 19—The correspondent of the Daily News at Szegedin telegraphs: Do not credit any statement of the exact number of deaths. The loss of life must have been enormous. I witnessed the whole disaster. The houses fell mostly in such a manner as to hold the corpses down.

LONDON March 19.—The situation at Szegedin is gradually improving. The population bear up bravely against their misfortunes. The Emperor Francis Joseph and Herr Tisza, Hungarian Premier, passed through the town in boats on Monday. 8 200 houses out of 10 000 houses in the town have fallen, and 1 900 persons were drowned.

LISBON, March 20—Pinto, the Portugese explorer, who has arrived at Pretoria, telegraphs to the Portugese government as follows: In concluding my journey across Africa I struggled with hunger, thirst, natives, floods and dronth. I have saved all my papers, twenty geographical charts, many topographical maps, three volumes of notes meteorological studies, drawings and diary of the complete exploration of the Upper Zaihsi with its seventy-two cataracts.

Baltimore Annual Conference.

We give the following items from report in the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist:

The Baltimore Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, convened in annual session in the Methodist church in Salem, Virginia, at nine o'clock on Wednesday, March 5 Bishop Wightman in the chair. The opening religious services were conducted by the president. The roll was called and near two hundred members answered to their names.

The character of Thomas B Sargent, S Kepler, A A Eskridge, F H Boehm, J W Tongue, Henry Hyman, W H Wheelright, Wilson Hedges, Eda Welz, John Hank, E L Kregelo, E J James and George Stevenson were examined and passed, and they were continued on the superannuated list.

The following were admitted on trial: W P Orr, J Porterfield, J O Parker, W H Lefevre, J W. Grubb, O W Hammond and J T. Hawkins. John W. Jolliet, a local preacher, was elected deacon.

When the name of one of the candidates for ordination was called the bishop said, "Is he married?" and continued by saying "a Methodist minister to marry the right sort of a lady at the right time of life doubles his resources" (laughter) and when informed that some of the young brethren were not married, he said he was glad that there was a faithful few able to resist temptation in that direction.

A communication from Rev. Wm. A Harris, D D., president of the Wesleyan female institute, at Staunton, Va., was read. From fifteen States there are near one hundred pupils at the institution and it was reported in a prosperous condition. Rev. Dr. Sledd of the Virginia Conference, was introduced and addressed the Conference in the interest of a forthcoming monthly magazine of which he is the editor.

Among the distinguished visitors on the Conference floor to day were Rev. A. W. Wilson, D. D., missionary secretary, Rev. J. B. McFerrin and Rev. Dr. Young, of Nashville, Tenn., Rev. Dr. Young made a strong appeal to the Conference in the interests of the Publishing House. The whole indebtedness is about three hundred thousand dollars, and it is intended to dispose of four per cent. bonds to relieve the institution of its embarrassment. Quite a large amount has thus been raised. The Conference subscribed for bonds to the amount of $5,000.

The statistical report was presented as follows: Local preachers 116; white members 29,519; Sunday-schools 435; officers and teachers 4 228; scholars 24,750; churches 361; value of churches $728 226; indebtedness $50,916; parsonages 72; value of parsonages $102 575.

The report of the Joint Board of Finance, Rev. Dr. S K Cox, Chairman, was read. $4,380 was paid the present year to the claimants on the superannuated fund; $1 231 07 to the bishop's fund, and $1,173 to Randolph Macon College.

The collections for missions in the Conference amounted to $2,618 for domestic and 4,571 for foreign.

Front Royal was selected as the place for the next session of Conference.

The Great Will Case Ended.

The Nashville Christian Advocate publishes the following in reference to this celebrated case. We are glad to see that justice has been done to that excellent Christian woman Mrs. Vanderbilt. Those who know her best, and especially her many friends in the South, have never doubted the purity and uprightness of her character and conduct.

The New York World, of March 5 says:

"The Vanderbilt will case came to an end yesterday with a suddenness that interested the audience in the Surrogate's Court. It was only the greatness of the booty in the Vanderbilt case that inspired an attack upon a will the justice and reasonableness of which have been vindicated by the contest. We fail to discover in the testimony the least proof of the original allegation that Commodore Vanderbilt was of weak mind, and that he was unduly influenced, rife as the speeches of counsel have been with repetitions of those assertions. It is to be hoped that the very distinct expression of public opinion which Mr. Lord has evoked by the 'offers to scandalize,' which he yesterday withdrew, may be useful to other lawyers in like circumstances, whether it is profitable to Mr. Lord himself or not. It is equally to be hoped that the fate of this case may supply a wholesome admonition to the heirs at law of other rich men who may be tempted to contest what they know to be a good will. Such contests in such cases are not carried on for nothing, as the present contestants have found."

Mr. Lord and Judge Black left no stone unturned. They even attempted to cast imputations upon that excellent woman who was the comfort and blessing of the Commodore's last years—his wife. It came out that her "influence" was all in favor of his children and the peace of his family—that the last will and codicils were more favorable to them than wills drawn before his marriage to his Southern Methodist wife. We add the concluding part of the World's report of the court scene:

"Mr. Lord: I offer a motion to submit the case without argument; and, first, I desire to make a statement in regard to one person before making a general statement. I desire to say in behalf of the contestant that I withdraw everything reflecting upon Mrs. Frank A. Vanderbilt, and shall make no further charge against her. I withdraw all statements affecting her character, and wish to say that the statements which I made were made in good faith, and those who know me know that I could not make them in any other spirit; but since then we have become satisfied that she is innocent, and therefore I move that all the offers relating to her by the contestant, and all statements which tend to strike at her character, in that regard, be stricken from the records of the court.

"Mr. Clinton: The motion is acceded to on our part. There was no testimony given.

"The Surrogate: It does the counsel very great credit, after their failure to prove the offers they have read, that they have seen fit to do justice to a person who seems to be entirely free from any such imputation.

"Mr. Lord: It was a great matter of regret on the part of my client that she was forced to assent to any such charges being made, but a great while ago we got on the track of certain information which led us to suppose there was truth in it.

"The Surrogate: The motion is granted.

"Mr. Clinton: We assent to submit the case without argument.

"Judge Comstock (wonderingly): The case is closed.

"The Surrogate (ecstatically): The case is closed; take an adjournment."

The facts in brief are that after various postponings Mrs. Lebau (a daughter contesting the will) brought the case in the Surrogate's Court, New York, November 12, 1877.

"Mr. Scott Lord opened the case on behalf of Mrs Lebau in a speech that counsel for Mr. Vanderbilt denounced as vituperative against her brother and stepmother. The trial itself occupied ninety days, irrespective of thirty days taken up in motions. It is said that contesting counsel charged $500 per day, which would give them about $70 000. They examined 108 witnesses. On the twelfth day of November, 1878, Mr. Scott Lord rested his case, and since that time proponents have called 26 witnesses."

The first called was Bishop McTyeire, who was two whole days on the witness stand. The importance of his testimony was seen in his intimate acquaintance with the Commodore during the years when the contested will was made. Ex-governor Morgan, bankers and physicians followed, and finally Judge Rapallo, who wrote all the wills and codicils. The decision of the Surrogate is not yet formally announced. The World says:

"People would abdicate their own intelligence and insult that of Surrogate Calvin, by affecting to doubt what the decision will be."

The New York Herald says in comment:

"We notice that some of our contemporaries commend Mr. Lord for his public retraction of the atrocious calumnies he has uttered during these proceedings against a lady whose connection with the contest was involuntary and accidental. It was, no doubt, his duty to withdraw those abominable calumnies; but his tardy confession that they are false cannot be accepted as an atonement for having made them. Nothing short of the most indubitable evidence that they were true and an absolute necessity of alleging them in the interest of his clients could have reconciled it to the sense of decorum of any lawyer who was also a gentleman to allow such beastly charges to defile his lips, especially when the reputation they assailed was that of a respectable lady. The object of these revolting calumnies was to prove that this lady had been the instrument of undue influence in the making of the will. This calumnious pretense was utterly exploded by the production in court of former wills made in the same sense long before she had any acquaintance with the Commodore. Her vindication is perfect; but what shall be said of a lawyer who could so far prostitute his privileges as to be the vehicle of such unfounded charges? His late retraction cannot atone for so vile, so atrocious an offense against decency, against morals, against the chivalric sentiment due to the gentler sex. Mr. Lord's abominable, unproved and unretracted calumnies against the late Commodore deserve the same condemnation, though not to the same degree."

The Pastoral Instruction of Children.

Previous to the last General Conference, the third question in the proceedings of a Quarterly Conference read thus: "Is there a written report from the preacher in charge of the number and state of the Sunday-schools, and of the pastoral instruction of children?" The General Conference removed the words "and of the pastoral instruction of children." The question, as it originally stood, was somewhat oddly framed, and was really two questions; though they were numbered as one, and were expected to be answered in a single report. We have seen more than one pastor surprised when, on reading his report in answer to this question, he was reminded that he had said nothing about "the pastoral instruction of children." The latter part of the question was treated as a matter of minor importance, and was not unfrequently overlooked, while the number and state of the Sunday-schools occupied the pastor's mind. But as many small things are of greatest moment, and especially those that grow to be large, so no part of a pastor's work is more weighty or worthy to be told than that which he bestows on the pastoral instruction of children. The fact is some pastors rarely attend their Sunday-schools, and a larger number have neither the taste nor the tact, neither the natural aptitude nor the acquired skill requisite for the successful discharge of the difficult duty implied in the "pastoral instruction of children."

The question, however, is not whether children should be specially instructed by the pastor, but whether that work is of sufficient importance to be particularly inquired after and distinctly reported on at each Quarterly Conference. We find among the duties of presiding elders the following: "To inquire carefully, at each Quarterly Conference, whether the rules respecting the instruction of children have been faithfully observed?" We find also prefixed to the section of the Discipline which treats, "Of the children of the church," the following italicized directions, the only directions in italics in the Discipline: "Things especially to be noticed in the written report of the preacher in charge to the Quarterly Conference on the pastoral instruction of children." From all which we conclude, either that the General Conference has left the Discipline quite inconsistent with itself, provided the intention of that body was to exclude all that might require a special report from the pastor, of the instruction of children by him, or that the words "and of the pastoral instruction of children" were unintentionally omitted altogether from the Quarterly Conference questions. Why require the presiding elder at each Quarterly Conference to inquire carefully after, and the preacher in charge to notice especially in his report to each Quarterly Conference the pastoral instruction of children, if it was not intended that a report on that subject should be called for at each Quarterly Conference? The fairest and most natural construction of the Discipline seems to be that the law yet requires a report from the pastor, every quarter, of his work among the children. No report on Sunday-schools, gathered from hear say, or handed to the pastor by the superintendents can fill the measures of the pastor's duty in the case. His work among the children must neither be done by proxy nor regarded as of slight importance. It must be done by the pastor himself and not be forgotten in the quarterly report. Do not the highest efficiency, growth and perpetuity of the church demand the utmost diligence in this direction? Does not the Church of Rome derive most of its strength from its wise, skillful and unremitting attention to the indoctrination of the young? Take away its schools and priestly catechisings, and the Church of Rome would die in a century. Did not our Saviour think this duty worthy of special mention and emphasis? When, after His resurrection, He appeared to His surprised and delighted disciples at the sea of Tiberias, He began His last charge to His apostles with the injunction: "Feed, my lambs." If "lambs" be supposed to signify young Christians, yet are children not excluded, but the more emphatically included, since in Christendom all children should be young Christians and all young Christians should be children? Let all our pastors then give special attention to children, and make special mention of this part of their work (too apt to be neglected) in every quarterly report.

Irreverent Familiarity.

"Safe in the arms of Jesus,

It was truly wise in Mr. Wesley to guard our theology from the familiarity and irreverence to which "the children of disobedience" are prone, and which is subversive of the purity of thought and humility becoming the Christian; but there is enough of undisguised evil in the world without seeking to discover it where it is latent, or does not exist as in the quotation above. To the pure all things are pure. Dr. Wentworth does not give us many examples of what he considers the gross and indecent familiarity which "would have brought Mr. Wesley's indignation to the boiling point." Such compositions may be exceptional, but surely are not to be found in our own collection, which, with few exceptions, will bear comparison in purity of thought and expression with anything in modern literature.

The doctor is unfortunate in the lines he selected for criticism, unless he also condemn the words of inspiration, which doubtless suggested the subject to the author. "He shall feed His flock like a Shepherd. He shall gather the lambs in His arm and carry them in His bosom." Isaiah xl, 11. Whether St. John literally leaned on the Saviour's breast or not, the figure is so often used in Scripture to denote intimacy and protection that it were wise for us to assign to it no other meaning. Whether the freedom from temptation, corroding care and sin refer to the soul while in a state of sanctification, or after death, the idea is equally remote from a "guilty one." It would be a great evil to suppose our highly spiritual hymns by those which only address the sympathies, but each bears its part in the work of salvation, and by wise selections should aid instead of hindering the other.

Many instances might be recorded of the skeptic whom argument had failed to move, yielding, by God's blessing, to the power of feeling.

Woman's Missionary Society Shreveport, La.

MR EDITOR: As a matter of information and encouragement to others, I desire to tell you of the prompt action of our godly women relative to missionary matters. On the ninth of February, in answer to a call of the pastor, quite a number met in the church. After religious service, and a brief statement from the pastor, on the subject of the Women's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the ladies present resolved to organize a society auxiliary to our Conference Society. The following organization was then had, viz:

Mrs. Jane M. Jordan, president; Mrs G. C. Walters, Mrs. Capt. Thatcher, vice presidents; Mrs. William H Wise, corresponding secretary Mrs. John Shuttlesworth, recording secretary; Mrs. Lou. Tally, treasurer.

The officers and members have entered upon the work with considerable enthusiasm. I trust the church at large will hear something good from our Shreveport women.

With a little attention and effort on the part of the preachers, there is not an appointment, having as many as ten female members, in which a Woman's Missionary Society could not be organized. As a church, the neglect of the mission work, the lack of the mission spirit, is the secret of our comparative failure in work at home. The Lord infuse into the church at large the true mission spirit.

JOEL T. DYES.

Woman's Missionary Society.

An Auxiliary Society of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was organized at Felicity Street Church during last month. The following ladies were chosen as the officers of the society for the year: Mrs V. Foster, president; Mrs. H. Booth, first vice president; Mrs. J. Kirk, second vice president; Mrs. E. E. Rawls, third vice president; Mrs. J. S. Hallaran, recording secretary; Mrs. S King, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Q. Walker, treasurer.

It is to be hoped that, in accordance with the resolutions of the General Conference, this work is going on everywhere. By the close of 1879 a perfect constellation of these stars should be shining in our ecclesiastic heaven.

Hiwassee College, Tennessee, seems to be doing well. It deserves success and we pray that it may prosper more and more. The card of this institution is to be found in our columns now, as heretofore. Prof. F. M. Grace will pardon an extract from a private note recently received from him:

Your Louisiana boys have uniformly done well here, and have usually been benefitted in health as well as in studies. There is a softness and sweetness about them which needs toning up under the influence of our stronger scenery and tougher modes of living. We like them well, and want to see more of them.

Our thanks are due to Bishop Keener for his magnificent poem on the "Transfiguration" as well as for his just tribute to Dr. Munsey. I had read the Transfiguration myself, but could do no more than versify the Scripture narrative for our Sunday School Visitor. It always seemed to me the resting point in it was as a type of the resurrection.

To the Conference Societies of the Woman's Missionary Organization.

The General President Mrs Jollaba Hayes, of Baltimore, has called a meeting of the General Executive Association, to be held at Louisville, Ky., May 10 1879. By reference to the Constitution Conference Societies will be entitled to send two delegates elected for the purpose, in addition to the Corresponding Secretary of each Conference Society. Please note all that it becomes necessary to secure a full attendance.

By order of the President,

MRS D. H. MCDAVOCK,
Cor Secretary.

THE THRICE HAPPY DEAD.

O the dead ! the thrice happy dead;
Honored is the earth that covers his head;
Honored the flowers and the fragrance they shed,
Their language as plain as if they said
Sweet peace to the dead,
The thrice-happy dead.

Honored the bird as it warbles its lay,
And swings in the air on the nearest spray,
As if at the spot it would so love to stay—
With its gladsome song it seems to say,
Sweet peace to the dead,
The thrice-happy dead.

Can not we, too, join in the glad sweet strain,
And rejoice that his heart is free from all pain;
And remember that our loss is his happy gain;
Can not we, too, gladly take up the refrain—
Sweet peace to the dead,
The thrice-happy dead,

O God forgive if impatient we be,
His joys to share and Thy glory to see—
If from the cares of this world we would flee—
(O! that some one to-day could say this of me,)
Sweet peace to the dead,
The thrice-happy dead

Forgive us, we fain would be freed from earth too,
But help us our Father our duty to do.
That the stars in our cladem may not be few,
And those words of us may be said and be true,
Sweet peace to the dead,
The thrice-happy dead.

Rev Stephen F. Pilley.

LATE OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE, DECEASED.

Mr. Editor: This good brother, whose name heads this article, died a few years ago, sustaining to his Conference, at the time, a superannuated relation; and from the memorial notice given of him in the minutes of that Conference, and also from a short biographical sketch published in your paper subsequent thereto, by Rev. J. W. Shores, I find a correct account was given of him after he entered the ministry and became connected with the Conference. But as to his early history, his conversion and labors before he joined the Conference, and his untiring and ardent devotion to the cause which he had espoused, for the two or three first years of his itinerant life, nothing was said; in consequence, I presume that nothing was known.

Will you allow me, even at this late date, to give a sketch of facts and incidents connected with this part of his history, and thereby supply a defect which exists in those notices referred to. I am the only preacher now living who knew him before his conversion, and was associated with him intimately for several years afterward. I was present when he was converted, and the next day took him into the church. I write this, Mr. Editor, for the benefit and satisfaction of his aged widow and large family of children, several of whom are in the ministry, and this I do without their knowledge or solicitation.

At the Conference held in Tuscaloosa, Ala., in the latter part of 1832, I was admitted on trial in that Conference, and appointed junior preacher on the Chickasawha circuit, in connection with Bro. Joh. Fosler, preacher in charge. This circuit extended at that time from Washington Court-House, in Alabama, to near the coast on the Pascagoula river, in Jackson county, Miss.

On my first round on that circuit I met Mr. Pilley at the house of Father Wells, on the lower part of the circuit, spent a pleasant night with him, found him a man of intelligence, apparently gifted in conversation, and disposed to talk on the subject of religion. I asked him to accompany me the next day to my appointment, to which he readily consented. My appointment that day was at a private house—Sister Cumbust's. Here I observed Mr. Pilley appeared very attentive to what I had to say, and manifested some interest in the services, and which was more fully shown by his continuing with me, and going to my next appointment, six miles below, which was the extreme southern appointment on the circuit. We reached the neighborhood that evening, and were sojourned at the house of an old friend and acquaintance of mine, Jesse Graves, who was then blind, but whose soul was filled with love and the fire of the Holy Ghost. He proposed that we have meeting or services of some kind that night at his house. And here let me say, Mr. Editor, that in those times, where the preacher made his four week's rounds on his large circuit preaching generally every day in the week, and, when not preaching, riding, that it was no uncommon thing for him to have to preach also at night, and often in private houses. The good brethren demanded it. So, in this case, old Uncle Jesse Graves' wishes must be attended to accordingly. Mr. Pilley volunteered his services to go around and notify the community. A small congregation assembled in due time; the timid young preacher did the best he could, and at the close called for inquirers, the first one who approached was my traveling companion, Mr. Pilley, who knelt at my feet in the chair behind which I had stood while trying to talk to the people. Earnest prayers were offered for him and others who had approached. Here Mr. Pilley was converted. Here he consecrated himself to God and his cause. The next day I had service at the church; opened the door, and Mr. Pilley immediately came forward and gave me his hand and name, and he was enrolled as a probationer in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

This church was called Graham's Church, and Bro. William Graham had been class-leader, but who unfortunately had been drowned a few weeks before, and to whose daughter Bro. Pilley was engaged to be married, and which was consummated soon after.

Such was the geographical shape and arrangement of the circuit that my colleague and I met every round. I informed him of the fact of the loss of the class-leader at this appointment, and told him of Bro. Pilley's conversion, etc., and intimated that I would not be surprised if he (Pilley) would not yet fill the place of leader, and that he had better see to it when he got down there. Said he: I will give that matter up to you, and on your next round, if you find he (Pilley) will fill the place, although a probationer, appoint him, as there are no others that would probably do.

So before I got to that appointment, on my next round, I heard that Pilley was married and preaching. The facts were these: As soon as he married he had family prayers in his mother-in-law's family, and he and old Bro. Graves met at the church every Sunday, and held divine service, he reading and commenting on some parts of the Holy Scriptures; and such was the character of these lectures that it was reported he could beat any of the preachers, and no doubt this was true in regard to many of us. I appointed him leader, and some time afterward, by the unanimous recommendation of his society, licensed him as an exhorter, and at the last Quarterly Conference of that year he obtained license to preach, if my memory is correct. He exercised as a local preacher until the fall of 1835, when he obtained a recommendation to the Annual Conference to join the traveling connection, which Annual Conference met in Tuscaloosa, Ala. Here his recommendation was presented; objections to his admission were urged by some of the preachers, principally the old ones. First, on the ground that he had a wife and child; secondly, that he had at one time in his life been connected with the theater, and was a great fiddler, loved fun and frolic, etc., but it was asked if he had been a drunkard, a profane man, a murderer, etc. No, nothing of this kind could be alledged against him. Well, has he been in the theater, or done anything wrong of this kind since he embraced religion? Not that we know of; but here's that wife and child coming in to tax the church, etc.

It was somewhat unfortunate for the good brother that there were very few in the Conference who knew him—Bro. T. Moody, Bro. Daniel Barlow, his presiding elder, and myself. Some discussion took place, mostly from the opposing wing of the Conference, Bro. Moody and Bro. Barlow advocating strongly his admission into the Conference. And now, Mr. Editor, don't charge me with egotism when I speak of my first speech that I had ever made in a Conference. I took the ground that some of our old brethren were certainly very inconsistent in opposing this brother because he had once been a sinner—had been an actor—whereas I had no doubt that they had once been sinners, probably very bad ones, too, guilty of worse sins than playing the fiddle, or acting on the stage, and yet they professed to be changed, converted, their sins forgiven, but would not admit that the same divine power could be efficient in the conversion of Bro. Pilley. That he was a changed man, I had no doubt. And as to the wife and child, I did not think there was any sin in that; and if it was wrong to take a married man into the Conference, they ought to adopt the rule of forbidding the preachers marrying at all; for I saw but little difference in taking one in already married, than to allow them the privilege to do so as soon as they chose afterward. In addressing the Bishop I recollect making this remark: "That if he thought me worthy of a circuit and colleague the next year I would as soon risk Bro. Pilley as any one on that floor untried." He was admitted, and when the appointments were read out by Bishop Soule, who presided in that Conference, it was: "Leaf River Circuit, A. C. Ramsey and Stephen Pilley."

This circuit embraced a large territory in eastern Mississippi, commencing at Dwire's ferry, on the Pascagoula river, in Jackson county, passing through that county into Green county, thence through Perry into Wayne, thence into Clark, and through Jasper to Garlandsville, in Newton county, returning through the western part of Jasper into the corner of Covington, through Jones into the western portion of Perry, and thence through Hancock to Jackson, the starting-point. Bro. Pilley was on hand in due time, obtained board for his wife and child at Bro. Willis Holder's, on Red Creek, in the lower part of the circuit, near the starting-point. Here Bro. Pilley entered the itinerant college, to be absent from his family five weeks at a time—no chance, as is now, to come home during the entire round—and when the round was made, but only a few days with his family, and while out riding or preaching every day, contending with swollen rivers and creeks, on many of which were no ferry-boats or bridges, consequently had to depend on foot-logs upon which to convey over his wardrobe and library and traveling accouterments, and swim his horse, this, Mr. Editor, was itinerancy in earnest of the olden times. But, notwithstanding all the obstacles and privations that constantly loomed up before him, he never flinched or murmured, never missed an appointment when he could possibly get to it, pursued his studies faithfully, doing a great deal of his reading on horseback, improved constantly in preaching, universally beloved, and did a good work, so that the presiding elder (Bro. Elisha Calloway) was enabled to report him a good, safe case, at the next Conference.

At the close of that year our Conference was held in Mobile. Bro. Pilley was on hand before the Committee of Examination, who reported him up with his studies, and recommended his continuance on trial. At this Conference, presided over by Bishop Morris, when the appointments were announced, to my surprise it was again: A. C. Ramsey and Stephen Pilley, to the Cedar Creek circuit.

This circuit embraced a part of Monroe, Wilcox, Dallas, Lowndes and Butler counties, in Alabama. Bro. Pilley, as before, was prompt in getting to the circuit; and, after obtaining a boarding place for his family, went to work, as usual, did a good year's work, made many friends, and left this circuit one boy richer than when he came to it. Here during that year (1837) his son, now the Rev. Stephen Abiezer Pilley, of the Alabama Conference, was born, who bears the name of his father, and the writer of this sketch, whose name on the list of appointments is generally written and known as S. A. Pilley.

Bro. Pilley traveled the Bellevillie circuit in 1838, since which time I have not been as intimately associated with him as formerly; but of his life and history after this his family and the church have them.

I shall only add that I met with him several times during the interval between my intimate connection with him and his death, and invariably found him the same quiet, reflecting, firm, conscientious Christian gentleman that he was in early life. Hoping and praying that the blessings of Almighty God may continue to rest upon his widow and children, and that the mantle of the father may have fallen upon his sons, and that they may wear it with honor to his name, in honor to themselves and to their God whose cause they have espoused, I bid them farewell. A. C. Ramsey.

Letter to a Young Friend.

I beseech you to ponder well ere you decide what course you will henceforth pursue, what path you will henceforth tread. I think you know more of your own spiritual condition than any one else, except your Maker. I know your retiring nature, and that you are prone to conceal your deeper feelings from other eyes. Perhaps you have spoken more freely to B. than to any one else in regard to your spiritual state. I think God's Spirit has been speaking to you for some time, wooing you to paths of righteousness. Do not slight the kind voice. I am interested in you—how much you perhaps neither know nor appreciate. I know that you went in to talk to Dr. S. when he was here. I told Bro. W. of it, and asked him to talk with you. I thought he could give you instruction that would be worth much. I remembered how much I wished for some one to instruct me when I first commenced thinking of the interest of my immortal soul. I wished it, and yet (like you, perhaps,) I was too proud to show how deeply interested I was. I have seen since that this was a very wrong and foolish pride, and that I would have been saved much, much trouble, had I been the recipient of the counsel and instruction of those who were older and wiser and better than myself, and had taken my stand on Christ's side long before I did. I know Mr. W. conversed with you on Saturday in reference to joining the church, and had some hopes of your doing so on Sabbath. He spoke to me about it. If you can conscientiously do so, please join on next Sunday. All persons are not converted in the same way. All persons have not the same things for which to repent, though all are sinners, and all must repent. Perhaps you are expecting some mighty outpouring of God's Spirit, some overpowering evidence that your sins are forgiven. God does not impart His grace to all alike. To some souls He speaks in a "still small voice," none the less powerful and convincing because it does not come as comes the rushing whirlwind. Do not wait for faith sufficient for a whole life before you commence the Christian warfare. He has said: "As thy day is, so shall thy strength be." "Day by day the manna fell." When God was leading the children of Israel through the wilderness He gave them manna daily. Perhaps He did it to teach them their immediate dependence upon Him, and in journeying through the wilderness of this world He will feed those who are striving to reach heaven—who are trying to do His will with the daily manna of His sustaining love and grace. Faith, like the muscles of the body, is strengthened by exercise. You must discard self entirely when you come to God. The best of us could never have been saved by pleading our own righteousness. Salvation is God's free gift. We have done, and can never do anything to merit it, but we can show our appreciation of His goodness by devoting our lives to His service—by accepting as sufficient the atonement made by Christ Jesus, the Lord of glory. He left His Father, and the pure angels, and His bright heavenly home, and came to earth, and suffered poverty, and indignity, and outrage, and at last ignominious death for us. For us who had no claim upon His mercy we forfeited it by our sins. And yet He loved us freely. "Herein is love, not that we loved Him, but that He loved us, and gave His Son to be a ransom for us." Do not fear that God will fail to give you all needful blessings if you serve Him. Assuredly, if in the first instance He gave us His very best, His most precious gift in the person of His Son, He will doubtless give us all needed lesser blessings. Does it not look reasonable? Did you ever think of this? "He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things." Not that my walk has been such as to show forth the beauty and truth of the religion of Christ do I write to recommend it to your favor, but I desire your happiness here and hereafter, and wish to tell you how much it will be enhanced by giving your heart to God in your fresh young years.

It is one of the greatest regrets of my life that I did not yield my heart to God long, long ago, when the strivings of the Spirit were so powerful, and the way of duty so plain. When conscience was tender, and the cares of the world were fewer than they are now. You have read, and heard again and again, no doubt, that the pleasures of the world are very fleeting and unsatisfying. There is no real enduring happiness out of Christ. Did you ever think of the fact that in the Bible there is a special promise to the young? "They that seek Me early shall find Me." These are God's words, and you know they are true, for He has said: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." Death and the judgment and eternity are realities, realities to which we would sometimes fain shut our eyes, and know, child, that our doom in eternity will be determined by our conduct here. Think what is comprehended in that word, eternity! For you and for me it means endless happiness or endless woe. Shall we not strive to make our eternity a blessed one? Think how beautiful a character modeled after that of Jesus Christ would be! Meek, gentle, forgiving, pure and holy. Happy is the one who feels a delight in the service of God, who loves to follow in the footsteps of Him who went about doing good. Heaven is worth striving for, but we can never reach it except by putting away our sins, and believing in Christ as one able and willing to pardon our guilt. "He is able to save to the uttermost all who come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them." We are sometimes very particular about our associates here. Do we ever think of the character of those with whom we will spend our eternity if we fail to reach heaven! Murderers, thieves, drunkards, the depraved and outcast of earth and heaven. Eternal misery or eternal woe! which shall be our portion! God or Satan, which will you take for your Master? "Choose you this day whom you will serve." I know not what your future will be, but I do know that unless you are a child of God you will be poorly prepared to combat with the cares and sorrows of life. Then make God your friend. He is "a friend that sticketh closer than a brother." I shall remember you in my prayers.

Obituaries.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

Died, near Summerfield, Ala., February 25, 1879, after a distressing and lingering illness, in the twenty-first year of her age, Miss. Mary Lou Callen, wife of Mr. R. C. Callen, and daughter of Dr. R. D. Jackson, and granddaughter of Rev. A. H. Mitchell, D. D., of the Alabama Conference. The deceased united herself with the church in early girlhood, while a student in Centenary Female College, from which institution she graduated with high distinction in 1876.

As a student, possessed of excellent mental endowments, she was devoted, earliest and faithful in the highest degree, exemplary in life and conduct, of gentle and affable disposition, possessing great force of character, and winning the love, regard and confidence of all who knew her. No shadow from the schoolroom falls upon her memory. Her girlhood was a good preparation for a noble Christian womanhood. As a daughter she was loving, obedient and kind, ever solicitous about the welfare of those she loved, and her devotion to her parents had in it all the tenderness and strength of true filial affection. As a sister she exerted an influence felt for good, contributing her full share to the charm and sweetness of the home-circle, and making home attractive by her presence and pure example.

She was married in September, 1878, and her character as a loving and devoted wife gave the promise of great future usefulness and happiness.

Her life, it is true, was short; but long enough to develop a beauty of character, and to illustrate true Christian girlhood and womanhood.

Her long and trying illness proved the richest blessing God conferred upon her, through its tedious hours of suffering she ripened for heaven and her preparation was complete. Such resignation and calmness, such peace and faith, such submission, such death-bed reading of hope, nothing but the religion of Jesus can impart. She loved life, it is true, to live, as it had been God's will. She wanted to live to accomplish more for God and the salvation of those she loved. It was a refreshing experience to be at her bedside, and the writer could not leave it without repeated visits, with the closing prayer. "Pray," she would say, "as you would for a poor, humble sinner, with no other hope but Jesus." She gave as the reason for the strong, abiding faith in her Saviour as her only hope of salvation, and her only source of peace and comfort. She realized a clear consciousness of her acceptance and forgiveness, and felt sure of salvation, so that all dread of death vanished, a complete resignation to God's will possessed her, and she peacefully fell asleep in Jesus.

She has been called away by a higher voice than earth could give to retain her, to a better clime, whence, if her voice could be heard, she would urge upon all she loved to follow more closely the Saviour she served, in the hope of a blessed reunion when earth and its shadows shall pass away.

Mr. Absolom Grant died, in Oak Ridge, Miss., on the night of the thirteenth of October, 1878, of yellow fever, aged about seventy-nine years.

Many good and useful men have been taken from us, the young as well as the old, among them our respected Christian friend. A daughter had but recently recovered from the fever, and next a wife a dear companion for many happy years, was taken, while other members of the family were away and perhaps providentially hindered from even coming and ministering to the wants of his last illness.

We know but little of Mr. Grant's early life. He was a native of North Carolina, in which State he spent the early years of his life. He possessed a remarkable spirit of energy and enterprise, and gave up his native home and friends while in the buoyancy of life, and moved West when Mississippi bloomed with prosperity, and settled in North Warren county, where he spent the remaining years of his life. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church when he came to the country, and was until his death a strong pillar of the church in Oak Ridge. He lived through many trying times, and would often speak despondently regarding the cares of the world, but his faith in Christ and his service for his Master were always the same. He lived a long life-time in the service of God, and a soldier of the cross of Christ, and died with the way open to his eternal reward. He leaves many friends, a devoted wife and a large family of children to mourn for him.

Thomas H. Hawkins was born in Jones county, North Carolina, November 2, 1802, and died in Sumpter county, Alabama, February 24, 1879. He has been a resident of Sumpter county and a member of the Methodist Church for near half a century. I have been his pastor and presiding elder, have known him long and intimately, and can say truly that he was the friend of God and His church. He was a man of uniform faith, of a well cultivated conscience, of sound Christian principles; he lived right and encouraged all others to do so. In his last sickness he realized the precious promises of God's word: "Lo, I am with you alway," "When thou passeth through the waters I will be with thee." Without a doubt or a fear calmly he awaited the Master's call. "Other refuge have I none," he quoted before he left us for his home in glory. He has been the principal stay and support of his own church, Wesley chapel, and among the last acts of his life was to pay his yearly quarterage to his pastor, making his contribution larger than usual, and made his annual contributions also to the benevolences of the church. He was my friend—a friend in need. He was the friend of all God's ministers, and all that knew him will say with me: "Help Lord; for the Godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men." How natural such a prayer, for he alone can turn such a disaster to a blessing. God grant that his mantle may fall upon his sons. May his bereaved widow and children find comfort in this sad affliction in Him who is a very present help in trouble, and imitating his consistent Christian life and example make His God their God and meet him at last, where there is no more death, is the pray of their friend. S. H. Cox.

Dr. Tuzevant de Graffenried died of paralysis November 11, 1878, aged seventy-nine years, two months and twenty days. He was born in Union District, South Carolina, August 22, 1799, graduated in medicine at the University of the State of New York April, 1825; was married to Miss Rebecca C. Hill March 25, 1828, by whom he had six children, three sons and three daughters, all now dead except the sons. He moved to Green county, Ala., in 1832, from there to Sumpter county, Ala., in 1839, and from there to Noxubee county, Miss., in 1872, where he died. He made a profession of religion under the ministry of the Rev. Eugene V. Levert, about the year 1835, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which he remained a faithful and consistent member until his death. In his latter days the Bible was his constant companion and study; he might be said to be thoroughly conversant with it.

As a neighbor, father and friend, he was kind and indulgent, and he was respected, esteemed and loved by all. He died as he had lived, a faithful, devout and consistent Christian, with a full assurance of a blessed immortality.

The subject of this has left three sons to weep over his memory, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope. Then farewell dearest to her, associate, friend, until we meet upon the shining shores of immortality. We trust in that sweet bye and bye we shall meet to part no more. R.

At a meeting of the Female Financial Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held at the parsonage in Fayette, on the twenty-third day of January, 1879. The undersigned Committee appointed to draft resolutions relative to the death of Mrs Sethia Terry, made following report:

Whereas, On the fourth day of August, 1878, it pleased an all-wise Providence to remove from our midst Sister Sethia Terry, in the sixty-seventh year of her age. She was one of the oldest and most zealous members of our church and society, one who was ever ready to the fullest extent of her ability to extend the hand of charity to the needy, and to encourage by her counsel the weak and despairing, and whose unassuming Christian virtue, character and life are worthy to be imitated by all; therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of Sister Terry this society has lost one of its brightest ornaments and the community one of its most worthy citizens.

Resolved, That we tender to the family and friends of our deceased sister, our heartfelt sympathies in this their hour of bereavement.

Resolved, That a copy be sent to the family of the deceased, and a copy to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Mattie Key,
For Committee.

John A. Nelson, of Abbeville, Mississippi, born March 25, 1848, aged thirty years ten months and five days.

At a meeting of Abbeville Lodge No. 139 of Free and Accepted Masons, held January 30, 1879, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, It hath pleased an all-wise Creator to remove from our midst our esteemed brother, John A. Nelson, who departed this life at his residence, January —, 1879.

Resolved, That the lodge has sustained the loss of one of its main pillars, the community a good citizen, and his family a kind and indulgent husband and father.

Resolved, That we sincerely condole with the family in this their irreparable loss, and can but express the hope that he has gone to the Grand Lodge above, where all good Christians hope and expect to meet on the glorious morn of the resurrection.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the Lodge and a copy be sent for publication to the Oxford Falcon and to the New Orleans Christian Advocate; and a copy of each be furnished the widow of the deceased.

A. A. Horston,

A Business Idea.—Heathendom can never make a great commerce because the heathen have but few wants. A man who can get a breakfast out of an ant's nest with a shaving stick, and dresses himself a year for ten cents, cannot create a commerce. Civilized and Christianized, he will multiply the world's wealth.—C. H. Fowler, D. D.

"THE DAYS THAT ARE GONE."

BY DORA GREENWELL.

"Do you think of the days that are gone, Jeanie?
As ye sit by your fire at night,
Do you wish that the morn might bring back the time
When your heart and your step were light?"

"I think of the days that are gone, Robin,
And all that I loved in them,
Had the fairest that ever arose on me
I have never wished back again."

"Do you think of the hopes that are gone, Jeanie?
As ye sit by your fire at night,
Do you reckon them o'er, as they faded fast,
Like buds in an early blight?"

"I think of the hopes that are gone, Robin,
But I mourn not their stay was fleet,
For they fell as the leaves of the red rose fall,
That even in fading are sweet."

"Do ye think of the friends that are gone, Jeanie?
As ye sit by your fire at night,
Do ye wish they were round you again once more,
By the hearth that they made so bright?"

"I think of the friends that are gone, Robin,
They are dear to my heart as then,
But the best and dearest among them all
I have never wished back again!"

Ecclesiastical Gimcracks.

BY THE REV. C. A. STORK, D. D.

I suppose you have heard of the going over of Dr. Gans, of the Reformed Church of this city, to the Church of Rome. It has made quite a stir in religious circles here; and, as he was a near neighbor and acquaintance of mine, it seems to bring the matter of going toward Rome close home. He was, I believe, thoroughly honest in his convictions, and, though I deplore his error and the scandal his going has made, I have nothing severe to say of him. I have no doubt he has suffered very deeply in the step he has taken. He has gone, and a great chasm separates us, and with him I have no more to do.

But now comes the question of how he came to go. To answer that, we should have to get inside of his breast; there are so many invisible influences that unite to impel a man to such a step. But at the very time his departure was announced I received by mail a publication which set me thinking about the path by which nearly all these converts to Rome take their departure.

I will copy the title of this document, and then make some comments on its contents: "Cox & Sons' Illustrated Catalogue of Church Furniture, Decoration, Gothic Metal Work, Including Church Plate and Lightning Arrangements, Altar Cloths, Carpets, Hangings, etc."

It is a quarto pamphlet of fifty pages, crowded with a vast collection of church belongings, the most of which, I think, might be classed under the title of Ecclesiastical Gimcracks. I do not wish to be disrespectful to my brethren, who look upon these belongings as sacred and essential to God's service; but, as I look over these pages, crowded with things the meaning of many of which are buried in deepest mystery to my mind, there is only one word expresses my feeling about the matter. I say to myself: "Gimcracks." I want to be reverential and sympathetic; but I cannot help it—the word will steal to my lips: "Gimcracks." I think of the time when Christ took a fishing-boat for His pulpit, and preached to the crowd on the shore; of the first church that met in the upper room at Jerusalem; and it seems a long way we have come to "Messrs. Cox & Sons' Illustrated Catalogue of Church Furniture."

I know we must not think of the simplicity of the Early Church in its arrangements as anything essential. We may be as gorgeous and elaborate in our churches as the New Jerusalem pictured in St. John's Revelation, and still be as truly Christian as any conventicle in a barn. But the trouble with these brethren who are sidling off to Rome, and on the way patronize Messrs. Cox & Sons with their "Illustrated Catalogue," is that all their gorgeousness and elaborateness of church furnishing is something very sacred to them. These wonderful articles of church furniture, with the wonderful names and occult uses, are as awful, in their eyes as the Urim and Thummim and the Sacred Ark and the Mercy Seat to the Jew.

I look down this index of 176 separate articles of church belongings, and I am lost in the abyss of my own ignorance.

Let me tell you some of the sacred things I find here. Near the top of the list I read: "Affinity Tables." And pray what is an "Affinity Table?" Do you know, my brother, who are learned in all things that pertain to the church? I know what chemical affinity is, and elective affinity we understand; but what is an "Affinity Table?" What do they do with it? Can it mean a table that has a leaning to a certain direction? But a table in the house of the Lord ought not to lean at all, but stand bolt upright.

"Credence Brackets." I turn over to the page where these are printed; but I cannot see how a "Credence Bracket" differs from the things my wife sticks in every corner to hold vases and flower-pots. What is a "Credence Bracket?"

"Faald Stools." Who knows what a "Faald Stool" is? Is it only a churchly way of spelling folding stool? I suspect "faald stool," after all, is only our common camp stool used in crowded churches.

Then there are "Litany Desks," though what one wants with a special desk for the litany passes me. And there are "Manipules," whatever they are; and "Chalice Veils," and "Pastoral Staves," and "Pede Mats." What can a "Pede Mat" be? And then there are "Sedilia." That, I take it, means seats. But how do "Sedilia" differ from vulgar benches and chairs, and stools and pews? And there are "Fontlets"! That, of course, means little fonts, and we all know the use of fonts. But what is the peculiar function of "Fontlets?" Do they baptize adults at the "Fonts" and infants at the "Fontlets?" That is putting a very fine point on the matter of baptism.

But the thing that puzzles me most of all in these sacred pages is a picture of what is entitled a "Polished Oak Font Bucket." Here it is, as much like an ordinary well-bucket as one pea is like another, only on the metal hoops are engraved the words: "One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism." Now what is that "Font Bucket" for? Do they draw the water out of the well with it for baptism; or do they carry the water to the font in it; or do they use it to take the water out of the font after the baptism is over?

And so I might go on. There is food for thought in this "catalogue." But, among the many puzzling things in the collection, there is one I have made out, and I confess it fills me with admiration. It is called a "Devotional Chair." "A Devotional Chair!" And what can that be? Is it according to antiquity and the fathers to perform one's devotions sitting in a chair? In the Scriptures the saints did not sit in chairs when they approached God. They stood up to adore, or kneeled to supplicate, or fell on their faces to confess. But I turn to the picture. It is a chair with a double seat. That is, there is the usual seat in the ordinary place, and below it, where the lower rounds should be, is another seat. And what is that lower seat for? I will tell you, and then you may admire with me this bit of sacred ingenuity. When you begin your devotions you meditate or read your Bible. This you do seated on this upper seat. But presently it is time to pray. Then you rise, turn back the upper seat, which is hinged at the back, and lo! there is the lower seat, just the right height for your knees, while on the top of the chair-back is a convenient rest for the head.

Now that is ingenious. That is one article in this great catalogue of High Church furniture which a thorough going Evangelical need not be afraid to use. If there is anything in the way of church furniture our congregations need above all else it is "Devotional Chairs." How hard it is to get our people to kneel in our prayer meetings; and when you look at the floors, how can you blame them? But if we have "Devotional Chairs," the most delicately dressed lady need not fear she will soil her silks and laces. When the leader says "Let us pray," we rise, we turn back the upper seat, and there is the clean stool raised just high enough from the floor for our knees. I declare, I am in love with Messrs. Cox & Sons for this happy thought of theirs. I could embrace them with gratitude. I must urge our Ladies' Contributing Society to buy, at once, fifty "Devotional Chairs."

Well, I have finished Messrs. Cox & Sons' elegant help to churchiness. And this is part of the machinery by which Protestants are led on to Rome. It seems absurd to say it; but is it not true that ecclesiastical millinery and bric-a-brac help to swell the stream that bears good men away? It is humiliating to think that "Affinity Tables," and "Credence Brackets," and "Manipules," and "Sedilia," and "Fontlets" are some of the arguments that prevail on serious men to change their faith. But they only go to their own. They go where they can have "Ecclesiastical Gimcracks" without end—whole museums of Gimcracks. What was Sydney Smith's description of Romanism? "Posture and imposture; bowings to the right and curtsings to the left; and a great deal of man millinery."—Independent.

Science and Religion. Faraday's Ideas of Their Relation.

Faraday's religion was of the life rather than of the lips. "In my mind religious conversation is generally in vain," he said, yet he was never ashamed to express his religious belief. "I am," he wrote in answer to a lady who wished to study science with a view to its bearing on religion, "of the very small and despised sect of Christians known, if known at all, as Sandemanians, and our hope is founded on the faith that is in Christ." Again he wrote: "The Christian is taught of God, by His Word and the Holy Spirit, to trust in the promises of salvation through the work of Jesus Christ. He finds his guide in the Word of God, and commits the keeping of his soul into the hands of God. He looks for no assurance beyond what the Word can give him; and if his mind is troubled by the cares and fears which may assail him, he can go nowhere but in prayer to the throne of grace and to Scripture." "The Christian religion is a revelation. The natural man cannot know it. . . . There is no philosophy in my religion! . . . But though the natural works of God can never by any possibility come in contradiction with the higher things that belong to our future existence, and must with everything concerning Him ever glorify Him, still I do not think it at all necessary to tie the study of the natural sciences and religion together, and in my intercourse with my fellow-creatures that which is religious and that which is philosophical have ever been two illustrious things."

In 1854 he delivered a course of afternoon lectures at the Institution, Prince Albert in the chair. In the opening sentences of the lecture on deficiency of Judgment Faraday said: "I shall be reproached with the weakness of refusing to apply those mental operations which I think good in respect of high things to the highest; I am content to bear the reproach. Yet even in earthly matters I believe the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead, and I have never seen anything incompatible between those things of man which can be known by the spirit of man which is within him, and those higher things concerning his future, which he cannot know by that spirit."

Faraday came to the study of the laws by which God governs the forces of nature, fully convinced that there could be no more noble subject for the exercise of man's intellect. But he approached the Deity in his rule over man now and forever, saying: "The Lord is in His holy temple, let all the earth keep silence before Him." In that sense the devout philosopher did keep his religion and his science apart, but he could not, and probably had no wish to keep them absolutely separate. Take, for instance, the following extract: "When I consider the multitude of associated forces which are diffused through nature, when I think of that calm balancing of their energies which enables those most powerful in themselves, most destructive to the world's creatures and economy, to dwell associated together and be made subservient to the wants of creation, I rise from the contemplation more than ever impressed with the wisdom, the beneficence and grandeur beyond our language to express of the Great Disposer of all."—Sunday Afternoon.

Erasmus.

His Greek Testament alone was a daring innovation as well as a marvel of critical research for its time. The project created alarm among his friends as well as his enemies. They saw in it the utmost dangers to the faith—so settled and unreasoning was the belief in the inspired authority of the text of the Vulgate. "I adhere to the Latin," wrote his friend Dorpius, "because I cannot believe that the Greek are more correct than the Latin Codices. In very deed, my dear Erasmus, there is great harm in your work. If any error should be admitted to have crept into the Holy Scriptures, what authority would be left to them?" But he is not to be moved from his task by such ignorant clamor. "How is it," he asks, "that Jerome, Augustine and Ambrose all cited a text which differs from the Vulgate? When Jerome cites a text according to the Greek version, when the oldest Latin versions do the same, when this reading suits the sense much better than that of the Vulgate, will you, treating all this with contempt, follow a version perhaps corrupted by some copyist?" In his introduction he lays down clearly the great Protestant principle of a free and popular use of Scriptures. "Utterly dissent," he says, "from those who are unwilling that the sacred Scriptures should be read by the unlearned, translated in their vulgar tongue, as though Christ had taught subtleties only to be understood by a few theologians, or as though the safety of Scripture rested in men's ignorance of it. I wish that simple women should read the gospels and also the epistles of St. Paul. Would that the Scriptures were translated into all languages, that they might be read and known not only by Scots and Irishmen, but also by Turks and Saracens. I long that the husbandman should say portions of them as he follows the plow, that the weaver hum them to the time of his shuttle, and the traveler beguile with their stories the tedium of his journey."—Good Words.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Divinity School of Harvard needs an endowment.

—Mr. Spurgeon, who has suffered severely of late from his distressing complaint, is to go to Mentone for a vacation for three months.

—A convention of Methodist laymen, of Brooklyn, who favor a removal of the limitation to the Methodist pastorate, is to be held soon in Simpson Church in that city.

—The Rev. Agson Green, D. D., in charge of the Canada Methodist Publishing House at Toronto, died recently aged 78. He was a native of the United States and was fifty-five years a minister.

—Miss Thoburn, for two years past Lady Superintendent of the Anglo Vernacular Girls' School in Lucknow, India, has resigned that position and Miss Easton, late of this country, is her successor.

—Rev. Dr. F. T. Lee, a clergyman of the Church of England, has written a book against the Protestant Reformation, and in favor of the Church of Rome. He believes in Romish miracles, and all the mummeries of that corrupt communion.

—The twenty fifth anniversary of the definition of the dogma of the Immaculate Conception is to be observed by Catholics this year by the institution of pilgrimages, the formation of unions of prayer to the Virgin, and the solemnization of the 8th of December.

—At the anniversary of the Turkish Mission Aid Society in London, which has done much in aiding the American missions in that empire, several speakers stated that if errorism was removed the Mohammedans in large numbers would embrace Christianity.

—The Free Church of Scotland has lately come into the possession of a bequest of $135,000 for missionary purposes. Some persons have agitated the establishment of a mission in Asia Minor, under the English protection; but the general thought is that it should go to India.

—Mr. Spurgeon regards his Pastor's College as his favorite work. It began with one pupil and now numbers nearly a hundred. The first requirement for admission is, that a man shall have preached two years. No special standard of literary excellence or social position is enforced.

—A General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance, similar to that held in New York in '73, has been called to meet at Basle on August 31 of this year, and the seven following days. An elaborate programme has been prepared, the city American speakers being, as we notice, Drs. Schaff and Hurst.

—His majesty, the king of Siam, has at length determined to have a system of education for his people. Seeing the success of the mission schools at Petchaburi and elsewhere in the country, he has resolved to imitate the example. This is regarded by all who are interested in the elevation of the people of Siam as the most important move that has been proposed during the present reign.

—The Northern Methodist mission in Mexico has held its second annual meeting. It employs now six missionaries, and five of these, with ten of the eleven native preachers, attended the meeting. The missionaries reported prosperity at every point, though the year had been one of persecution. One new congregation had been organized. The Rev. Charles W. Drees succeeds Dr. Butler as superintendent of the mission.

—Lord Penzance, as judge of the Court of Arches, has pronounced judgment against the Rev. T. Pelham Dale, of St. Vedast's, London, for illegal practices. Mr. Dale, who is saddled with costs, did not attend court at all. Lord Penzance remarked that he afforded the not very dignified spectacle of a gentleman and a clergyman of the Church of England running down a narrow flight of stairs as soon as he caught sight of the officer of the court, with a paper in his hand.

—Superintendent Maclay, of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Japan, under date of January 29, writes: "We are now busy negotiating for the erection of the building for the Training School. We want to have it completed by the time of our next annual meeting in July, so that we may be able to initiate this important enterprise in the presence of all its members who will then be in attendance. If possible, secure in some way, for the principal of the school, a supply of school appliances, such as maps, charts, telescopes and other scientific instruments. They cannot be obtained here."

—The sixth annual session of the Wesleyan Conference of Victoria and Tasmania began in Melbourne on the 22d of January. It was composed by ninety-five ministers and ninety-five lay representatives. Rev. Spencer Williams was elected president, and Rev. G. Daniel secretary. The following public services were held: Annual meeting of the Home Mission Society in Wesley Church, Wednesday, the 22d; Conference Love feast at Emerald Hill, Thursday, the 23d; Temperance meeting on Friday; and Ordination service at Brunswick Street on Tuesday, the 28th.

—In view of the approach of another draft for military service, the Mennonites of Russia, in council at New Halbstadt, decided to ask of the government information as to the nature of drafting, and the positions and management of the young men who may be drafted. One of the churches subsequently sent a deputation to the Czar, who received them graciously, read their address attentively, and told them he regretted that so many had emigrated to America. "The service," said he, "we ask of you is not military service; it is not contrary to your confession. We have done what we could for you," he added.

—A Conference of English Churchmen interested in Father Hyacinthe's mission was held recently in London, the Bishop of Winchester presiding. Several other bishops were present. It was unanimously agreed that a public meeting should be held at an early day, to give opportunity for the expression of sympathy and the offer of pecuniary help to the Pere, and that he himself should be invited to be present, in order to explain the need which he considers to exist for reform in the Gallican Church and to give detailed information as to the progress which has been made in the movement with which his name is associated.

—Among the many benevolent and missionary societies in New York which are doing good service, with the means intrusted to them is Bethany Institute. It was organized seven years ago for the training of young women for Christian work, of whom 156 have had the advantages offered by the Institute. The amount of missionary work done through the Institute is large. Last year of missionary visits there were 13,993, visits to the sick and to prisoners 2,250, of children gathered into Sunday-schools 398, into churches and missions 301. A great deal of religious literature was distributed, and many religious meetings were held. Nearly one hundred conversions were among the fruits of these labors.—Independent.

—The annual meeting of the Wesleyan Chinese Mission in Victoria was held December 18. Alderman M'Arthur, M. P., presided, and among those present was O. M. Spencer, Esq., United States Consul. It appears that there are 73 members of society, with 10 upon trial, 200 regular hearers, and as many again who are occasional hearers. There are two ordained Chinese ministers, and two catechists in charge of stations at Talbot and Creswick, with three under training, who are resident upon the church premises in Little Bourke Street. The Revs. J. F. Horsley and James Moy Ling give regular instruction to these men. An interesting Bible-class for the Chinese has been lately held at Mr. Horsley's house.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

—The gains of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1878 are larger than was at first reported. There was a net increase of 407 itinerant and 212 local preachers; 33,810 members; 147 churches; 159 parsonages; and 73 Sunday-schools, with 17,379 scholars. The probationers decreased by 7,126. When the communicants are all at public worship, 11,676 itinerant ministers preach to 1,505,577 members and 192,705 probationers in 16,648 churches, for which there are 5,514 parsonages. In the 19,931 Sunday-schools there are 1,531,017 scholars. Allowing three adherents, for every communicant, the Methodist Episcopal Church has a population of 6,723,328 which is more that the Roman Catholics claim.

Our Young People.

THE SHINING LITTLE HOUSE.

It hung in the sun, the little house,
It hung in the sun, and shone;
And through the walls I could hear his voice
Who had it all for his own.

The walls were of wire, as bright as gold,
Wrought in a pretty design;
The spaces between for windows served,
And the door was clear and fine.

There was plenty, too, to eat and drink,
In this little house that shone;
A lucky thing, to be sure, you'll say,
A house like this for one's own!

But the door was shut, and locked all tight,
The key was on the outside;
The one who was in could not get out,
No matter how much he tried.

'Twas only a prison after all,
This bright little house that shone;
Ah, we would not want a house like that,
No matter if 'were our own!

And yet through the walls I heard the voice
Of the one who lived inside;
To warble a sweeter song each day,
It did seem as if he tried.

To open the door he never sought,
Nor fluttered in idle strife;
He ate and he drank, and slept, and sang,
And made the best of his life.

And I, to myself, said every day,
As his cheery song I heard,
There's a lesson for us in every note
Of that little prisoned bird.

We all of us live a life like his,
We are walled in every side;
We all long to do a hundred things
Which we could not if we tried.

We can stupefy our strength all foolishly
In a sea of sensual strife
Or we can be wise and laugh and sing,
And make the best of our life.

ANOTHER DOLLAR FOR CHINA.

BASTROP, LA., March 5, 1879.

Mr. Editor: Please excuse my omission, in the first letter, of giving my whereabouts. I cannot understand how I could have omitted it, unless being very late at night, and I had been writing so much, I guess I must have been sleepy. I hope that my mite may be like the widow's. Herein please find as before $1 for Mr. Lambuth, of China. The weather being delightful now the flowers are profuse and abundant. I hope I shall not be mortified by another error. Very truly yours,

PEARL ANNIE PARSONS.

MR. EDITOR: At the late monthly meeting of our Sunday-School Missionary Society the following essay was read by a young lady of the school. Hoping that its publication may stimulate the purposes and efforts of other societies, I have secured it for the columns of the ADVOCATE. Our society is in successful operation and promises largely to increase the contributions of last year. We have an enterprising committee, who arrange a varied and interesting programme of exercises for each meeting. This has grown to be quite a feature of our church-work.

CHARLES D. GAILWAY.

YAZOO CITY, March, 1879.

Chinese Idols.

Many of the little children may not know the object of a missionary, or why we wish you to bring ten cents monthly. Perhaps it will interest you to know that the first missionary society was started by five young men, who loved to meet and talk about their Heavenly Father. One day, while talking together sitting under the trees, there came up a heavy thunder-storm, and they took refuge behind a neighboring hay-stack. While waiting there one proposed that something should be done for the heathen, and all agreed to do what they could to send them the gospel. They knelt together in prayer. While they prayed the dark cloud rolled away. The work was immediately commenced. Children as well as their parents gave them money. Soon a preacher was sent to tell the heathen about God. So we want you to bring your money to support preachers who have gone to heathen countries to tell the people about our God, who forbids the worship of stone and wooden images. There are many countries where idols are worshiped, but we will only mention those of China, as the money you contributed last year was sent to our missionaries there, where may be found one million heathen temples and thirty thousand different images, which annually cost the people $1,000,000,000.

Perhaps you would like to be introduced to some of the hideous figures these people worship.

There is one who holds a large umbrellar, and it is said when he spreads it out it darkens heaven and earth.

Another holds a large guitar, and he is supposed to awe and subdue the evil spirits by touching the chords of his instrument. A third holds in his hand a drum and hammer, with which he produces thunder. He is called the "Thunder God."

There are twenty-eight images of human figures representing the stars.

The "Cattle God" is a stone image, which must be worshiped before removing a corpse for any purpose. If this is neglected the god will punish the offender with violent pains.

Ancestral worship is, perhaps, more general than any other. When parents die tablets are made of wood, about one foot high, upon which is written their names, births and deaths. It is supposed their spirits reside in this tablet. They imagine the deceased need money and clothing, which are made of paper and sent to the spirits by burning them.

When a person is sick, a petition is written to the "Medicine-God," which is sent by way of the flames. The priest, by observing the process of burning, professes to be able to interpret the answer given by the god. Sometimes, when the paper is burned, the priest pretends to sleep, and it is believed his soul leaves the body, travels to the god and returns with an answer.

At the last of the year the gods are all said to take a ten-days' holiday. Paper-horses and other equipments are burned for their use. On the tenth day a candle is kept burning to welcome their return.

The offerings to some gods are only vegetables; to others pork, fowls, salt and wine. A picture of the god is bought and placed over the offering. A candle and paper money are also placed beside it. An explosion of fire-crackers is the signal for the spirits to disperse after the repast. They frequently burn a paper boat as a polite mode of conveyance for the spirits to take their leave.

Sometimes, when a baby dies, they think it was inhabited by the spirit of a deceased creditor. They cast the little unclothed body away, then sweep the house thoroughly, fire crackers and beat gongs to frighten away evil spirits. Oftimes they think the baby spirits exist in the beasts around them. One day a missionary was about to kill a roach, but desisted because the mother said it contained the spirit of her baby. She knew it did because the roach eating the very day her babe died.

Children, we have given you an idea of the superstition and idolatry of the Chinese. They know nothing about the God whose Bible we read. He does not wish us to observe a few of His laws, but intends for us to keep them all unbroken. There is none more binding than the last one given by Christ: "Go teach all nations." This law has been very imperfectly kept, as there are only two hundred and thirty-eight missionaries in China, which has a population of four hundred millions. This number is entirely too small. Only a few can hear of the Saviour's love; and Christ died His blood for them as well as for us. If you really love Jesus, you will want these heathen people saved, and you can help by bringing your dimes to send preachers to teach them. And you can pray for them too. Now we will read you a story of five kinds of dimes, and ask you to listen attentively, and tell us the kind of dimes you drop in the hat.

THE GOLDEN DIMES.

A little boy, who had plenty of dimes, dropped one in the missionary box, laughing as he did so. He had no thought in his heart about Jesus, the neighbor or the missionary. His was a fun dime. It was as light as a cork.

Another boy put a dime in, and, as he did so, looked round with a self-approving gaze, as if he had done some great thing. His was a brass dime. It was not the gift of a loving heart, but of a proud spirit.

A third boy gave a dime, saying to himself: "I suppose I must, because all others do." His was an iron dime. It was the gift of a cold, hard heart.

As a fourth boy dropped his dime in the box he shed a tear and his heart said: "Poor heathen! I'm sorry they are so poor, so ignorant and so miserable." That was a silver dime. It was the gift of a heart full of pity.

But there was one scholar who gave his dime with a rejoicing heart, saying in his heart: "For Thy sake, O loving Jesus, I give this dime, hoping that the poor heathen, whom Thou lovest well, will believe in Thee, and become Thy children." That was a golden dime, because it was the gift of love.

How many of us give golden dimes?

The Brave Little Sister.

"There, don't cry any more, Arty, and he shall have Sissy's new wax doll to play with for awhile."

The little fellow dried his tears very quickly. The new wax doll to play with! He could hardly believe his own ears. Never since Santa Claus brought it on Christmas morning had she been allowed to more than just hold it for a minute.

"Here," said Mertie, as she placed it cautiously in his hands; "be very, very careful—remember the least little knock will break its head off."

"Will I?" said Arty, wonderingly. "What's made of?"

"Oh, I don't know, something soft, I guess. But do—do be careful, O, Arty, if it should get broken!"

"Arty'll be careful. Wouldn't take it for any thing."

And thus assured, Mertie went back to her book on the table. She was reading about a little girl whose mother had died and left her a baby sister to take care of. "Not a doll," thought Mertie, looking around at her little brother, who was playing as carefully with her treasure as her heart could permit—"but a real live sister, that would have to be fed, and kept quiet, and rocked to sleep like Arty when he was a baby. She remembered it well, and on dear! how could a little girl fill the place of a mother!" As she read on deeper and deeper grew the interest of the story. Mertie forgot all about Arty and her anxiety about the doll, till, on a sudden, recalling her senses, came a little doleful crash that went through and through her. She hardly dared to look around. But no, it surely could not be that.

Mertie jumped down from her chair and stood aghast, "O Arty." There lay the head of her doll on the floor, and the body in Arty's hands. Her beautiful new doll, that she hardly ever dared to play with, because it was so nice and she might to keep it all her life. How dreadful it was!

Arty's blue eyes filled in a moment, and his little lips quivered. "Arty didn't mean so," he cried out piteously.

Then Mertie showed what a brave girl she was. "O, I know it," she said, sadly. "There, don't cry, dear. It was dreadful, but it can't be helped—and it will have to be borne." It took all the courage that was in the brave little soul to say this. The words came from her lips in little gasps—but she did say them every one; and I call her a hero for it.

Just then mamma, who was entertaining a friend in the next room, heard the noise and came to the door.

Her quick eye took in the ruin at once. "O Arty!" she cried, reproachfully; "Mertie's beautiful new doll. How could you?"

"Don't mamma, please don't scold him," said Mertie, picking up with a sorrowful tenderness the severed head, and kissing her little brother as she took the body from his hands. "I gave it to him, mamma, to play with, and it was all an accident. If I can bear it, everybody else ought to," and with the poor remnants of her ruined world she hurried away to her own little room. How many tears she dropped over her broken treasure where no one could see her, I do not know, but however this may be, I think you will all agree with me in saying that a braver or kinder little sister is not easily found.

Filled With Violence.

Of late there has been an epidemic of violence so horrible as to remind us of those days of old when "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." From all sections of the country, north, south, east and west, come reports of bloodshed. The rage for the use of weapons is not confined to the roughs and rowdies who regard it as a perfect euthanasy for a man "to die with his boots on," but among the better classes of our young men it is coming to be regarded as a coveted distinction to be engaged in rencounters, and to exchange shots in the thoroughfares of business. To have killed his man is as much the badge of manhood, in certain circles, as is the scalp of an enemy among the Comanches. We hear of instances in which the minds of the young have been imbued with this barbarism, and in which occasions of shooting and killing are eagerly sought. Mere boys carry pistols, and for the purpose of vindicating their courage by resenting the most trivial provocations. A false standard of honor and manhood is being set up, and the youth of the period are being led away, and in some instances crazed and hallucinated by the terrible passion for blood.

The evil assumes the form of a prominent social development, and has become so alarming in its proportions as, in some localities, to leave little security to the lives of the most peaceably disposed. The boys, under the prevailing influences, and with such pernicious examples, are imbibing false notions, and are largely partaking of the spirit of violence around them. Human life was apparently never held so cheap as now. The daily record of slaughter is sickening, in which, upon the slightest occasion, the victims are waylaid, or in which the combatants meet in deadly encounters in public places. The killing of a man is held in little more abhorrence than the killing of a brute.

There are laws against the carrying of concealed weapons, but these laws are but seldom enforced. Now and then a poor and friendless tramp is arrested, and fined or imprisoned, but respectable gentlemen, who are walking arsenals, go free. The laws against carrying concealed weapons ought to be enforced, but there are difficulties in the way. It is hardly practicable to search every man that travels the highway or walks the streets, and in many cases it is pleaded that there is no security to those who are unarmed. Recently we were told of a presiding elder in a country district, who, riding an unfrequented road on his way to an appointment, was met by a man on foot who halted him, and demanded his money. Being unarmed, he gave him what money he had. Next his watch was required, and it was handed over. Then the highwayman remarked to the preacher that he was riding a fine horse, and, if allowed to keep him, he would raise an alarm and have him arrested. He must have the horse, and the rider dismounted; but as he did this, and watching his opportunity, he felled the robber by a single blow, tied him, seized his pistol, and took him to the nearest town, and delivered him over to the authorities. Not many could have done what this burly Methodist preacher did. The assault was made upon a man whose calling gave assurance that he was unarmed.

On the frontiers of Texas our pioneer preachers sometimes carry Winchester rifles to defend themselves against the savages, and occasionally use them with effect. Where life is in peril, is it admissible to go armed? In the streets of New Orleans, especially in the suburbs late at night, peaceable citizens are not unfrequently waylaid, garroted and robbed. Most reputable gentlemen tell us that the police afford no adequate protection, and that they are compelled to carry weapons to defend themselves from assault. But a few nights ago a gentleman, escorting a lady, was followed by a villain, who would have killed her protector and outraged the lady but for the prompt and fatal use of the pistol. If arms must be carried, it would be better to wear them openly, and not concealed. The necessity ought not to exist, but we cannot say that in some cases it does not. At any rate, it is difficult to answer those who in some instances put in this plea of necessity.

The remedy is in more thorough police, and a vigilant and prompt enforcement of the laws. If bloodshed were swiftly and severely punished, and if robbery and violence were visited with sure and heavy penalties, there would be relief at once. The death penalty for murder is not often enough inflicted, the criminal classes accept the chances of escape, and killing is regarded as a thrilling, or, at worst, as a venial offence. The cheap estimate of human life is at the bottom of the violence and bloodshed which prevails so fearfully. The preciousness of life, as held by the Mosaic law, and as protected by its sanctions, is no longer duly regarded. The slightest insult, the smallest gain, are considered a sufficient reason for killing, and there is a growing sentiment, among the young men especially, that the carrying of arms, and the use of them, are among the credentials of an honorable manhood. The laws and their enforcement depend upon public opinion, and this, again, upon right moral character and conviction.

The evangelistic agencies of the churches were never more active, conversions never more numerous, and, we may add, bloodshed and crime never more common. Is the law preached as it ought to be? Is the spirit of the decalogue pervade the Sunday schools? In expatiating on the love of Calvary, is the sermon on the mount forgotten? There are several things that conspire to the reign of violence. Among them are education severed from religious influences, idleness and the pressure of want, intemperance, and, perhaps, not the least, defective presentation of religious truth in our preaching and teaching.

There is an urgent demand at this time for an uprising and general crusade, moral, religious and political, against bloodshed. We need a better public sentiment, the enforcement of the laws, and the disarmament of private persons.

Getting Ready to Die.

An ex-governor, once a candidate for the presidency, and passed his seventieth year, is reported as saying that he had bid farewell to public life, and that he was trying to close up his personal and business affairs, "that he might get ready to die." It is a very reasonable thing for people to arrange their business affairs so that others may not suffer loss, and so that what they leave behind them may be disposed of according to their wishes. But the notion that they must withdraw from active life in order to get ready to die is a false one. If this were a needful preparation, then all had better withdraw from secular pursuits at once; since all are liable to die at any moment. We have read of certain monks who were required to dig their own graves, each one throwing out, at least a shovel full, every day. Actual seclusion from worldly pursuits is not the true preparation. Monasticism, and all its kindred expedients, are so many cowardly ways of shirking duty, and of retreating from the battle of life.

He is getting ready to die most effectually who continues in the harness to the last, and falls in the midst of his work. A busy secular life does not necessarily mean neglect of the welfare of the soul. Many of the busiest men—those most employed in business pursuits—have also been the most devoted in their religious course. The readiest man for death may be he whose hands and brain are full with secular affairs. It seems hard for many to look at religion as something altogether inconsistent with the daily routine of buying and selling, of farming and mechanical labor. And yet Christianity is adapted to a busy, bread-winning, toiling condition. Its duties do not interfere, its principles do not embarrass, its experience, in no conceivable way, hinders. On the contrary, godliness is profitable for all things. It is a help in the worry and weariness, and in the care and labor of business. While it is no bar to enterprise, and enjoins industry, it contributes to patience, and secures repose of mind. Its success it is a check to covetousness and to worldly-mindedness, and in adversity it cheers and supports, and saves from discouragement and despair.

A political career may be most unfriendly to personal piety, but there have been statesmen and legislators who have lived unsullied and right-eous lives. We must have magistrates, governors, law makers, presidents, and it is needful that some should be called into the political arena. The avocation is a legitimate one, and indispensable in the working of free institutions. It is a degradation and perversion of politics to stamp them as inconsistent with the maintenance of personal piety. If they have become so corrupt that a good conscience cannot be kept in connection with them, the fault is in the low condition of public morals. A good man in political life is a public blessing, and nowhere is the example and influence of such a man more needed. That an honorable and upright man in his old age should bid farewell to public life, for the avowed purpose of getting ready to die, is a very significant comment upon the politics of the day.

Retirement from the world was the last thing which the Master desired for his disciples. "I pray not that Thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that Thou shouldest keep them from the evil." Rather he would have them thrust out into the thickest of the world's activities, and that the grace of God might be manifested in their preservation from the evil. The model Christian life is not that of a recluse. Hermits and anchorites are not the truest persons. Christian merchants, Christian politicians, Christian lawyers, doctors and printers, and Christian ladies in all honest pursuits, are the real and potent witnesses for Christ. It is a grave mistake which many well-meaning people make—that they must have relief from business before they can prepare for death. The best preparation is that in which religion and occupation go hand in hand, and in which the very trials and cares of earthly pursuits are regarded as testing and developing the graces of piety. He who is waiting for leisure to make this preparation shows that he is utterly ignorant of what he needs, and that he is building upon a fatal misconception. He who works and prays, is a man among men, and walks humbly with God, abides in his calling and walks by faith, is always ready.

The Lectures on Preaching by Bishop Simpson.

BY DOUBLE T.

It has often been remarked that if the addresses of our Bishops, on receiving the class into full connection, were put into print, we should have a literature, the model of its kind. And here, now, are the lectures of Bishop Simpson, which, though delivered to the divinity students of Yale University, are at once recognized as old acquaintances, and they afford proof of the justness of the oft repeated observation. The popularity of these lectures adds to the satisfaction that upon such meet the young Cæsars of the itinerancy are led. And the guarantee they afford the public of a well and wisely instructed body of ministers, those under the care of the Bishops of Episcopal Methodism, may be verified at the session of almost any Annual Conference.

The paradox of Bishop Simpson will exercise a good many in its solution. His personal experience and example is a testimony against the utility of lectures on preaching. But his lectures urging conviction and industry as proper in preparation for preaching, has ingratiated the public. The Bishop himself progressed without the advantages of instruction, and succeeds without reference to models or obligation to rules.

What produced him, it may be urged, ought to be left to produce the others needed, but he offers no encouragement to such a conclusion. The finest corps of preachers are not of such mettle as the rank. Genius wears seven league boots, but a pair can be bought at no price, so the less favored must cover the space with shorter strides—i. e., do all the work needed to success. A successful mind does not suffer its lack of information or method as improving upon the course and methods of the schools—for it has success on another way only. Every one does not do so who is subjected to a similar exigency. Many contemporaries has the Bishop who have portrayed his line of action. But he is solitary among them in his greatness and popularity.

It is a curious coincidence that form and color are the main divisions of phenomena, and form and color are the main divisions of the subject of preaching also. The former the Bishop left to the loom and professor's note book, and chose the latter for discussion in his course of lectures. Why this show of roadsters once to form? Is it a designed slight put upon it, as of inferior importance to pract al work, in keeping with the old prejudice, that form matters nothing, so you have the sense? Or was it owing to lack of preparation to discuss form upon its own merits? It was an opportunity for gathering, at least, the instruments of construction and their use, which would have left nothing to want in these superficialities.

Many aspirants among the preachers will, from their great popularity, seek aid, but they will find no key to fit a single ward of the lock that shuts up and conceals the subject in a text.

Usage has established sermon as the proper name for discourses from the pulpit, and if a sacred discourse is best presented in the form of a sermon, then that form ought to be settled and respected.

Indifference to the form of a sermon is difficult to understand, for the presence of form is as bold in outlines, and as constant to the eye and mind, as the presence of color is.

It is certainly not true to nature to manifest a susceptibility to color, and to despise form. Where is there a better guide than nature? And it is not true to art to obscure form with a blaze of colors—form is first, and art is inseparable from the activity of construction. The claim to a higher liberty than nature allows—inspiration even—is without support. Grammar, rhetoric, logic and elocution are constant constituents of sacred oratory; their indispensable use reduces the art to which they so effectually contribute to their own standards. Homiletics, in its exaction of form, expresses its economy of resources, as rhetoric does in the allowable deviations from simple speech, and logic, in its exclusion of sophistry, and elocution, in its observance of true emphasis. Form concentrates, coheres and develops both sense and thought, and is the main aid to intelligible discourse.

To fix impression, to reduce instruction to principles, to lessen the contingency of result (the open fault of preaching), form is the true aid, as has been said; the earth may lose its color, but its form abides.

Mexican Border Missions.

Rev. A. H. Sutherland, superintendant of our Mexican Border Mission, in a communication to the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, says:

The twenty-five most southwesterly counties of Texas contain between forty and fifty thousand Mexicans, who, until within the last ten years, were absolutely under the domination of the Roman Catholic Church. Immediately on the other side of the Rio Grande, within the five hundred miles of its course included in our district, there are many large Mexican towns and settlements, all of which, with few exceptions, are accessible to and included in our work. This description gives the territorial outlines of our present field. But who shall set the bounds of its moral reach? The commercial travel and intercourse between this and the interior of Mexico in many directions are so many avenues by which we are constantly communicating light and new life to thousands of souls and localities which for generations have "sat in darkness and the shadow of death." While the migratory character of thousands of these people often causes our congregations to fluctuate in numbers, yet as these converts go out they generally carry their Bibles and their new profession with them to the illumination of other dark corners; and thus many large congregations have been formed where a preacher had never been. On this side of the line we have a stable and good government for the protection and encouragement of our work, while the frequent revolutions on the other side are a help to the cause by the exodus of thousands of Mexico's peace loving citizens to this side; and who, because of their sorrows and all alone in having to leave home and loved ones, are the more readily inclined to hear the consoling words of the gospel. When the "cruel war is over," the majority of them return, and with them often carry the pearl of great price.

But we are entering Mexico itself. One of our missions is now entirely on the other side of the Rio Grande, the others cross over from this side, and at this moment we are sending a preacher to Zaragoza, about forty miles into the State of Coahuila. Besides these we have six others exclusively in Texas. Of itinerant Mexican preachers we have thirteen, besides Bro. Norwood and myself. Six hundred adults are now members of the church, besides the hundreds of children baptized and the losses by death and otherwise. The work has so grown that the necessity of organization into an Annual Conference was provided for by the late General Conference.

Following the course of Methodism in Chicago, Annual Conferences will soon be proportionally as numerous in Mexico as in any other country. Methodist doctrine and economy are better adapted to Mexican character than are those of any other church. Roman oppression and villainy had borne down for three hundred and fifty years upon the Mexican people, until the miracle gave way and a general reaction set in, which would have landed them high up on the heretic shores of infidelity, had not Protestantism intervened. But while Protestantism has done much, as begun as it only been alleged, Mission work in Mexico is peculiar in some respects. Here we find the people generally dissatisfied with the religion of their ancestry. In most heathen countries it is not so, and to create a proper dissatisfaction is the herculean task that the missionaries have to perform. Here the laws favor us by placing us on an equal footing with the old religion of the country. Moreover, the forms—"the powers that be"—are the advocates, not the champions, of principles, social civil and religious in unison with those of our faith. Nearly or all of the army officers are liberals, consequently not clergy. In Mier, Mexico, one soulful Sabbath morning we witnessed the rather novel spectacle of a Mexican colonel marching in full uniform several companies of his troops to our preaching. The colonel himself with his major, captains and lieutenants were seated in the large congregation of citizens every evening listening to the pure gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ in their own sonorous tongue. Masonry is very prevalent among the higher classes of Mexicans, which is greatly in our favor. Besides all these, the contiguity of the United States with its triumphant vindication of Republican and Protestant principles has a powerful formative influence on the public opinion, civil and religious, of Mexico. When but a lad I remember one day saying to my teacher: "I believe that God will yet visit Mexico with the gospel; she has never had a chance, and I believe He will give her one." I now see the simple prophecy fulfilling every day. I then felt the first movings of a call to this work. It has grown with the years, and I feel in the right place.

Dr. Howard Crosby As a Temperance Reformer.

The Rev. Howard Crosby, D. D., Chancellor of the University of New York, and pastor of a large Presbyterian congregation in that city, is also the president of a temperance organization. His aim is not so much the support of temperance orators, and the distribution of wholesome temperance literature, as the practical work of enforcing laws in regard to the sale of liquor. These laws on the statute book of all our States have been a dead letter. They are disregarded or violated with impunity, and without fear of penalty or censure. To make them operative, and achieve the good purpose of their enactment in the State of New York, Dr. Crosby and his coadjutors have directed their powerful efforts. From the very first they have met stern opposition. The rum power has vast resources with which to employ strikers and corrupt men in office. They have hotly contested every field. But Dr. Crosby has been fearless and persevering. He has not sought to interfere with those licensed according to law, but has insisted that the law should be faithfully obeyed and vigorously enforced. Some temperance extremists and enthusiasts have questioned his methods and antagonized his views. Results, however, vindicate the wisdom of his course. In a report of the society's work last year he claims that the following has been accomplished:

1. Shaping and sharpening public opinion.

2. The vertebrating of officers and judges.

3. The snubbing of the insolent rum power.

4. The shutting up of the lewd theatres.

5. The closing of 1,739 groggeries, so that there are in New York city to-day 1,739 groggeries less than there were twelve months ago.

6. The laying bare of the source of the trouble; the cause of difficulty in enforcing law, to wit: (a) Weakness of judges in filling the least penalties; and (b) wickedness of excise commissioners licensing all the dens of infamy as "hotels."

7. The formation of a rallying center for law and order.

Those are the blessings which the Lord and $4,000 have brought us in a year.

That is practical and tangible. He has not contented himself with "perspirational rhetoric" and eloquent platitudes on the evils of strong drink, but has gone, with the courage of profound conviction, and demanded that law shall be respected and society protected.

Would God there was a Crosby in every city and village of our land, urged onward by the imperial command of duty, whose fearless and unremitting efforts would also result in "the shaping and sharpening of public opinion," and "the vertebrating of officers and judges." We need officials with strong spinal columns. Only such are worthy of public trust. The solemn oath of office "to honestly obey and execute the laws" should continually ring in their consciences, and make them disdain any compromise with wrong-doing. All honor to this brave, practical reformer! May his disciples, in the wisdom of their plans and the grand results of their undertakings, be numbered by multiplied thousands.

A Study for the Preacher.

We have called attention occasionally to this subject. Next to the need of a parsonage is the need of a study for the preacher. The provisions for it ought to be made when houses are built or rented for the pastor. Rev. M. H. Wells closes an article in the Texas Christian Advocate with the following points:

My fifth and last reason is founded in fairness and justice. If you leave your preacher in the midst of his family to do his praying, thinking, composing, arranging, communing, and to hold all private interviews with solicitous friends, you do an injustice to all parties.

1. To his family. His demands are peculiar. He is the only one in the house called to preach. Upon his conscience is laid a special burden. Certain convictions and obligations concern him alone. The true wife will seek in every reasonable way to conserve and promote the interests of her husband's high calling, but I submit that it is an injustice to convert her room and the children's play-ground into a preacher's study. They have no sermons to prepare, and those seeking advice would rather they were not about. The wife and children want company, cheer and pleasure. To compel silence and stay the romp of the little ones is a wrong. To allow it precludes the possibility of his carrying on successfully his arrangements. Here is a serious conflict. A compromise is a heavy sacrifice to both parties.

2. To the preacher. He is cramped, confused and hindered. If he stops to help entertain every caller his life is dissipated. If he goes on with his reading or writing, he accomplishes but little besides is voted morose and unsociable.

3. To those seeking a private intercourse no place is provided and the poor man must go without help.

4. To the church he serves and the public generally. I have indulged no speculation. I have not dared to guess. I have not named luxuries. My reasons for urging every appointment to supply its pastor with a study are at the very bottom of his happiness and usefulness. No young man can grow in grace and knowledge without it. No middle aged or old man can maintain ground won in its absence. I can name and describe a case taken from average ministerial life. The one room is for family use, reception, parlor and study. All the company is to be received and entertained there. Add these to the noise and confusion incident to house-keeping, the coming and going of callers on business and pleasure. Add to these the coming of the washer woman, wood chopper, delivery man, agents, tramps, and persons inquiring for the residence of Mr. Jones and Mr. Smith, said to be living near the Methodist church, and I defy the ages to show me a preacher who, under these circumstances, has maintained a good temper and grown steadily in grace and knowledge. Bring your pastor from this bedlam to his pulpit on Sunday, and find a man prepared to edify an average congregation, and you will have produced the eighth wonder of the world. To arrange, methodize and beautify this thought is impossible. The thing can't be done. That man, woman or child who could dare to say an unkind word of a sermon prepared in the midst of these unfriendly and confusing conditions is capable of a superlative injustice. I write in righteous wrath. I pronounce this, my anathema, on the heads of congregations who make exravagant demands, and yet make no adequate provision for their pastors. You teach your children to abhor the character of Pharaoh and feel sorry for the poor Israelites. They were required to perform impossibilities. Here at your door is a repetition of the same injustice. You demand sermons and yet fail to supply the opportunity of their preparation. Preachers can't tell what they don't know. They can't know without study. They can't study without times and place for study. You demand in the pulpit accuracy, precision and readiness of statement. These can only be attained after laborious research and painstaking care in preparation. You demand fervor, pathos and piety in the deliverances of your preacher. These are the fruit of much secret prayer, meditation and heart communing. Without a study and these hours the preacher goes inevitably into generalizations, platitudes and ragged utterances. The laws of mind and of science compel this state of things. Somebody will have to account to the Lord Jesus for the good that might have been done. Your selfishness and want of attention to these prime needs of the ministry will be chargeable in the last day with the loss of souls. I fear many souls will be lost for the want of a study.

R. V. Young J. Allen, writing to the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, from China, says:

In this connection, therefore, I may be pardoned for referring to the status of the missionary work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in China, for instance, we now have four missionary families and one unmarried female missionary, or five in all, to represent a constituency or membership of nearly eight hundred thousand. To these one is supplied by the Sunday-school contributions in the Missouri Conference, one by similar contributions in the Tennessee Conference; the labors of one are self supporting; and three is supported by the special contributions of the Woman's Missionary Society; thus leaving only one to be provided for out of the collections of more than thirty Conferences, among which there are more than twenty, perhaps each of which could easily support an additional missionary to China or to some other field, e. g. Brazil or Mexico. Nor are the doors waiting for this important work. During my recent visit, I met many at Atlanta, during the General Conference, at the Vanderbilt University, and at De Pauw College, commencement, who are ready, and waiting the authority and support of the church, to go abroad.

And what is more, the door is open wide. That was the message I bore from China to the churches, and now that I have returned, I renew the call, "come over and help us."

The Pastor's Visiting and Memorandum Book, issued by our Nashville Publishing House, and sold at twenty-five cents a copy, is a very desirable thing for our pastors. Dr. Littlefield, presiding elder of Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference, in order to insure full and valuable information concerning the work, furnishes each preacher in his district with a copy. This memorandum book gives considerable space to the church paper, and is a reminder as well as a convenience to the agents. His general use would not only increase the circulation of our church papers, but it would promote accuracy in the accounts, and secure complete statistics in regard to the number of families supplied. Referring to his own practice, Dr. Linfield says:

I would modestly suggest a like application to the presiding elders of our Conference, of what appears to be an altogether practical method of ascertaining what is so serviceable for an intelligent exhibit of the church, and of pastoral work, and what we may, by a conjoint and persevering movement, accomplish in behalf of the ADVOCATE carrying the claim of the ADVOCATE into every home, as this would necessarily require, could but result in a large collection of arrears and accessions to the subscriptions list. I am candid in this expression of interest, in behalf of the ADVOCATE, and submit the idea of the general use all over and throughout the Conference of the pastor's visiting manual, as a practical, simple scheme to unite us all in a direct and sustained effort to bring our Conference again into the largest service in our work.

The Pastor's Visiting and Memorandum Book can be ordered from Nashville, or from G. T. Lathrop, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

Franklin Street, Mobile.

A CORRECTION.

MOBILE, ALA., March 18, 1879.

MR EDITOR: According to the minutes of the last session of the Alabama Conference there was no money collected for the Bible cause in Franklin Street Church; and as the minutes are incorrect in this particular it is but an act of justice to a most liberal church to correct the minutes. The secretary of the Conference is not responsible for the omission, as no report was made to him; and failure to make the report was the result of an oversight, not premeditation.

Franklin Street raised for the Bible cause last year $30.

Yours truly,

HENRY D. MOORE.

Death of Another Veteran.

The following note announces the death of one of the superannuated members of the Alabama Conference. He had been living for several years in Georgia. Rev. J. W. Lee, writing from Carrollton, Ga., March 18, says:

Rev. Hillard Hunter, a member of the Alabama Conference, died in January of this year. He had been on the superannuated list for the past few years. He was for a long while one of the most faithful, efficient men in the Conference. He died in great peace, and with bright hopes for the future. Some extended notice will be given of him by some member of his Conference at its approaching session.

The Jewish South, recently published in Atlanta, Ga., has been removed to New Orleans. It is issued weekly, and seems to be ably edited and rigorously conducted. E. B. M. Browne is editor in chief. The mailing before us stirs up the subject of organizing Jewish Sunday-schools. Here is a sentence which with a little change would be a word in season to Methodists or other Christians:

If there be not more than two Jewish families in your village, meet any way and start a Sunday school for your children.

We wish the Jewish South a prosperous career.

Rev. Dr. H. M. Smith, editor of the Southwestern Presbyterian, is announced to deliver two lectures at the First Presbyterian Church, of this city, on the Monuments of Egypt and the Exodus. The lectures are to be delivered on the nights of March 27 28. We have no doubt that Dr. Smith will handle his themes with agility, and in an entertaining way. The proceeds of the lectures go to the Sunday-school library fund. Price of admission to one or both lectures 15 cents. Weeks indebted to Mr. L. H. Gardner for complimentary tickets.

We regret to learn, says the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, that the Rev. George C. Leaver, an esteemed member of the Florida Conference, died at Clear Water, Fla., February 4. He was at the time of his death, superannuated. We have received following ordinary by the Conference from the Rev. W. H. H. Rogers:

The same mail that brought us the news of brother Leaver's death gave the sad information that Mrs. Frances E. Hampton, wife of the Rev. W. O. Hampton, of the Florida Conference, died at the parsonage at Lake Butler, Florida, the last day of January. Our new glorified friends were ready.

Mrs. Catherine Butler, widow of the late B. J. Butler, died at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. G. T. Lathrop, in New Orleans, on Thursday, March 20, 1879. Mrs. Butler had been a long and patient sufferer, but she now rests in peace. We tender to the bereaved our sincere sympathies.

We have received a printed report of the relief work of the Young Men's Christian Association, of New Orleans, on the yellow fever epidemic of 1878. It is a record of generous donations from many sources, and of self-sacrificing labor on the part of the members of the association.

The chapel of Randolph-Macon College was destroyed by fire on the evening of March 12. It was an old wooden building. The contents were saved. The regular work of the college will not be interrupted.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States will meet in the Second Presbyterian Church, Louisville, Ky., on the third Thursday (15th day) of May, 1879, at eleven o'clock A. M. The opening sermon is to be preached by the Rev. T. E. Peck, D. D., Moderator of the last Assembly.

The New Orleans District Conference meets at the St. Charles Avenue Church on Wednesday, April 2, at half-past seven P. M. Bishop Keener is to preside.

Rev. John W. White, a superannuated member of the Virginia Conference, died March 12, aged seventy-six years.

Rev. John W. Haskew, preacher in charge of Bartholomew circuit, Little Rock Conference, died March 2.

Decoy Subscriptions.

A very happy description is this of those subscriptions which are put down for effect. Sportsmen know what decoy ducks and geese are. Decoy subscriptions are among the modern devices for raising money to pay church debts. A case has recently come before the court in Brooklyn, and the man decoyed was released from payment. Here is the report of the matter as we find it in the New York Christian Advocate:

The courts have frequently been occupied with suits brought to enforce or avoid subscriptions to religious and benevolent undertakings. One of the latest has just been concluded in Brooklyn before Judge Reynolds and a jury. William J. Gleason, ex-Treasurer of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, brought suit against the society to recover $1 443 48 money advanced when he was treasurer of the church. The defense alleged, as a counter claim, that Gleason had subscribed $1 000 toward clearing the church from debt. Gleason admitted having made such a subscription, but claimed he had been induced to do so by misrepresentation, that the amount of the debt had been understated, and that decoy subscriptions had been announced. The court held that, putting out of the question the claim of the plaintiff that the whole amount of the debt was to have been paid within six months in order to render his pledge valid, the defendant was bound by the terms stated by Mr. Kimball, who solicited the subscriptions, that the whole amount of the debt should be provided for before the pledges were binding, and that defendant had not shown that they had complied with that condition. The court also held that the subscriptions by married women and minors were not legally binding, and that defendant had not, in accordance with the conditions of the subscriptions sufficiently to lay the foundation against the plaintiff for a counter-claim for the amount of his pledge. Judge Reynolds said he was sorry to have to come to that conclusion, and tried to find a reason for sending the matter to the jury, and put the responsibility on them, but there was no ground to warrant such a proceeding. He then directed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed, $1 443.48.

The device of "decoy subscriptions"—where a man puts down his name for a large amount upon a private understanding that he is not to be called upon to pay it, the only signing in the expectation that his example and influence will induce others to subscribe, has several times come up in the courts. It sometimes happens that the canvassers forget all about this private understanding, and the gentleman whose name heads the list is sued for defending on the ground that he was only a decoy. The fact of the decoy-ness is that bills will not be negotiated for it is a fraud on all subsequent signers. A man will not be allowed to falsify his written engagement by proof that he did not intend it in connection especially with other persons have believed it and to consequence have given their money to the cause of it. At other times some sufferer drags the case, and defends against his subscription, because he was enticed to make it by misrepresentations. The decisions in such cases tend toward the rule that the deception is a valid one. A person who is led to promise money to an enterprise of which he personally knows little by seeing that a fellow-townsman of good standing and judgment has subscribed liberally, is cheated, if the top subscription was in reality one. He may expose the fraud and repudiate the promise he is led him to make. In other words, a decoy subscription binds the subscriber and releases the honest ones.

Books and Periodicals.

THE SOUTHERN STUDENT'S HAND-BOOK OF SECRETARYSHIP, READING AND ORATORY. By John H. Jones, superintendent of Texas Military Institute, Austin. A. S. Barnes & Co. New York, Chicago and New Orleans. 1879.

This volume is a handsome 12mo of 121 pages. The selections are exclusively from the speeches and writings of Southern authors and orators. They are, for the most part, such as have not heretofore appeared in text-books, and the authors of many of the pieces are still living. The character of the selections is excellent, both as to literary merit, and as to purity and moral tone. It is a work that we can heartily commend to be used in our Southern schools. For sale by G. T. Lathrop, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. Price, postpaid, $1 25.

THE SECOND ADAM. By J. Oswald Swinney. St. Louis: Logan D. Dameron, manager. The Advocate Publishing House, 1879.

The author in fourteen chapters treats of the nature and work of man, man's sin and fall, the problem of salvation, natural evil a preparation for the gospel, processes of salvation by Jesus Christ, God's forgiveness of sin, the new life, and other cognate topics. Our examination of the work has been hasty and incomplete, but we infer that the author opposes the substitutional view of the atonement, and adopts the moral influence theory. This we regard as a most serious and fundamental error. Dr. C. W. Miller's exposition of the atonement in our Quarterly Review for January is much more satisfactory; and so are the views of Watson, and of our other standards. The volume is an 18 no, 151 pages. Price, fifty cents.

A SERIES OF LECTURES ON TRANSubstantiation and Other Errors of the Papacy, delivered in St. Louis, Mo., by E. M. Marcellus. St. Louis: Logan D. Dameron, agent, Advocate Publishing House, 1878.

We gave a notice of this volume more than a year ago. It will suffice now to say that the lectures were first published in 1860 and that they have been received with favor by the Protestant public. A more complete treatment of papal errors might be possible to-day, as there are scores of them that have appeared with special prominence since Marvin's lectures were delivered. But they cover the ground substantially, and are calculated to do much good. The work is for sale by D. L. Mitchell Religious Book Depository, 94 Camp street, New Orleans. Price $2.

A GOOD NAME A GODLY HERITAGE. By Mrs. Mary D. R. Boyd. Philadelphia: Presbyterian Board of Publication.

This is evidently a good story, both moral and religious, and one that boys in their teens can read with interest and advantage. The volume is a 12mo, 240 pages, handsomely bound.

—We are glad to welcome the "The dogmatic and Homiletical Monthly," edited by Dr. R. N. Sheid, and published at Richmond, Va. The outside and inside are both attractive, paper and typography are good, and the table of contents varied and instructive. We need just such a periodical as this and we thank Dr. Sheid for taking the enterprise in hand. All our preachers, traveling and local, should take it. It will be worth to them much more than the subscription-price. The following is the table of contents: Dogmatic Theology, by Bishop D. S. Doggett; The Conscience a Witness to a Personal God, by the Rev. W. E. Edwards; A Vital Question, Christian Intelligencer; New Testament Names of Ministers of the Gospel; A Mennonite Call to the Ministry, Christian at Work; The Conflagration of Doubt, the Interior; How to Reach the Masses in Our Cities, by the Rev. S. Rogers, D. D.; The Homily—Its History; True Place and Fundamental Rules of Homiletics, Dr. Lange; Rules Against Misreading, Misquoting and Misinterpreting the Scriptures, by the Rev. J. C. Granbery, D. D.; The Godly Man's Assurance that his Prayers are Heard, a Sermon by the Editor; The Cross of Christ; Exposition of Romans v, 1, 2 by the Rev. F. O. Summers, D. D.; Editorial Miscellany; Our New Enterprise; Book Notices; The Sunday-School; Brevities. Price, $2 50 per annum.

—The National Repository for April contains: The Upper Hudson, illustrated; Geneva, illustrated; Milton's Stone, the Meaning of Heavens; Versailles and its Associations; A Queer Letter; Charity; Un Conteur Malalaise; A Parable; Among the Thorns, continued; Songs of the Olden Time; Reign of Blood; Recollections of William Cullen Bryant; On the Big Horn Mountains; Earthquakes in Palestine; Editorial Miscellany.

—Wide Awake for April contains its usual number of spirited and beautiful illustrations. The titles of some of the articles are: April Fools and Other Fools; Fun Digberty Bunch; Our American Artists; Rifles and Pills; Poet's Homes; Mardi Gras in Nice; Don Quixote Jr.; The Wise and the Foolish Muse.

—Lippincott's Magazine for April has: A Visit to the Shrines of Old Virginia, illustrated; English Vignettes, illustrated; Women's Husbands; Folk-Songs; Mallory, the Life and the Legend, illustrated; Trees in the City; The Hoosiers at Home; Through Winding Ways; Ancient Decorative Stuffs; Our Beaux; My Village in the South; A Bit of Old Satsuma; A Lady's Life in Brazil; Our Monthly Gossip; Literature of the Day.

—We are indebted to D. L. Mitchell, 94 Camp street, New Orleans, for packages of ornamental cards—Words of Life, Wayside Flowers. They are very beautiful, and specially suited for Sunday-school prizes. They are published by the American Tract Society, New York.

Please Read This.

The postoffices of all the preachers of the patronizing Conferences, and the places at which they will represent the interests of this paper, are desired the earliest day possible, to enable the publisher to send forward the lists of subscribers for correction and collection.

The publisher also wishes to be notified of any change in postoffices, failures to receive the paper promptly, or other matters of interest that have not received prompt attention. It is his wish to correct all errors in accounts, and that every agent and subscriber shall be satisfied.

In ordering changes be sure and give the place from as well as that to which the paper is changed. Attention to this is of the very highest importance.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

POZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER is acknowledged by thousands of ladies who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not roughen the skin, clog pores, or leave black spots in the pores. Mothers can apply it to infants who become chafed with a surety of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box, sold by druggists, and at depot, 607 North Sixth street, St. Louis (Lindell Hotel).

For Throat Diseases and Coughs. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" like all other really good things are frequently imitated, and purchasers should be careful to obtain the genuine, which is prepared by John I. Brown & Sons.

A WORD OF CAUTION.

When yellow fever is prevailing it is well to cleanse the blood, regulate the liver, force away bile and remove from the system with Magnolia Cathartic. Any druggist can put up the 5 ingredients necessary to make it, quickly and inexpensive to the user. Let no one be afraid to use it, as it is not a strong cathartic, but a mild one, and can be taken by the young or old. Nausea and illness are unknown with its use, and it is recommended by physicians who have used it during the epidemic of 1878. Directions for making and using are given with each bottle. Ask your druggist for it. Wholesale druggists will supply it.

A Change that is a Blessing.

There is no remarkable feature in the progress of science and the knowledge of man, more striking than the discovery of the chemical action of iron in the human system, as it is there found in the blood, muscles, etc. Until recently, however, it could not be used with the same effect as now, for the reason that it was impossible to obtain the iron in a form sufficiently pure to be taken into the system without producing more evil than good. Now, however, it is different, and Brown's Iron Bitters can be used with the most beneficial results. Those who have used it say it is the only medicine that will not blacken the teeth, cause headache or constipation, and they all say it is the best medicine they ever used. Dr. Scott's Electric Hair and Flesh Brush can be used with the Iron Bitters, and will assist in producing a healthy circulation of the blood, which is necessary to secure the best results from the use of any tonic. Ask your druggist for Brown's Iron Bitters, and see that you get the genuine, which has the trade-mark and crossed red lines on the wrapper.

Farm, Garden and Household.

PRICKLY COMFREY FOR STOCK.—I am so situated, with little land and more leisure, that a splendid green fodder plant would be a blessing. Hence I watch the papers for anything new on the subject. Two years ago the agricultural papers had much to say about prickly comfrey, a fodder plant newly introduced from Europe. It was said that one acre of plants would produce 80 tons of green fodder in a season. I secured and planted a quantity of the sets. They were slow in coming up, and did not amount to much till the last of July. But by that time I became convinced that the yield of thick leaves would be abundant. Last spring I took a plate and, after giving them, set out a quarter of an acre. They grew at once, and rapidly. I had a piece of rye that I wished to cut at the earliest moment for some calves, but this newly set comfrey was ahead of the rye. I cut baskets full for ten days before the rye was large enough to cut.

I became convinced that the plant would yield enormous crops, but alas, in common with others all over the country who were trying it, I found that the cows would not eat it. For this reason I conclude the plant was a failure, and paid little attention to its culture. But it was the first green thing I could get for the calves in the spring, if they ate it readily and would eat it all summer long. In the fall 20 acres of my land became vacant, having been sown in small grain and grass that was harvested. The comfrey patch, which had by this time made a large growth, lay in this field. About the last of August I began herding my cows in this field. As they passed in they went across the comfrey lot, and would pick as they passed along. It was not long till they would leave oats, wheat and timothy stubble and slough grass, and go back to the comfrey; and on till winter they kept it nibbled to the ground.

I am now convinced that I have in this plant the most valuable fodder crop ever introduced. It is a forerunner of spring, growing somewhat after the manner of burdock or rhubarb. It starts as early in the spring and keeps green as late as horse radish. Indeed, there is no plant on my place that keeps green so late. It is propagated from seed or root cuttings, in the same way that horse radish is propagated. A beginner should order these sets and plant them in the garden the first year, then the next year divide the roots the same as the plant roots are divided. Set three feet apart and cultivate as you would potatoes. As soon as the leaves are large enough commence cutting. It can be cut five or six times in a season, and renews itself a little after the manner of horse radish. Nearly all that have tried it find after they have once induced the cows to eat it, they will eat it greedily. This is especially the case if they are fed with it from the time they are calves.—Correspondent of Prairie Farmer.

JAPANESE CHRYSANTHEMUMS.—The beauty of the Japanese Chrysanthemums, their brilliant color and varied form, have been strikingly effective this autumn, and it is worthy of note that they have generally bloomed early, while the early flowering incurved types have been quite late. Of the newer Japanese varieties, the following may be said to have made a place for themselves in collections: Diamond, creamy chocolate with gold at orange in the center, large double flowers and prettily twisted petals; Peter the Great, pale yellow, the flowers large in size, and very striking in appearance; Red Gauntlet, dark crimson, a fine late flower of color, particularly striking in appearance; Salina, delicate pink of pinkish tint, a very distinct and taking variety; Magnum Bonum, clear lilac, very fine; Mr. Barnes, clear deep buttercup yellow, extra fine quality; Emperor of China, white, deepening to blush with age; Bronze Dragon, very fine; Fulgine, pinkish lilac, very bright and effective, and distinct in character; Baron de Bruther, clear delicate rose, very good; Soleil Levant, clear yellow; and Royal Soleil, crimson burnished with orange, fine and effective. Of the older varieties no collection would be complete without Comtesse de Beauregard, Catterlin, Elaine, Fair Maid of Guelness, Garnet, Grandiflora, Golden Dragon, James Salter, M. Charles Hubert, Purple King, Plantagenet, Red Dragon, The Queen and the Dairno.—Gardener's Chronicle, London.

REMEDY FOR SEA-SICKNESS.—Dr. D. Farrar Parker, of Mississippi River Quarantine Station, writes to the Scientific American of a preparation suggested to him as corrective of sea sickness, by Prof. Carl Ring of Bonn, Prussia. We condense the result of his experiments of the remedy upon himself. If we can in any way help any of our readers to ward off this wholly unnecessary ocean travel, we shall be very happy.

Mix equal parts of nitrite amyl and alcohol. Take a dozen or so deep inhalations from the bottle as soon as the nausea begins. Repeat whenever it returns, and "confidence" will soon be restored. After an hour or so it will be no longer necessary.

THE Rural Mr. Seth Green, alluding to the methods of attracting birds to birdhouses, offers the following advice: "Do not put more than one bird-house about your premises the first season. Add one every year thereafter. If you put up a number, a pair of birds will come, inspect each in succession, and fly away not to return; just as when you go into a store where there are a large number of the kind of articles you want, and after looking at them you will go somewhere else. If there was but one you would buy it, but in the great number you cannot make a choice."

A practical farmer residing near Atlanta, Georgia, says that he has succeeded in ridding his cabbages of all manner of insects, by sprinkling them thoroughly with a solution of lime. Take half an ounce of gun aloes, powder it as finely as you can, then put two teaspoonfuls of common cooking soda into the powdered aloes and mix well; then pour on it a quart of boiling water and stir it briskly a few minutes. The best way to sprinkle the cabbage is to apply it with a syringe or sprinkler, as the brine-like mixture does not wash off as readily as water.

SUMMER SOUP.—Take half a pint of shrimps, pick out all the fine from the tails, pound the rest in a mortar with the juice of half a lemon and a piece of butter; pass the whole through a sieve. Make a pint of melted butter, put the meat from the tails into it, and heat it over the fire, but when the sauce begins to boil throw in the shrimp butter that has come through the sieve, and do without a moment's delay.

MOCK CUSTARD.—Beat a pint and a half of sweet milk, sweeten and flavor to taste. Beat three eggs very light and stir them in; put two teaspoonfuls of sugar and a piece of salt. Stir this into the boiling milk, spread this when cool between two crusts of the cake as made for Washington pie, and you have a nice cream pie.

RENNET ICE.—Take eight quarts of sweet cream, three pints of sugar, and flavor to taste. Put the cream in a freezer, and when it begins to freeze add a pint of rennet, which can be procured at any drug store. Stir the rennet in thoroughly, and then cover the freezer and let it stand undisturbed for about an hour, or until the cream is thick enough to eat. Then freeze as usual. This is delicious and simple, and requires no cooking.

UNLESS Pickles should be tightly sealed while they are still hot, or they will soften. Keep them always covered with vinegar, and if the vinegar should weaken, it can be boiled and poured over the pickles. Pickles will sometimes spoil in the cask, and a pickle jar.

ACID fruits, if cooked in tubes or copper kettles, should not be allowed to remain in them any length of time after cooking, as the acid will act on the metal, and produce poisonous compounds.

BOILED EGGS.—Put dairy and fruit in a vessel, then put the vessel in a kettle of water and boil. The same without sugar.—Detroit Post and Tribune.

Amendments to Charter OF THE

MERCHANTS' MUTUAL

Insurance Company.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 10, 1879.

AT THE REGULAR MEETING OF THE Board of Directors, held on the thirteenth of January, 1879, the following members being present:

Messrs. P. Fourchy, P. Maspero, D. Fatjo, J. B. Lafleur, M. W. Smith, Ed. Toby, John Geddes, J. J. Fernandez and Charles Laffite.

Upon the petition of a large majority of the stockholders the following amendments to the charter of the Company were unanimously adopted, under the powers vested in the Board of Directors by the fourteenth article of the charter:

ARTICLE EIGHTEENTH.

The first article of the charter is so amended as to postpone the expiration of the charter until the thirty-first day of May, eighteen hundred and ninety-three, unless the affairs of the Company be sooner liquidated by a vote of two-thirds of the members of the corporation.

ARTICLE NINETEENTH.

The capital stock of the Company is fixed at six hundred thousand dollars. This change to take effect from the first day of June next, when new certificates of stock will be issued. The new shares to be one hundred dollars each. Certificates to be issued for fractional parts of a share to be ultimately consolidated into full shares by purchase or sale.

I, the undersigned, Recorder of Mortgages in and for the parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, do hereby certify that the within and foregoing amendment of the charter of the Merchants' Mutual Insurance Company is this day recorded in this office, in book 152, folio 295 and 296.

1879 - SHADINES - 1879

NINTH SEASON.

Our this season's catch now ready is the finest we have ever produced. Years of trial have proved their unequaled superiority, Purity and Economy, and being unexcelled as a Preserved Fish they are now a recognized favorite in the world's market.

The unparalled success in former seasons induced the packing of imitation goods by other parties, which were bought by some dealers through ignorance or their eagerness. Such purchases were attended with the usual results.

The celerity with which a luncheon or meal can be obtained, (as they require no cooking or preparation, being always ready) renders them peculiarly acceptable to travelers, picnic and excursion parties, or for general use; their delicious, piquante flavor satisfies the palate of the most fastidious, while their cheapness, being now at about one half of the original price, meets the requirements of the economical.

are packed in hermetically sealed tins, essentially boneless, in a mild, pleasing appetizing sauce, palatable to all, free from the oily properties of the sardine, retaining only the natural oil of the Shad, and ready for the table at all times, for dinner, lunch or evening meal, by merely opening the box.

We are the only packers of the GENUINE SHADINES. They are our Trade Mark.

Incomparably the Best and Cheapest Windmill. Protected by two patents. Twenty-Eight First Premiums. Light, but strong and durable. Has more wind surface, runs in lighter winds, is more automatic, and pumps more water than any other windmill ever before made. Requires no attention, no counterbalance, no pumping expensive. It has successfully withstood the hurricanes of the West, while other mills that stood near them have been destroyed. It is rapidly superseding others there. See certificates and testimonials in our illustrated Catalogue.

EDUCATIONAL.

Woodville Female Seminary.

A NON-SECTARIAN ACADEMY, UNDER the supervision of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mississippi Conference; Hon. E. McGehee, President of Board of Trustees. For Thoroughness of instruction, healthfulness, cheapness, and many other advantages, is not surpassed. We invite those interested to examine our credentials, and to obtain circulars, by calling upon Mr. Philip Werlein, New Orleans, La., or address the Principal, A. J. WRIGHT, Woodville, Miss.

The Loquet-LeRoy Institute

AND KINDERGARDEN DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, 280 Camp Street.—This institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses MOISE, Cecelia W., Sallie L. and Corinne, the latter relicte of the late R. G. Radol, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successors of Mme Loquet LeRoy, whose good will and right to conduct the School under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No change whatever in the conduct and management of the School. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to the institution, and that of their friends, and the public generally, promising strict devotion to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge. C. W. MOISE, Principal.

REFERRING TO THE ABOVE MADAME LOQUET-LEROY announces to her friends and former patrons the entire confidence she has in her successors, being in every way suited to the high trust they have assumed. She bespeaks for them a continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded her, and that she will still be actively connected with the institution. For terms and particulars apply to the principal.

FITS OR EPILEPSY.

To the Editor of the Advocate:

DEAR SIR: Will you please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the cure of the above disease, and that by its use in my practice I have cured thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing, and will give

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS

for a case it will not cure or greatly benefit. Indeed, so strong is my faith, I will send together with a valuable treatise, to any sufferers addressing me, giving their name, express and P. O. address. Please show this letter to any one you may know who is suffering with this terrible disease, and oblige. Respectfully yours,

ONE BOTTLE FREE,

DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl Street, N. Y.

MILK OF MAGNESIA

IS THE most perfect preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEART BURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach. The pleasant taste and milk-like smoothness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and will act as a laxative when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The smoothness of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a fractional part of a single drop magnified 250 times. The first is the calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia now offered. The difference between these is most striking, for whereas the undissolved precipitates and particles in the drop of calcined Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor entirely free from the objectionable precipitates, in fact perfectly dissolved.

Bearing in mind MILK OF MAGNESIA, AS NOW OFFERED, is dissolved (the other) it is, at first, different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians will find this an elegant and effective substitute already acquainted with this form of Magnesia. An eligible aperient for children, delicate ladies and pulmonary invalids by addressing

Ague Cure

Is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted a speedy and certain cure for Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. In miasmatic districts, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, dissatisfaction of stomach, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and extremities, are early premonitions of severer symptoms which terminate in the ague paroxysm succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact that quinine, arsenic, and other poisonous mineral drugs, the basis of so-called "Fever and Ague Preparations," Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics" in the market. The practitioner who relies on these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the malarial and their own drug poison in the system, producing quinism, deafness, ringing in the ears, headache, neuralgia, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. Ayer's Ague Cure thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, mineral, or anything that could injure the most delicate patient, but is strengthening excellence, always its certainty to cure, so that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, Ayer's Ague Cure, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system into a vigorous, healthy condition.

We warrant it when taken according to directions.

Sydney Smith, after Macaulay's return from the East, remarked to a friend who had been speaking of the distinguished conversationalist: "Yes, he is certainly more agreeable since his return from India. His enemies might perhaps have said before (though I never did so) that he talked rather too much; but now he has occasional flashes of silence, that make his conversation perfectly delightful."

It is related that, as some friends of Campbell, the author of "Hohenlinden," were having his room after a late supper, one of the number had the misfortune to fall down a long flight of stairs. The poet, alarmed by the noise, opened the door, and inquired, "What's that?" "'Tis I, sir, rolling rapidly," was the immediate reply of his fallen friend.

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER.

FOR WOMEN & CHILDREN.

Females suffering from pain and weakness will derive great comfort and strength from the use of Benson's Capcine Porous Plaster. Where children are affected, with whooping cough, ordinary coughs or colds or weak lungs, it is the one and only treatment they should receive. This article contains new medicinal elements such as is found in no other remedy in the same form. It is far superior to the common porous plasters, Dr. Scott's electrics, Allcock's and other external remedies. It relieves pain at once, strengthens and cures where other plasters will not even relieve. For Lame and Weak Back, Rheumatism, Kidney diseases and all local aches and pains it is also the best known remedy.

Ask for Benson's Capcine Plaster and take no other. Sold by all Druggists.

COTTON.

The following report of the cotton market is taken from the Democrat:

In the early part of the day the market ruled quiet and easy in consequence of unfavorable advices from abroad. Later, however, the market regained itself, and closed steady, with sales of 3,000 bales.

The following is the official closing of the Cotton Exchange:

	To-Day.	Saturday
Low ordinary	8⅝	8⅝
Ordinary	9⅛	9⅛
Good ordinary	9⅝	9⅝
Low middling	9⅞	9⅞
Middling	10	10
Good middling	10⅛	10⅛
Middling fair	11⅛	11⅛

Sales to-day, 3,000 bales. Market opened easy; closed steady.

The Sin of Worry.

There are men in this world who wear a girdle of fret, as trying as any friar's to annoy themselves. They fancy that in such experience is to be found the highest fulfillment of religious duty and the truest expression of this world's probation. Some one has said that they procure their tickets, and then carry their luggage with them wherever they go, while there is provided a proper and capacious receptacle for all encumbrances. Or, what domestic infelicity this spirit of worry occasions! Mary and Martha are always in confusion—never able to comprehend one another. What business impatience and misunderstandings are inspired by this same contradiction, as it exists in common forms!

The assurance needs to be taken home by every one of us that worry is the deadly foe of the gospel and of common sense. In both the general and the special providences of God, which are revealed to us on every page of the Bible, there are distinct utterances against this tendency, by which we are all plagued. But, in addition to these promises, there are positive precepts, which make it most evident that anxiety has in it the very pasture of sin and is the mother of misery. However nervous, depressed and despairing may be the tone of any one, the Lord leaves him no excuse, for there is God's promise to overbalance all these natural difficulties. In the measure in which the Christian enjoys his privileges, rises above the things that are seen, hides himself in the refuge provided for him, will he be able to voice the confession of Paul and say, "None of these things"—however combined and confederate they may be—"none of these things move me."—S. H. Tyng, Jr.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—Farmers, Families and others can purchase no remedy equal to Dr. TOBIAS' VENETIAN LINIMENT, for the cure of Cholera, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Croup, Colic and Sea-Sickness taken internally (it is perfectly harmless; see oath accompanying each bottle) and externally for Chronic Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cuts, Burns, Swellings, Bruises, Mosquito-Bites, Old Sores, Pains in Limbs, Back and Chest. The VENETIAN LINIMENT was introduced in 1847, and no one who has used it but continues to do so, many stating if it was ten dollars a bottle they would not be without it. Thousands of certificates can be seen at the depot, speaking of its wonderful curative properties. Sold by the druggists at 40 cents. Depot, 42 Murray street, New York. 8p

DISCOVERY BY which hair can be restored to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principles in the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the Hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. Three bottles for $5 (1 to 3 accompany the order and balance to be paid when medicine is delivered.

C. KEENER, P. E.

FAITH AND WORKS.—"When have you been this week?" we were once asked by Mr. Spurgeon. "We have been looking over the wonderful Orphan Houses of Mr Muller," was the reply. "Ah," said Spurgeon, "Muller has wonderful faith, which I have not. I must have works as well as faith. When I pray to God for anything I don't wait for it to come; I set right to work and try to get it." And this is according to the gospel. Believe and work.

TUTT'S PILLS.

SYMPTOMS OF A

TORPID LIVER.

Loss of Appetite, Bowels Costive, Pain in the Head with a dull sensation in the back part, Pain under the shoulder blade, fulness after eating with a disinclination to exertion of body or mind, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, with a feeling of having neglected some duty, Weariness, Dizziness, Flattering at the heart, Dots before the Eyes, Yellow Skin, Headache generally over the right eye, Restlessness, with fitful dreams, Highly colored Urine.

IF THESE WARNINGS ARE UNHEEDED SERIOUS DISEASES WILL SOON BE DEVELOPED.

TUTT'S PILLS

are especially adapted to such cases, a single dose effects such a change of feeling as to astonish the sufferer.

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS:

DR. TUTT: Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.

Rev. R. T. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

The first effect of TUTT'S PILLS is to Increase the Appetite, and cause the body to Take on Flesh, thus the system is nourished, and by their Tonic Action on the Digestive Organs, Regular Stools are promoted.

DR. J. F. HAYWOOD

OF NEW YORK SAYS:

"Few diseases exist that cannot be relieved by restoring the liver to its natural functions, and for this purpose no remedy has ever been invented that has so happy an effect as TUTT'S PILLS."

ANEMONE.

BY ELAINE GOODALE.

A wind-flower by the mountain-stream,
Where April's wayward breezes blow,
And still in sheltered hollows gleam
The lingering drifts of snow,—

Where art thou, frailest flower of spring?
Did winds of heaven give thee birth?
Too free, too airy-light a thing
For any child of earth!

O palest of pale blossoms borne
On timid April's virgin breast,
Has thou no flush of passion worn,
No mortal bond confessed?—

Thou mystic spirit of the wood
Why that ethereal grace that seems
A vision of our actual good
Linked with the land of dreams?

Thou didst not start from common ground,
So tremulous on thy slender steel;
Thy sisters may not clasp thee round,
Who art not one with them.

Thy subtle charm is strangely given,
My fancy will not let those be—
Then, once and thus 'twixt earth and heaven,
O white anemone!

—Scribner.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, March 25.—This morning Judge Donahue, by consent of counsel, entered orders dismissing the suit of Cornelius Vanderbilt vs. his brother, Wm. H. Vanderbilt, for one million dollars, alleged to have been promised for withdrawing his opposition to the probate of the Commodore's will, and also a similar order in the suit of the same plaintiff for seven million dollars' damages for alleged conspiracy by Wm. H. Vanderbilt, Chauncey M. Depew and others to get some one to personate him and have reports of his misconduct sent to the Commodore by detectives. This ends the whole case, as no appeal is to be taken from the Surrogate's admission of the will to probate.

DEADWOOD, D. T., March 29.—Little Wolf and his band of Cheyenne Indians, numbering thirty-five lodges, with two hundred and fifty ponies, were captured by Lieut. Clark, of the Second Cavalry, with eighty-five men, on Box-Elder Creek, on Tuesday.

CINCINNATI, March 28.—Some little excitement was occasioned at a meeting of Catholic priests of this diocese last night for the purpose of perfecting plans for the relief of Archbishop Purcell, by announcement that Frank Grover, Charles Stewart and Thomas Scanlon has been appointed by the archbishop a committee to receive all charitable contributions to pay the diocesan debt. This appointment was understood to mean that the committee appointed by the priests was completely ignored, and caused a bitter discussion in which Father Callaghan, of the cathedral, who was supposed to be at the bottom of this appointment, was denounced by the German priests especially. The meeting finally adjourned without united action upon the matter.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—The case of Beauregard, Parsons, Peterkin, Warbinton and others against the city of New Orleans, to compel it to levy a tax to pay its bonds issued to the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad Company, were decided in the Supreme Court this afternoon. The court holds that the city must levy the tax and pay the bonds, and directs that a mandamus be issued.

NASHVILLE, March 31.—Governor Marks to-day signed the bill providing for a settlement of the State debt at fifty cents on the dollar and four per cent. interest.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, March 25.—Queen Victoria left to-day for the Continent, embarking in the royal yacht Victoria and Albert. Her Majesty proceeds to Cherbourg.

LONDON, March 26.—A Vienna dispatch to the Daily News says the renewed floods in Hungary have covered 12,000 acres of land which had already been sown, and the 12,000 lives are endangered.

LONDON, March 26.—The correspondent of the Times, writing under date of Arment, Upper Egypt, February 24, gives a heartening account of the condition of the population of the Nile Valley. The scenes described resemble those in India during the recent famine; in some villages the people are past help, sitting naked like wild beasts, eating roots and suffering with the endurance of madness worked on by famine, stamps such brand on starving fellahs as cannot be easily described. In one town the women and children fought over scraps of bread like wild animals. The case is believed to be still worse inland, where villagers are said to be starving like dogs.

BERLIN, March 27.—Prince Waldemar, fifth child and third son of Prince Frederick William, crown Prince of Germany, and a grand-son of Queen Victoria, died suddenly of heart disease this morning.

LONDON, March 28.—The Berlin correspondent of the Standard says: It is stated that after the czar has started for Swadia, the government intends to proclaim a state of siege in St. Petersburg, Moscow, Kieff and Charkoff.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 28.—The Gazette is informed from a trustworthy source that the Chinese ambassador demanded the retrocession of Kuldja to China. A dispatch from Orenburg to the Golos says the Chinese are preparing for a demonstration against Kuldja.

LONDON, March 28.—Reuter's Constantinople dispatch says that the sultan has sent a portion of his plate and jewelry to be melted for the use of the treasury.

SCUTARI, March 28.—Ten battalions of troops are expected to arrive from Constantinople. The porte appears resolved to disarm the Albanians.

CAPE TOWN, March 11.—H. M. S. Shah landed the first reinforcements at Dunbar, Natal, on the fifth. The troop ship Tamar, with the Fifty-Seventh Regiment, arrived at Durban on the tenth. Relief of Ekowe will be attempted shortly.

An unsuccessful endeavor was made yesterday to communicate with the Ekowe garrison by signal.

King Cetawayo's brother, Ohma's overtures for submission were a ruse to cover his retreat to Swazieland.

The report that Cetawayo sent messengers to sue for peace was false.

A body of Basutos crossed the River Terle on the eighth, stole some horses, and fired on the colonial forces, who repulsed them with a loss of twenty killed, or wounded. All quiet in Transavaal.

CITY OF MEXICO, March 20 via New Orleans, March 28.—The Official newspaper contradicts the report that President Diaz intends to visit the Rio Grande.

The revolution in Tepic has terminated, and the participates have asked for pardon.

The Mexican Government is not disposed to enter into a commercial treaty with the United States on a basis of the McLeon O'Campo treaty, because it is considered to be to the disadvantage of Mexico.

LONDON, March 31.—A dispatch from Lahore to the Times says: Col. Cavaghari, who arrived here on Wednesday to confer with the viceroy, still remains. The negotiations with Yakoob Khan have continued, but hitherto it perhaps has not been the government's policy to press Yakoob Khan to a final decision, for the obvious reason that if his decision proves unsuccessful, a prompt advance on Cabul may be our proper course, and, at present, while the snow covers the passes, such a movement would be impracticable.

Judge Underwood, of Floyd county, Ga., addressed the following words to the grand jury of that county a few days ago:

"There are hundreds annually slaughtered, or rather assassinated in consequence of carrying, contrary to law, concealed weapons. When will our people understand the loss of life in consequence of this unlawful practice? Why do men want to go over the country with a pistol buckled around them? They want it to give them an advantage. These bullies insult you, and if you dare to exhibit the spirit of a man they will put you to death, and when he is tried the jury will find a verdict of 'justifiable homicide.' A man goes and arms himself and seeks an altercation with his fellow man, and upon a fancied insult puts him to death. The street and town bullies who carried pistols before the war made the poorest soldiers we had. What are you going to do with these men? Are you going to let your neighbors' sons go on the road to ruin, or are you going to put the halter of the law upon them? Don't you think that if there are twelve of fifteen hundred pistols in Floyd county you can find a few of them? Don't you know of some of them? Are you going to let any of them off? Are you going to let society remain at the feet of the vile and vicious?"

Gen. Slocum on the Murder of Mrs. Surratt

Gen. H. W. Slocum, one of the most distinguished brigade, division, corps and grand division commanders of the war, recently delivered a lecture in Brooklyn on events of the great struggle, during the course of which he expressed the opinion, always held by the Union, that Mrs. Surratt was a murdered woman. He said:

I am going to speak to you one word about the execution of Mrs. Surratt at the close of the war, for I think some good lessons can be learned from the story of her trial and death. I believe any people situated as we were ought to be cautioned against placing implicit confidence in evidence given at a time of high excitement. I could stand here to-night and relate to you fifty incidents that would serve to caution everybody against taking evidence against others when the people were all in a state of intense excitement. There never was a day, there never was an hour, that I did not believe that Mrs. Surratt was as innocent a woman as there is in this hall. (Applause.) She was the keeper of a boarding-house in Washington. She boarded Booth and half a dozen other rebel sympathizers, and she had a son, John H. Surratt. Wilkes Booth was guilty of shooting Mr. Lincoln, and this poor woman was brought to trial in connection with Wilkes Booth, and through the excitement of the times her neck was brought to the halter. Her daughter, a young girl eighteen or nineteen years of age, on the morning of the execution went to the President's room and begged permission to say a few words to him on behalf of her mother, and a United States Senator from our own State, who acted as door tender, repulsed her, saying, "No, no, you cannot go in." Worse than that, meaner than that, the poor girl three or four years afterward married a clerk in the Treasury Department. No charges were made against him, but because this clerk had married the daughter of Mrs. Surratt he was discharged. Let us brag of our achievements, but at the same time let us learn to look our faults and errors fairly and squarely in the face and acknowledge them when we have cause to.

The murder of Mrs. Surratt was the most cruel and cowardly act ever committed in any civilized country. It is a curious and suggestive fact, that all who were chiefly responsible for the execution of that innocent woman have felt the unseen hand of the Great Avenger. Stanton, Secretary of War, who was perhaps the worst of the number, committed suicide in a fit of remorse, although the fact was sought to be concealed. Preston King, the Senator from New York who repulsed Annie Surratt at the President's door, in like manner ended his own life by deliberately jumping from a ferryboat into the North River at New York and drowning himself. Andrew Johnson, who signed the death warrant and despotically suspended the writ of habeas corpus that had been granted by the court, was stricken suddenly with death upon his return to the Senate after he had left the Presidency. Judge Advocate Holt, who conducted the prosecution, long ago disappeared from public view, and whether dead or alive nobody knows and nobody cares. And John A. Bingham, who assisted Holt, was driven from Congress in disgrace as one of the Credit Mobilier bribe takers, and sought refuge in Japan, where we believe he now is.—Rochester Union.

A Word to the Publishers.

We mean the managers of publishing houses North, for they do the greater part of the book business of the country. They might, we respectfully suggest to them, increase their business and usefulness very largely, by a more generous recognition of the Southern press. We write this paragraph not specially on our own account, for this paper has less reason to complain than most Southern newspapers. Nor do we write simply in behalf of the Church press; it has been more considered by the publishers than the secular press. We write concerning Southern papers.

The publishers send their few books comparatively, and generally not their best books. This will appear to any person who compares the Northern and Southern Church papers as to the matter of the "Book Acknowledgments." A leading Northern paper receives from the publishers perhaps ten times as many books as a leading Southern paper. And among the few books that reach the offices of Southern editors, there is a small proportion of first-class books—books of real and permanent value. The leading church papers, Northern and Southern, reach this office regularly, and if it were in good taste to specialize we could make proof of our statement from every week's mail.

We know well enough what is to be said in answer. The circulation of the Northern papers is larger. The Independent, the New York Advocate, the Observer, and others that might be named, reach many thousands—one of three going up to 60,000. The Northern paper's notice is therefore worth more, in a business point of view, than a Southern paper's notice. It may be said that there is more talent employed upon the Northern press. We grant this also, for it is true. They have the money to command it.

But after all, there are some considerations that should lead to more generous recognition of the Southern press. A few of them we take occasion to suggest.

1. Northern publishers supply, for the most part, the book-trade of the South. And it is no small trade. There "are millions in it." We have patronized Northern houses to the ruin of our own. This may not be creditable to us, but it is a reason for gratitude in them. What a golden harvest they reap year by year—to mention only school-books, Sunday-school books, and such like. In the college with which the editor of this paper is connected, every text book used bears the imprint of a Northern house—except, perhaps, one or two, published abroad. We think every Southern College is in like case. Leaving out one or two School Readers, our academies and common schools are in like case. There are some very popular and widely used text books by Southern authors; but they are published North, except a few issued from Louisville, Kentucky. Among about two thousand books of general literature we have been looking over recently, with a view to this matter, we find about ninety-five in every hundred bearing Northern or English imprint. They sell us nearly all the books we buy, and the aggregate of Southern book purchases amounts annually to a vast deal of money.

And our purchases would be much larger if publishers would avail themselves more liberally of the channels of communication with Southern people.

2. There are some special facts in our case at the South which Northern publishers do not seem fully to understand. Ours is an agricultural and rural population. We have few cities and few large towns. There are comparatively few book-stores; outside of the cities none that do a general book-business. The town and village book-stores confine themselves to school-books. In our villages and country places there are thousands of educated, reading people who, poor as they now are, want many books that they occasionally hear of, that they cannot get without difficulty and inconvenience. Very often letters come to this office asking: "How can I get such and such a book? Who is the publisher? What is his address? What is the price of the book?" If publishers were wise they would know how to answer these questions. Our people would buy thousands of books they do not buy if they knew where to write and how much money to send. The publishers say (to their Northern customers): "Sent post-paid on receipt of price." Their Northern customers know the publisher and the price, for they have been told by their papers. Relatively, it is far more valuable to tell Southern people these facts through the press than Northern people, for the simple reason that here the regular book-trade is so limited in its operations that our people do not, through its machinery, get into communication with publishers. There they may. Direct orders might be increased tenfold if publishers would give the Southern press opportunity to tell Southern people the facts in the case.

In this connection we wish to say: Publishers should always give editors the price of the book they wish noticed.

3. We said above, Northern publishers might increase their usefulness. Many of them, we are sure, consider this. They publish thousands of good books; our people need them; let the publishers take measures to inform our people of their books—their character and merit. It is a misfortune and a loss to our people that they do not read more of the excellent books that appear from time to time.

4. Will it pay to be more generous to the Southern press? Yes, and largely. Take any book of value, for illustration. Say it is a $2 00 book. Each copy costs the publisher perhaps fifty or sixty cents. The postage, we may say, only one order from a reader. If it is ordered directly from the publisher he gets the retail price, $2 00. Add the postage, say ten or fifteen cents, and the clear profit is at least $1 25. If the order goes through the nearest book-seller the publisher gets more than profit enough to cover the cost of the book sent the editor.

Book notices in a respectable newspaper are cheap advertisements indeed. And most profitable to publishers. Will our publishers consider the matters we have suggested in this article?—Wesleyan Advocate, Macon, Georgia.

Letter from Georgia.

MR. EDITOR: We have had thus far a year of general quiet in religious circles, but this quiet is not of apathy or indifference. We have had no sweeping revivals or ingatherings, and yet the churches in general are in a good religious condition. In Bainbridge we have had, perhaps, the largest number of additions since Conference, but a steady increase is being realized in almost every community. Our time of protracted effort is always in the summer time, and hence our largest ingatherings mark that season of the year. Personally, I prefer the constant flow to these floods, but I use all means that are legitimate so that souls are saved. Our own branch of Methodism numbers about ninety thousand members in the State.

Our colleges are doing well, considering the hard times, and educational interests are more generally appreciated among the masses than ever before. Dr. Haygood makes an admirable college president, as well as an editor, and has done much to restore prosperity to Emory College.

I spent an evening not long since with Dr. J. O. A. Clarke, and took a peep into his pile of manuscripts, which he has gathered from various parts of the world to make up a memorial volume to the Wesleys. He has been industriously employed, ever since his return from England, in securing this material. He finds himself in the same quandary that befalls you editors sometimes. He has more matter than room. What to leave out is the question. There are now about forty contributions, varying in length from one to twenty pages each. The majority of the articles are of the highest intellectual finish, and from some of the most gifted men of the age. Among the many I may mention a few. Rev. William Cooke, one of the profoundest scholars in Europe, contributes an article on "Wesley's Influence on the Religion of the World." This is one of the most forcible as well as one of the most finished essays in Dr. Clarke's collection. He is a member of the Methodist New Connection. And a layman from this same church, Hon. Thomas Austin Bullock, LL. D., of Manchester, contributes an essay, of rare power and beauty, on "Wesley's Place in the History of England." This gentleman has already published a history of England, as well as a history of modern Europe.

Rev. Joseph Kirsop, of the United Free Churches in England, writes in glowing terms of "Wesley and Whitefield."

The celebrated French Wesleyan author, Rev. Matthieu LeLievre, whose life of Wesley has been translated into several languages, furnishes a most admirable article on "Wesley as a Popular Preacher." It is a new view of this great theologian's character.

Among the Canadian preachers there is an essay of intense interest, from the facile pen of Rev. George Douglass, D. D., on "Wesley, the Revivalist." Another on "Wesley and Church Polity," by Rev. Thos. Webster, D. D. And still another from the pen of the polished and gifted Rev. J. R. Jaques, D. D., Pet. D., who is now president of the "Albert University," on "The Brothers—John and Charles Wesley."

It would be out of place to attempt even to give the names of all, but these will suffice to show the character of this great work. It will be the most complete history of Wesley and his church, and his relations to humanity, that has ever been published. These tributes coming from forty different authors, and from various parts of the world, and from various standpoints of religious affiliation, its importance cannot be over-estimated. It will be put to press just as soon as the material can be arranged properly. It will be one of those books that no intelligent Methodist can possibly do without.

The venerable Dr. Pierce still lingers in his room, waiting for the Master's call. We had hoped to detain him until he reached his hundredth anniversary, but all hope disappears judging from present indications. The Bishop's health is improving slowly, although he is far from being strong and robust yet. But he works and will until he is utterly prostrated. No remonstrance, however loving or touching, will induce him to desist. He will literally die in the harness.

We have had quite a revival on the parsonage question. Bishop McTyeire stirred us up at our last session of Conference. South Georgia will report a large increase in this department by our next Conference session. At Mulberry Street Church, in this city, the brethren are putting up one of the handsomest buildings in the city as a parsonage. In East Macon charge they have built since Conference a neat four-roomed cottage as a home for their pastor. The First Street Church parsonage has been greatly improved. We hear good tidings all over the Conference in this department. It is a good omen. Spiritual blessings always follow such efforts.

A Word of Dissent.

MR. EDITOR: In your ADVOCATE of February 13 you gave us an article under the heading of "The Cessation of the Manna." I have read that article with care and I am compelled to dissent from the main ideas therein presented. If the ideas of the writer of that article be according to Methodist teaching I am in error on the questions discussed. It seems to me that there is no necessity for such wide difference of opinion among Protestants on many questions which serve to divide them on revealed truths. The diversity arises, perhaps, from the inaccurate use of terms, but sometimes it arises from want of careful study of revelation. Should we not endeavor to understand revelation clearly, and come to an agreement as far as possible? There are no inconsistencies in truth; revelation is truth. Then why not strive to agree. The Romish Church teaches that miracles have been wrought since the days of the apostles, and they teach that they are still wrought. The Canon of Scripture closed with the apostles. There has been no revelation since the apostles' day. So I have been taught. Have I been correctly taught? I have also learned that a miracle is not merely a wonder, but that it is a superhuman and supernatural work, wrought by the Divine Being as a seal or in attestation of revelation made to us by Divine messengers. The truth revealed, or the messenger, was authenticated by miracles. The miracles recorded in Scripture were of this character, and they are sufficient for this purpose. If not sufficient, the revelation made was not duly proven Divine. If sufficient, then no more were necessary. If not necessary why should they be wrought? We know that "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers, by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by His Son; and we add to this quotation: "By His apostles." That covers the entire canon or scope of revelation, I suppose. When the Scripture informs me that this revelation of God to man, or portions of it, were authenticated by miracles, I believe in these miracles. But when you tell me that miracles are wrought now, or that any have been wrought since those by the apostles, I do not, I cannot believe it. I am aware that some of the fathers and writers on church history and theology believe that miracles were wrought after the apostles' time, but I do not believe they are correct.

The writer of your article, refering to miracles, says: "If it continues without variation it ceases to be miraculous, and becomes a fixed law." Now this to me is incomprehensible. How the Divine or supernatural can become natural merely, or become a mere natural law, I do not see. The miracle of the manna, it seems to me, had a much wider scope and a much more extensive purpose than is attributed to it by the writer of that article. It was not wrought for the benefit of the Israelites while in the desert, but to unfold the plan of salvation for all mankind after them. The writer says again: "So that miracles are not only possible, but they are, no doubt, as frequent now as at any time of the world's history." Now, if this be true, I have been erroneously taught, and am clearly at sea with a defective chart.

There are still other ideas in that article that I cannot understand as the writer does. "It may be well if you are reminded that when work is your duty prayer is blasphemy;" "when the law of cause and effect is clear faith is presumption." Now, these propositions from a Christian look to me strange. I cannot see how prayer can be blasphemy or faith presumption.

Yours truly,

A LAYMAN.

To the Conference Societies of the Woman's Missionary Organization.

The General President, Mrs. Juliana Hayes, of Baltimore, has called a meeting of the General Executive Association, to be held at Louisville, Ky., May 16, 1879. By reference to the Constitution, Conference Societies will find they should prepare to send two delegates, elected for the purpose, in addition to the Corresponding Secretary of each Conference Society. Please do all that is necessary to secure a full attendance.

By order of the President,

MRS. D. H. MCGAVOCK,
Cor. Secretary.

THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 1879.

O TURN YE, O TURN YE.

O turn ye, O turn ye: for why will ye die,
When God in great mercy is coming so nigh?
Now Jesus invites you the Spirit says come;
And angels are waiting to welcome you home.

How vain the delusion, that while you delay,
Your hearts may grow better, your chains melt away;
Come wretched, come guilty, come just as you are;
All helpless and dying to Jesus repair.

The contrite in heart He will freely receive;
O why will you not the glad message believe?
If sin is your burden, why will you not come?
'Tis you He bids welcome; He bids you come home.

In riches or pleasures what can you obtain,
To soothe your affliction or banish your pain,
To bear up your spirit when summoned to die,
Or wait you to mansions of glory on high?

Why will you be starving and feeding on air?
There's mercy in Jesus, enough and to spare;
If still you are doubting, make trial and see,
And prove that His mercy is boundless and free.

Come, give us your hand, and the Saviour your heart,
And, led by the Spirit, we never shall part;
Oh how can we leave you? why will you not come
To the feast of salvation while yet there is room?

The Preacher in Debt.

MR. EDITOR: For a long time I have felt constrained to say something to the church and to the outside world upon the topic above indicated, but have hesitated for several reasons. Chief among these reasons are: 1. That such is the delicacy of the subject, when facts are stated anonymously they are likely to be disregarded, or denounced as the murmurings of some discontented "sore-head." 2. If I should write over my own proper signature others might construe what I say as personal, and thereby become offended. At length, however, I have determined to speak, if you will suffer me, and say some things through the ADVOCATE in vindication of a class who I know have suffered, and do suffer, most unjustly—the "preachers that are in debt."

Every honest man who owes a debt which he cannot pay is unhappy as long as he is in such a case. But no man, I venture, feels the burden so heavy as the traveling Methodist preacher, and certainly, if it is possible to avoid it, he should never owe one dollar. Ministers of other churches may if they will use proper economy, avoid financial embarrassment, except such as may be consequent upon the shrinkage of values, and the ordinary reverses of trade. Their pastorate is frequently partial, and admits of secularization to a degree sufficient to supplement an inadequate salary. Or, if their whole time is given to the church, provision is made for them. There is a mutual contract between the parties. The church calls, and with that call is the stipulation as to salary and perquisites. The minister may accept or decline. Not so with a traveling Methodist preacher. He promises to go wherever he is sent, and to do the work assigned him by the constituted authorities of the church.

Now, then, can any man do this and never go in debt? I answer: That it is possible. Furthermore, I will say that if preachers and people alike had done their duty heretofore, and would do still, traveling Methodist preachers, as a class, would be free from debt as any other. Nor would there be just ground for apprehension of embarrassment in the future. Here lies the point of difficulty, however.

I have had nearly forty years' experience, and can speak from the record. Thirty-seven years ago, when a candidate for "full connection" in my Conference, in company with several other brethren beloved, most of whom are now in heaven, I stood before the venerable Bishop Waugh, and answered the disciplinary question: "Are you in debt?" It was interpreted to us then, as now, to mean "so as to embarrass you as an itinerant Methodist preacher." We all answered conscientiously before God, I believe, in the negative. We agreed then and there to go and do the work assigned us. God is my witness I have never failed or refused to keep that promise. And never, but in one instance, asked for a certain appointment. I have deeply regretted that since. The request was granted for consideration of relief to me, and to gratify an expressed wish of the church. It was a hard year to me, but, thank God, blessed fruits are being gathered after all.

To keep our pledge inviolate we must go among strange people, make long moves, incur heavy expenses, and have no certain provision made for the maintenance and support of growing families. They must be clothed and fed. We owe it to the children, to society and to God, that they be educated. Can all these claims be met by a traveling Methodist preacher, and he still keep out of debt? I answer: Yes. It might have been done in former years; it is altogether practicable now. Why, then, are so many faithful, good men crushed to the earth in spirit, their names bruted about often by those who should forbear, their usefulness hindered because of financial embarrassment? I answer, without fear of successful contradiction: It is because the regulations of our excellent Discipline have not been faithfully observed and carried out. Suitable provision has not been made by the church to meet the absolute necessities of their pastors. Any one can see that in those circuits and stations, and upon the districts where the disciplinary plan is carried out, there the preacher is sustained above want and the church prospers. Some I know will say: "If the preacher does his duty, he will be amply sustained and provided for." If this be true, then we have but very few faithful men. For you have only to glance at the reports of our Joint Board of Finance and see how many more there are of those who are half paid, or less than half paid, a meager allowance, than of those whose claims are fully met.

If there be infidelity or inefficiency anywhere on the part of the preacher, dispense with that man. Let him try some other vocation. Do this, not by the slow process of "starving out" a wife and children, innocent victims on the one hand, and educating the church on the other hand, in systematic parsimoniousness. There is no man called of God to preach the gospel who will knowingly, habitually, fail to do his duty to the best of his ability. He may not be able to do as much, nor accomplish his work in the same way that some other would, nevertheless, being faithful in that which is least, he is approved of God, and at the great harvest time he will come up, bringing his sheaves with him. God's chosen instruments are not always, perhaps, such as we would select.

The experience of almost a lifetime shows that the very men among our itinerant preachers who have been most abundant in labors and in sufferings are the men who have suffered, and do suffer, more from financial embarrassment. I know that pastors in towns and cities, or "good circuits" or districts where parsonages are provided, and all the delicate attentions are paid to the pastor and his family, find that with all these appliances their mission is no sinecure. There is work, and often very hard work, to be done. If they would win souls they must be instant in season, out of season. As a rule, however, they are more comfortably provided for, and if continued in such places are not apt to become involved in debt. Not because they are better men, more faithful, more deserving. They do not claim to be. No; for they are the very same men, many of them who, under a change of circumstances, both before and after, have been victims to debt. Thousands can testify to this. I know many in my own Conference, could give their names, and so it is in all the Conferences.

In almost every issue of the ADVOCATE we have a "financial plan" and the several Annual Conferences from time to time have had their plans. After all, the General Conference has devised and put into our Discipline the "very best" "plan." The defect is not in the "plan," but in the working of it. Let the church be careful to select the right kind of men for stewards—men that love God and love the church more than they love this present world, and the dissipations that are practiced in it; men who are willing to labor for God, and who can sympathize with their pastor in his life of self-denial. Then let each member of the church pay his vow to God wherein he vowed to obey the Discipline, and "support the institutions of the church." Do this not grudgingly, but willingly, not as a charity, but as a duty. Then the preacher will be sustained decently, comfortably. He will have no occasion "to go in debt." For if he is paid promptly and liberally as other men are paid, his wants and those of his family are fully met.

The present generation of traveling preachers (excepting a few of them) are incapable of sympathizing with the former. The provisions now made for the support and comfort of the preacher are vastly superior to what they were thirty or forty years ago. When I became a traveling preacher my Conference embraced the territory of two, and part of three States. There was not a single parsonage in all this territory that I can now call to mind. Possibly, there was one. The preachers of those times were, and are today, the sufferers from financial embarrassment. They traveled large circuits, vast districts, had no public conveyance, no parsonages provided for them. Their children were not educated free of charge at Methodist schools and colleges. Many of them got behind; they never have, perhaps never will, "catch up" with their liabilities necessarily incurred to serve the church. Thousands of other men—bankers, merchants, farmers, tradesmen, members of the church, too—have failed in this time. Not a few have bankrupted with money in their pockets, and are still respected, while the preacher is censured for being in debt. Often the very church members who justly owe him, and never offer to pay, join the cry against him. Sometimes preachers, too, encourage this spirit, to decry their brethren who have suffered so cruelly, because the church did not provide liberal things in the first place, or failed to pay their preacher the half of what they promised. This ought not so to be. Thank God a better day has come for many. Parsonages are multiplying, and the people, though poorer than in former years, are doing much better for God and for the church.

SENEX.

Sensationalism.

Sensationalism, as applied to the pulpit, may be defined as an unscriptural, unconventional style of preaching, the influence of which is to the prejudice of the cross, and the lessening of a love for more solid and unaffected discourses. We do not propose, in this paper, to consider the style of the so-called sensational preachers of the day, either as to its admissibility or its objectionable features. It has been sufficiently, if not too severely, criticized by several of the leading reviews and religious journals of the age; while on the other hand it has been enthusiastically received and warmly defended by a number of intelligent and zealous Christians.

It is obvious there are two extremes, accepted and tolerated, in the preaching of to-day, the tendency of which is decidedly injurious to vital Christianity. The first of these is a vapid, unattractive logomachy, which makes the pulpit a bore instead of quickening the zeal and toning the sentiment of the religious mind. The second is a florid, sensational harangue which may please the imagination, and dally with the fancy, but which leaves the soul without food, thirsting for "the living waters."

Now shall we find in the mean of these extremes the terra firma of orthodoxy—the highway of spiritual teaching. We want something entirely without the range of this kind of conventionality, this ebullition of terminology and pompous parade of rhetorical nothingness. There is a sensationalism which is the sensationalism of truth, and that is the spirit which should be thrown into the preaching of the times.

True eloquence, which brings out the latent charms of truth and displays them before the mind, by means of metaphors, whatever may be their relation to the instincts and feelings of men, always produce sensation. No less is this the result of unveiling that dread perversity of our nature; but how far this may be carried as a pulpit license the Christian teacher must determine from the evidences before him, the example of Him who "spake as never man," and the precedents established by those holy men whose hearts burned with the fire of Pentecostal zeal and inspiration.

A glance at the history of the pulpit will show that when a Chrysostom, though environed by the effeminacy and voluptuousness of the proudest city of the East, a Luther, though met by the brazen stare of national sin and "spiritual wickedness in high places," or a Whitfield amid the crumbling ruins of a nation's morals, have rushed upon the world with the sensationalism of truth, though they struck at the heart of popular corruption, they have won, not a reputation as dealers in public scandal, nor aimless expatiators upon national crimes, but souls for their Master and immortal crowns for their brows.

It is the duty of the faithful preacher to show himself approved in all things, rejoicing to tell the story of the cross, and not afraid to condemn sin in its most hideous forms, but in such way that the cause be not injured. Not lading the winds with the blasts of a sensational trumpet that men may turn to gaze upon the trumpeter, but laboring that the strongholds of sin may give way before the aggressive influence of the religion of righteousness.

The spirit in which sin is condemned is, in a large measure, to be determined by the exigencies of the case. The pulpit is an institution which, with regard to the grand doctrine it is intended to teach—the atonement—is unchangeable, but its means of teaching are subject to the laws of change, as those of other motors of truth. Mind moves, and so must it; and while

"Through the ages one increasing purpose runs,
And the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns."

let not the occupant of the sacred desk be slow to keep pace with thought, nor lax to seize every opportunity to reprove sin, and disseminate the truths of the gospel.

Truth is truth in whatever guise presented; and the shorter the channel given it to the feelings of men the more readily does it result in good; and the men who cry sensationalism and unorthodoxy whenever a departure is made from the contractedness of dogmatical conventionality are as those who still cling to the stranded wreck of a hapless ship, and raise a cry of horror when others steer toward safer and more inviting waters. DELTA.

Practical Suggestions.

MR. EDITOR: The object in writing this article is to assist in devising a plan by which the collections ordered by the church may be gotten successfully by the preachers. The present plan I have tried more than one year, and find it the best of the many which I have thought of. System and the proper industry will achieve the desired end. This plan has a tendency to use all the material in the church. We will state:

1. (This is designed for the pastor, of course.) Get a correct list of the entire membership in the charge, learn the financial ability of every one, both male and female. Assess them reasonably, every one (not even overlooking the poorest) immediately on your "round," call church meetings, and read to them the amounts you have assessed, for their acceptance or rejection. If too much should be placed against any one, let him assess himself, and these become a moral pledge when recognized by the membership. My average assessment against the females is twenty-five cents, ranging from ten cents to one dollar. Against the males, averages one dollar, from twenty-five cents to two and a half dollars. This is about the normal financial strength of circuits. I include missionary, Conference, Bishop's and educational funds in one assessment, and from the general collection set aside the pro rata share of each to pay in at Annual Conference.

2. I select two male and two female members from each "society" to serve as a committee for me in the collection of these amounts, giving to each one a list from the general list, and reserve for myself the questionable amounts, and the congregation at large. I have respect to the qualifications of the persons selected for the committees—we want persons who are best in every respect. I begin the work above stated as soon as possible, and limit the time of payment to October, at which time I expect every one to come forward and "check;" and with few exceptions it is usually done. I make efforts to collect from these and other sources through the entire year. I preach this subject more around the fireside than from the sacred desk. If we rely altogether upon "pet" efforts" to raise these collections we make a signal failure, as past experience has taught many of us. Something other than this we had must be "set on foot," and a plan like this one, when perfected, will be the one. We are often ashamed to make our reports at Conference because so meager. This will banish the hidden blush, and the fact that we may be poor collectors will be obviated by a systematic plan. This is the secret at last, viz.: Begin early, create a plan if you have none, and then "keep at it," and you will have money for the Conference treasury.

We are anxious (as pastors) to have every member in our charges doing something for the church, as an intensifier of their zeal and affection. All cannot pray in public, lead the class, conduct Sunday-schools or officiate in the temple, but all can pay something to these religious demands, and quite all will do so if assessed early, informed of it, and visited upon this errand. If this plan needs change in the respects here given, let it be done in order for us to advance the financial character of the church, at the same time its spiritual also.

No doubt many who read the ADVOCATE would like to meet other suggestions upon this subject, especially the preachers, and they are worth the space they occupy. I am persuaded this is the way to establish a plan that will succeed.

Respectfully, etc.,

T. V. ADERHOLDT.

MONTEREY, March 14, 1879.

Hell is the harvest of iniquity; every sinner reaps what he has sown. Heaven is the harvest of holiness; every saint reaps what Christ has sown for him, and what under divine teaching, he has been sowing for himself.

It is good for us to think no grace or blessing truly ours till we are aware that God has blessed some one else with it through us.—Rev. Phillips Brooks.

Obituaries.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

Mississippi Methodism has lost another faithful friend and diligent worker in the death of O. C. Rives, which sad event occurred at his residence on Deer Creek in Washington county, Miss., November 22, 1878, after a short and painful illness of dengue.

Brother Rives was born in Amelia county, Virginia, March 8, 1801; was the son of Anthony Rives. He professed religion in early life, and maintained it in its true spirit and intent to the close. How true was his love to Jesus and his cause and his servants, let his life of three score and ten, amid scenes so varied and often so adverse to religion, testify. About the year 1827 he removed with his parents to the Western District of Tennessee. In 1839 he removed to Mississippi, where he spent the remainder of his life.

There is a great lesson in his life for the church. I would we could rightly estimate it, and so present it that he, though dead, might still speak to us. In the early settlements of the Western District aids to the divine life were few; the early settlements in Mississippi scarcely afforded better. In his latter life he encountered for twenty years or more the "discouragements to religion found in the "bottom," but amidst all these trials and temptations that overthrew and still overthrow the faith of so many, he not only maintained his integrity but "grew in grace steadily to" a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." By what means he attained this would give the lesson of his life. He had the advantage of family, not to be despised, of early religious training, of associations in early life with such great lights in the Church as his brother-in-law, Bishop Earley, and his associates, all of which was to him help, but inadequate to such results as the life and character of Orville C. Rives. He started out with Abraham's faith, in him it worked out his problem beautifully. Hence the family altar with the fire thereon was always brightly burning. From it all went cheerful, happy hearts to do all God's will in every thing. His hands were busy in the vineyard of the Lord, he knew how to be diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. His home was well provided; plenty and a generous host daily charmed his guests. His was the preacher's home. The preacher had a hearty welcome, a true friend, a liberal steward in Brother Rives. We need not eagerly catch the dying words of such a saint on which to hang a hope of his salvation. No, had seven devils overtaken him, all who knew him would have said: "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." But he did not go without manifestation. He said in regard to dying: "I am prepared to go, that has been the object of my life." So he calmly fell asleep in Jesus, and rests from his labors, and his works do follow him.

His charming, saintly companion in age and feebleness still survive with the children and grandchildren, journeying to the better land. May God bring them all to his high abode in his own time. W. P. BARTON.

Lynchburg, Va., papers please copy.

On few occasions, perhaps on none, have there been more sad hearts assembled in the Methodist Church at Pushmataha than were seen on the second day of February, 1879, to pay the last tribute of affection to dear SISTER ELIZA YOUNG, wife of Bro. Robert Young of Choctaw county, Ala., who was born August 23, 1801, and died February 1, 1879. Her first marriage was to Mr. James E. Graham, in 1820, and her second to Mr. Robert Young, in 1849, who still survives her. Early in life she professed a sense of saving faith in Christ, which, judging from her Christian deportment, continued unshaken until death called her to the realization of the blessed reward promised to all who thus abide in the exercise of such faith. She lived a valuable member of the Methodist Church, South. Yes, and still lives in her precepts and consistant example to her children and friends. Those of us who sustained only the sweet relation of friendship, feeling so keenly that our loss was great, could well appreciate the trial, and sympathize with those who were more sacredly related—children, grandchildren and an aged husband. "I know that to speak of a mother as being devoted to her children seems almost superfluous," as the expression is so commonly used, and is natural, but as relating to her we would apply the expression with all of its force and meaning, as her interest to her children was deep and marked. She possessed a peculiar ease and grace for managing her domestic affairs, which always insured the pleasure of friends and neighbors visiting her home, and, we know, of course contributed much to her value and satisfaction as a wife.

After such a life, who would be surprised to know that her parting words to loved ones were those which have been left by so many departing saints, and which are held in such sacred remembrance: "Meet me in heaven." MATTIE HOOD.

We the undersigned committee, appointed by the Lowndesboro Sunday-school of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, hereby offer the following resolutions as a testimonial of respect to the memory of MISS BETTIE TYSON, a member of this school:

Whereas, Almighty God has seen proper in his wise Providence, to remove from our midst our esteemed friend and student, Miss Bettie Tyson, just blooming into womanhood; therefore,

Resolved, That in the death of our young and beloved friend, this school has lost an appreciated pupil, the community a noble, generous and esteemed member, and her family a true, loving, affectionate daughter and sister.

Resolved, That while to us this Providence is deeply mysterious, and we do not fully understand all that is intended by our Heavenly Father in the untimely death of our young friend, yet we bow submissively to His will, knowing that "He doeth all things well."

Resolved, That we tender our warmest sympathies and hearty condolence to the family of our deceased friend in their sad bereavement, and in our prayers will commend them to Him who is a friend "that sticketh closer than a brother."

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the family of the deceased, and to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication; also, a copy filed with the records of the Sunday-school.

MRS. M. V. HARTWELL,
For Committee.

SOME time since I saw the obituary notice of DR. H. B. WAYNICK, written by E. M. Ashley, of Hazelhurst. I regretted that so little had been said about him of whom so much with propriety might have been said.

I was intimately acquainted with the doctor for ten years previous to his death. I found him to be quite a gentleman, a good citizen and a devoted Christian. He was a useful man in any community, for he was a good mechanic, and the most skillful physician I ever employed in my family. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, a fine English scholar, good in Latin, and had some knowledge of Greek.

He received a license to preach a few years since, but owing to the great demand for his medical services he did not devote his time wholly to the work of the ministry. He was not a good orator but had a good understanding of the Holy Scriptures, and always made his sermons plain and impressive. He was especially a friend to the poor and needy. Indeed I realized in him the truth of the proverb: "A friend in need is a friend in deed." Many who know him will long cherish his memory, and those longest who knew him best. Long may his example live. WILLIAM P. LONG.

HOPKIN FRY was born in Moore county, N. C., September 3, 1811. He was first married to Miss Sarah Blue, in 1830. In the fall of 1833 he united himself with the Presbyterian Church, after which he was ever a consistent member. He moved from North Carolina in 1834, and his wife died in 1842. He was married the second time, October 16, 1849, to Miss Sarah J. Thomas. He died at home, in Monroe county, near Bell's Landing, February 4, 1879, leaving a devoted wife, eight children and a host of friends to mourn the loss of the departed saint. May they feel that their loss is his eternal gain, and reverently bow in humble submission to the mandate of our heavenly Father. Bro. Hopkin Fry endeavored to walk in all the commandments of the Lord blameless, loved the doctrines and usages of his church, and delighted in all its ordinances. Religion was a principle pervading his entire being—a blessed reality—affording solace in grief, comfort in affliction, happiness through life, and a strong support in death.

A FRIEND.

WILLIAM KELSOE was born in North Carolina, January 10th, 1814. His parents were Presbyterians and he grew up in that communion. In 1830 he moved to Georgia, and, not finding a Presbyterian Church convenient, united with the Methodist Episcopal Church. On the thirtieth of January, 1837, he was married to Mary Monk, who now mourns his death with Christian resignation. Brother Kelsoe moved to Alabama in 1838, and lived in Russell, Macon and Pike counties. He served the church as Steward and class-leader, and, in 1856, was licensed to exhort. His health was feeble for a number of years. After a long and severe illness he died at his home, near Troy, Ala., March 14, 1879. His last intelligible expression was "hallelujah!"

S. A. PILLEY.

MRS LIZZIE SMITH died, of pneumonia, on the Atchafalaya River, La., March 9, 1879.

One of the best of wives, the most loving of mothers, and the truest of friends has been taken from among us, leaving four children, a bereaved husband, and many dear friends to mourn her loss. Her's was a beautiful life, reminding one of the modest violet, nestling amid the retirement of her own family, and diffusing fragrance and beauty on all around her; and yet she was the bright guiding star, around which the smaller planets of her household were want to revolve. All eyes, all hearts turned to Lizzie for comfort and advice, and never did they turn in vain, and all felt that they were better for heeding her gentle warnings and admonitions; but of such is life, and I pray that all of our death-beds may be as beautiful as hers.

A FRIEND.

MRS. ELIZABETH THORP was born in the State of Tennessee, January 25, 1809; moved to Mississippi in 1819; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1824; was married to James Thorp in 1826, and died at the residence of her brother, the Rev. Stephen Johnson, near Black Hawk, Miss., February 16, 1879. The hour of her release found her waiting for her Lord. Her surviving relatives, while embalming her memory in tears of silent grief, do not sorrow as those that are without hope, but look forward to a reunion in that world where "there shall be no more death."

JOSEPH S. OAKLEY.

LAWRENCE EDWYN WHITE, son of Rev. Henry O. and E. M. White, was born in Bastrop, La., June 2, 1877, and, after an illness of five days, died in Baton Rouge, La., February 28, 1879. Lawrence was a beautiful child, but the Lord took him unto Himself. S.

It is not by one look, but the constant looking at Jesus, that sanctifies and comforts.

DOMINUS REGIT.

Sore with the burden of a sad world's woe,
My heart sometimes in tears doth overflow;
And griefs that love or skill may not allay
Brood o'er my soul, as clouds obscure the day.
Then, like a starbeam thro' a rift of night,
Shineth this word that puts all fear to flight:
"God rules. Shall not the Judge of earth do right?"

O, then, my crushing burdens I resign
Into the hands of Him whose love divine,
Straight through the mists and damps of human woe,
Can send a healing beam of light to show
How present suffering, sorrow's fleeting night,
But fits the soul for heaven's unfading light.
In this God rules, and shall not He do right?

So, weary with my struggling and unrest,
I fold my tired hands upon my breast,
Not mine to question why these hearts must bleed—
Not mine to fathom all the pitcons need.
Mine but to rest upon His tender might—
Mine but to trust His love, in Him delight,
Seeing He rules who surely will do right.

—Sunday Afternoon.

The Renaissance.

How many young folk—or old folk either for that matter—when they meet with the word Renaissance in their reading know exactly what it means? They have a vague idea, probably, that it refers to something "artistic" or "old-timey;" perhaps even the pretty head-dress of Anne Boleyn, or Michael Angelo's battered face, rises dimly before them; or, perhaps, some queer high-backed piece of furniture, but that is about all that they really know about it. Is it not so?

The Renaissance is a term generally applied to the period of time embraced in the latter part of the fifteenth century, and the first quarter of the sixteenth; or, to be quite definite, from the fall of the Greek or Byzantine empire in 1453 to the sacking of Rome in 1527. But it may, with propriety, be made to apply to the time extending from the beginning of the fourteenth century to the middle of the sixteenth. The word "Renaissance" means a new birth. Another form of the word "Renaissance," lately used by some English writers, shows more clearly its Latin origin.

During the long night of the Middle Ages ignorance and superstition had lain like an iron weight upon the human mind; but now some mighty forces seemed to be at work, and there was a great awakening in every direction.

Gunpowder, which came into use about the middle of the fourteenth century, caused a great change in the art of carrying on war, and put an end forever to the feudal system, which was one distinguishing characteristic of the Middle Ages.

Then there was the invention of the compass, in 1302 by Flavio Gioja, a native of Amalfi, a village near Naples. By this it was made possible for sailors to venture further out to sea, and it eventually led to the discoveries in America and the East Indies. The account of these brilliant achievements reads almost like a page from a fairy-tale.

The Portuguese were the foremost in all the grand maritime enterprises of the latter part of the fifteenth century. They discovered the Madeira Islands, the Azores, the Cape Verd Islands, and points on the western coast of Africa. It was in the service of the Portuguese king that the brave Bartholomew Dias discovered the southern point of Africa; and afterward, in 1497, that Vasco di Gama first rounded this cape, which proved, indeed, to be one of Good Hope, for it was from here that he sailed to discover the eastern sea route to that land of silks and spices, of gold and diamonds, the East Indies.

You all know that these bold exploits of the Portuguese navigators fired the heart of Columbus with darling to set sail on an unknown sea in order to find a westward passage to the Indies. But his story is so well known to you all that I need make no more than this passing allusion to him.

Not only were there great discoveries made on this lower world of ours, but more marvelous revelations still were made in the realm above us. It had long been believed that "this little round o' the earth" was the center of all created things; but Copernicus proved a short time before his death, in 1543, that the sun was the center of the solar system. He was aided in his studies by the description of the telescope, which Roger Bacon had written in 1250. It is supposed that some of these inventions were known at a much earlier date in Asia. The telescope and gunpowder were known to the Arabians, and from them, no doubt, Friar Bacon derived his knowledge. It is certain, too, that the compass, in some rude shape, was known to the Chinese in very early times. They attributed the invention to Hong-ti, grandson of Noah, 1115 B. C.

But still we have to speak of the most wonderful invention which, more than any other, helped on the progress of the Renaissance—the noble art of printing. The Dutch claim it for their countryman, Laurence Koster, of Haarlem, while it is generally agreed that Guttenberg, of Mayence, rightfully divides it with his associates, Faust and Schoeffer. It was the last named who brought metal types into use about the year 1452.

After the fall of the Greek empire, in 1453, numbers of Greek scholars left their homes in the imperial city of Constantine, where the barbarous Turks had established themselves.

They carried with them all their worldly wealth—their precious manuscripts concealed under the folds of their robes. The poor exiles found a warm welcome and a congenial home in Italy, where a taste for classical literature had lately been awakened.

We cannot help thinking how Petrarch, who had died three quarters of a century before, would have enjoyed the society of these learned Greeks—he who had loved learning so intensely, and had done so much to cultivate a taste for it in others. He died as he had lived, among his books, for he was found dead with his head resting upon an open volume.

Now every one seemed smitten with a passionate desire for learning, and eagerly embraced the opportunity of profiting by the instruction of these "wise men from the East." Princes, ladies and courtiers were alike enthusiastic. Like a boy with a new toy, they were filled with delight over some newly-discovered fragment of an old Greek or Latin author. "Now the lately invented art of printing came into requisition. Paper had been made from rags since about the year 1300 and, with these new facilities, copies of the classic authors were rapidly multiplied and came into the possession of those who had never dared to hope to own one. Aldus Manutius set up a printing press in Venice in 1488 and sent forth edition after edition of those splendid classics, called, after him, the Aldine editions, which are to this day the delight and envy of all lovers of rare and costly books.

It was not long before the results of this revival of learning were plainly to be seen. New ways of thinking had come into fashion; a more correct and refined taste had begun to prevail, and thus was effected a complete revolution in the arts of painting, sculpture and architecture.

The new learning was called the "Humanities," and those who cultivated it were called "Humanists;" and rightly, too; for the new learning worked a reform in morals, and so a refinement of manners. The Greek studies of the Humanists led to the translation of the Bible into many of the modern languages, and a purer and more enlightened Christianity was the result.

And so this movement, the Renaissance, went on. New ideas of religion, new ideas of politics and of government came into being and prepared the way for what is called the Modern Epoch. All that is best and sweetest and noblest, all that is most worth having in the life of the present day we owe to it—the "new birth" that came in the fifteenth century.—Mary Lloyd in S. Nicholas.

An Unhappy League.

BY REV. C. H. RICHARDS.

It is a point worth noting, with regard to the Premillenarians, that they are clearly in league with the German Pessimists. Mephistopheles and Jeremiah are clerk by jove, mingling their tears and lamentations over the failure of Divine Providence to discomfit chaos.

Arthur Schopenhauer and Eduard von Hartmann are the chief modern apostles of Pessimism. They are the ripened fruit of modern philosophy. Though they have many points of dissimilarity, they agree in despairing of the world. This is the worst of all possible worlds, says Schopenhauer. Expanded by the worst of all possible beings—mankind". Despite the satisfaction of [illegible] Nor can we possibly [illegible] upon this diminished [illegible] Wretchedness and [illegible] the mere suspicion [illegible] being. What becomes [illegible] but the most wretched [illegible] miseries."

Hartmann holds that love, [illegible] peace, honor, benevolence afford but illusory joys, and only [illegible] the essential misery of life. He thinks the world would be a reproach to the Creator, only it was created without thought or intelligence by Unconscious Development. He quiets himself by his duty as a child of progress. "In dissipating the illusions of the vulgar in respect to the attainment of happiness either here or hereafter." He wants to induce such a conception of the wretchedness of existence as to "dispose mankind generally to bring the world to an end by common consent." So this appears to be the only short cut to happiness on this theory. This is surely a very bad world, and of such hopeless condition, and "non-existence is infinitely better than existence."

The practical outcome of this view are plain enough. Where it effects a thorough lodgement it becomes a blood poison in the intellectual system, clouding and dissipating all other processes. It robs men of their healthy interest in life, paralyzes effort for the improvement of mankind, destroys all trust in Providence, and wipes out all hope of future felicity. It withers all noble motives to earnest living. It is one of the "powers of darkness," undermining the very foundations of noble living.

But now this philosophy of despair finds itself matched with a gospel of despair. The religious Pessimist holds that the world is not yet quite the "worst possible," but that it is every day growing worse and worse. They deny any law of progress by which Christ is steadily developing a kingdom of heaven among men. The world may be growing more polished and decorous and enlightened externally, but they hold it to be more corrupt and hopelessly wicked within every age. Many even despair of the church, and expect a "great apostasy" in it, because it does not take kindly to their views. Many intimate that on account of their superior "loyalty to God's word," the seminaries and religious papers and pulpits stone them like the martyrs of old.

The religious Pessimists hold that Christianity, as a means for the redemption of society, is a failure. There is no hope that the Lord, through the gospel, can save the world; it is too large a work. Or, rather, as Schopenhauer and Hartmann believe, this is a godless world, with no living Providence in history, so these brethren practically teach that this is at present a Christless world, and that there is no chance of its moral renovation till its absent Lord comes back to it. What the Lord has as yet done for it seems only to have tended to make the matter worse. When at last He reappears, and, after Mahomet's fashion, kills off His enemies, and proceeds to "set up His kingdom" with His personal adherents, then we shall have a saved world. Meantime we need look for nothing but increased wickedness and a more hopeless wretchedness under gospel influences.

Doubtless these brethren would be horrified at being considered in league with the latest phase of infidel philosophy. But is not this view of theirs precisely in line with German Pessimism? They are in very bad company. Dr. Ebrard classes Schopenhauer and Hartmann among the chief enemies of faith. Must we not reckon this gospel of despair as a great spiritual peril? We take no jot of the esteem and love in which we personally hold the honored and needful brethren who hold this view. But we must not shrink from saying that it dishonors God, pronouncing His work a failure. It dishonors man in its hopelessness of a redemption as broad as society. It dishonors Christ's missionary command, holding such effort to be practically useless.

But the promises of God's word are against them. And the whole course of Christian history is against them, showing that the gospel as believed is gradually but surely transforming all human society. We cannot consent to have the Hope of the church blighted by such a faithless theory; no; will we let the gospel of despair be preached without remonstrance.—Interior.

The illustrious practice of the old Pythagoreans (who were a church as well as a school) presents a good model for us:

"Let not soft sleep possess thy wearied eyes
Till thrice you've told the deeds that marked the day.
Whither thy steps? what thing for thee most ill-ed,
Was aptly done? and what good deed omitted?
And, when you've summed the tale, wipe out the bad,
With gracious grief, and let the good be glad."

No man, in my opinion, will ever attain to high excellence in what an excellent old divine calls "the life of God in the soul of man," without cultivating stated periods of solitude and using that solitude for the important purpose of self-knowledge and self-amelioration. "Commune with your own heart on your bed, and be still," said the Psalmist.

Who never ate with tears his bread,
And through the long drawn midnight hours
Sat weeping on his lonely bed,
He knows you not, ye heavenly Powers."

Are the well known words of a poet who can only be accused of being either Methodistical in his light or mawkish in his tears. "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath," said St. Paul—all which utterances plainly imply the utility of such stated seasons of moral review as the Pythagorean verses prescribe.—Bluckie.

Religious Intelligence.

There are only 6,503,000 Jews in this world.

Rev. Dr. Benjamin Artom, who died at Brighton, on the sixth instant, was the Chief Rabbi of the British Sephardim, and one of the best known Hebrews in the world.

In the town of Corato, Italy, a Bible reading community of eighty is ascribed to a Bible given to an Italian sailor. Converted by its perusal himself, he read it to others, and this is the result.

The Calvinistic Methodist church of Wales has a flourishing mission in the district of Bengal, India, among the Khasses. An important part of the mission work is done in schools, in which 2,000 of the children are gathered.

The great revival in India among the Telugoos still continues. Recently over 10,000 had been baptized by the Baptist missionaries since the middle of June, and it is believed that the number of converts has now reached 20,000.

The Evangelical Society of France looks the outlook a very promising one for Protestantism in that country. The Society has sold 1,000,000 copies of the Scriptures among the 35,000,000 Roman Catholics. Besides what it has given away.

The Japanese Government never until now has authorized any portion of the Scriptures to be published in that country. Recently it gave authority to a Japanese publisher to print an edition of the book of Genesis in the Chinese language.

The English Congregational "Year Book" reports 2,473 ministers in England and Wales, a decrease of 38, the foreign missionaries and agents to 8 added, bringing the total up to 3,500. 51 new chapels were opened and 22 new churches organized, there being in all 2,071 churches—an increase of 59.

The late Hon. Alexander De Witt, of Oxford, Mass., left to the Congregational Church there, of which he was a member, a legacy of $1,000; and also $1,000 each to the American Bible Society, American Home Missionary Society, Boston Seaman's Friend Society, and the Baldwin Place Home for Little Wanderers.

Trouble threatens the Protestant missions in Mexico in consequence of the revolution now in progress there. A mission house in one of the cities was surrounded by a Catholic mob and only escaped demolition by the timely arrival of troops. Whatever party finally secures the government, it is hoped that religious liberty will be guaranteed as under the old regime.

Trouble has broken out between the missionaries and some of the natives in Central Africa. Mr Penzore, of the Church Missionary Society, was recently killed on the road of hostile natives with sixty-two of his men, chiefly Unyamuzi porters and Zanzibarians. The attacks may be ascribed to the desire for plunder, or to the instigation of an angry Arab ex-governor of Uyanzembe, or in revenge for something that the French Abbe Debaise is said to have done.

—The Victorian Wesleyan District Meetings (Australia) report an increase in the number of members in four and a decrease in two Districts. The net increase is 208. The following are the Districts reporting an increase: Melbourne, 95; Castlemaine and Sandhurst, 59; Western, 18; Gippsland, 114. The Districts having a decrease are, Geelong and Ballarat, 56; Ovens and Murray, 32. A very large number are returned as candidates for membership; there are also a considerable number of catechumens.

—The American and English Baptists are about to establish a theological school in Paris for the training of such of their young French members as desire to enter the ministry. The Rev. Dr. E. C. Mitchell of Chicago, has been chosen president of the enterprise, and among the counciors are Dr. M. B. Anderson of New York and Charles H. Spurgeon of London. A building is already in possession of the Baptists suitable for the school, which can be conducted at an expense of about $3,000 a year.

—The Rev. George Brown reports progress in New Britain, where three missionaries were eaten less than a year ago. At the close of November he was about to visit the island to open three new churches; he had three more nearly finished in the Duke of York groups, and one if not two, in New Ireland; also two new teacher's houses built in New Britain waiting for the teachers. Two or three young men were to be baptized shortly. They had been "very consistent indeed" for nearly three years, and had regularly conducted family prayer in their villages.

—The "Bethel" at Honolulu has become an important center of religious effort, especially among the Chinese. Four thousand Chinese laborers found their way last year to the Islands. The Chinese Sunday service has become regular and stated. Arrangements are making for the erection of a chapel for the exclusive use of the Chinese. The Rev. Dr. Spear says: "Taken in whatever aspect we will, the coming of the Chinese to America and the Hawaiian Islands is excelled in importance by no other event since the discovery of the new world. It is of the impulse beyond all human conception or management, by which God is moving the history of mankind onward to its great consummation.

TURKEY.—At the World's Conference of Missions, Dr. Clark, of Boston, said: "We Americans have been working in Turkey since 1831, and have spent a million of money and sent four hundred of our sons and daughters to that country. We are now ready to send the gospel to every part of that lands. More than one-half of the churches are self-supporting, though taxed, and re-taxed, and overtaxed. We have ninety churches and five thousand church-members. We have training institutions and colleges, and five hundred young men being trained to educate the nation in the gospel. Three weeks before the Berlin Conference, (May 25,) the last line of the last verse of the Bible was completed."

—Some persons have said that the missions to the Maories of New Zealand have never accomplished anything, but the facts are against them. The Rev. John Warren, who spent the greater part of his ministry among the Maories, said recently at Auckland: "Missionary enterprise among the natives abolished slavery at a very early period. A large percentage of the Maori people were slaves when the missionaries came to New Zealand. The slaves were among the first to accept the truths of Christianity, and their influence upon the chiefs had an effect so great that the latter gave them their freedom in acknowlegment of the blessing which was communicated through these slaves. The chiefs performed their own manual labor to preserve the freedom they had given to the slaves. It was, therefore, the influence of the gospel which brought about the freedom of the Maori slave."

—There are now in London eight chapels of the Calvinistic Methodist faith. The oldest of them, that on Jowin Street, which claims to be the mother of all Calvinistic Methodist Churches, has just dedicated a new house of worship, which cost about $25,000. It is much smaller than the old chapel, holding only 600. The neighborhood is not a well-known or convenient one. Mr. Richard, M. P., who spoke on the occasion of the dedication, told what Calvinistic Methodism has done for Wales. The country previous to that event was not a heathen country, but the priests were asleep, leaving the people to wallow in their sins. In 1742 the first attempt to give organic form to Methodism in Wales was made, when the association met at Watford, in Glamorganshire, under the presidency of the Rev. G. Whitfield. In 1740 there were 140 societies in existence, with 40 preachers; but it was not till the year 1760 that the first chapel was built. According to the official statistics of the denomination, there were in 1877, including 70 Welch congregations in England, 1,134 churches, 1,269 chapels and preaching places, 872 ministers and preachers, 140,000 communicants, 3,793 candidates for membership, 54,811 children in the church, 21,881 teachers in Sunday schools, 160,171 Sunday scholars, 275,406 hearers. To show how rapid and been the increase of the denomination, Mr. Richard stated in 1850 they had 366 ministers and preachers, 58,678 members, 818 chapels and preaching places; thus, as he observed, the denomination had nearly doubled in twenty-seven years. As an illustration of their activity and liberality, he mentioned that in 1877—a year of commercial depression—they raised for support of the ministry £15,777, for chapel building and chapel debts £38,931, for missionary objects £5,719, for the poor £3,048, and in ten years (from 1867 to 1877) the total amount of their contributions had been £1,341,810.

Our Young People.

AN INDIGNATION MEETING.

BY ROSA GRAHAM.

Down to a quiet corner,
Nestling at even-tide,
Three little curly urchins
All in a bunch I spied—
Fred and Harry and Josie.
'Twas really a funny sight—
Three little heads together,
Scolding with all their might.

Fred, chairman of the meeting
"I'd really like to know
What makes these grown-up peoples
Bother about us so?
Can't have a speck of comfort,
Can't have a bit of fun,
But they're just sure to meddle,
And spoil it 'fore it's done.

"To-day, when I brought my soldiers—
Such a jolly pack of boys—
For a charge through the parlor, Auntie
Cries out: 'What a dreadful noise!
Shoo, shoo! You merry Vandals,
Some other place must find.'
Oh! if we was only the big folks,
Wouldn't we make 'em mind!"

Then burst in speaker Harry,
With eyes and cheeks aflame:
"Oh! wouldn't we fix the big folks?
I think it's just a shame!
To-day I took for a kite-tail
The first thing that I found—
A shiny silk handkerchief—
And cut it all around.

"Oh! it made a jolly streamer
When to walked sister Sue;
Dragged all the shiny tail-end,
And drabbled mine with dew.
Oh! wasn't she mad? She whipped me
Hard, such a big folks' fit;
But I wouldn't cry, to please her:
I didn't care a bit.

"Of course," chimed in wee Josie,
"It's mean as mean can be
The way those big folks peoples
Are up with you and me.
Why, even when my baby,
My darlin' pussy, died,
Nobody made a big row,
Nobody even cried.

"Nurse tucked it in the ash-box:
'Only a dead old cat,'
She cried. 'You silly Josie,
To shed a tear over that.'
I watched when she didn't see me,
Snatched it with all my might,
And buried my darlin' baby
Way out of the big folks' sight.

Down to the quiet corner,
Silently side by side,
Three ugly urchins
Stretched full length, I spied.
Fred and Harry and Josie
A peaceful silence keep,
For the indignation meeting
Had put them all to sleep.

A Short Rule for Fretters.

A young friend has been visiting me who was a fretter. She fretted when it rained, and fretted when it shone. She fretted when others came to see her, and fretted when they did not. It is dreadful to be a fretter. A fretter is troublesome to herself and troublesome to her friends. We, to be sure, have our trials; but fretting does not help us to bear or get rid of them.

I have lately come across a short rule for fretters, which they shall have. Here it is. Never fret about what you can't help, because it won't do any good. Never fret about what you can help; because, if you can help it, do so. Say this when you get up in the morning, say it at noon, and say it at night, and not only say, but do; and that will be, do not fret at all.—a fine doing.

"But we have our trials," my young readers say. Yes, you have; and your little trials are as hard to bear as our big ones. But fretting doesn't help them, nor wishing we were somewhere else, or somebody else, or dwelling upon them until they look a great deal bigger than they really are. Did you ever read that fable about the toad and the plantain-leaf?

A toad used to live under a stone beside the brook. He was a pretty fat toad, and got along in the world as well as toads generally do. One day he went out to find something to eat, and hopping out among the green leaves by the creek's side, he heard a rustle among the leaves. He said to himself, "There's a beetle! I like beetles. I'll be quiet and catch him." So he crept along till he got to it, and stuck out his tongue to get him; but it happened to be a bumble-bee! He dropped it like a hot coal and had to cry out in the way toads cry, and hop back to his hole under the stone. He suffered with the pain, and his tongue swelled up, and he was obliged to lie by for two or three days. Hopping back to his home he picked a leaf of the plantain, and took it home for his medicine, and put it in his mouth to cure the sting of the bee. He stayed at home for a week or three days, and began to get hungry, and poor, and lean. As he hopped along, he came under the leaf of a plantain, and being very tired and hungry, he stopped under the leaf, and looking up, said, "O, what a nice time your plantains have! I should like to change places. Toads have a hard life."

The plantain said, "Friend toad, I should like to change too. I don't see what toads have to complain of. I think they must have a nice time of it."

"Let me tell you," said the toad. "In the first place, we have to work for our living, and find all we get to eat; and sometimes, when we think we are going to get a beetle we get a bumble-bee. Then, again, in winter time we get frozen up and when we come out the boys come along and stone us, and the crows pick us up. Isn't that trouble?" While you plantains have just to sit by the river, and don't have to work. I should like to change places with you."

"Stop! let me tell you my side," cried the plantain. "We cannot hop about as you can, but have to stay where we are put. If we want a drink of water, we can't go to the creek and get it. We can't move an inch to go and see the world and visit our next neighbor. Then the sun shines hot all day, and we have to bear it, and can't hop under a cool leaf as you do. Then, by-and-by, comes along a cow and nips off our head, or a little worm and eats into our heart, and we have no power to shake him off. I should like to change places with you. You take mine and I will take yours; for I am so anxious to hop down to the creek and get a drink."

"Stay! stay!" cried the toad, "I hear a cricket. Let me get it;" and off he went after the cricket, and never came back.

So it appears everybody does have trials; and the only right way of getting along is not to wish ourselves somebody else, and fret ourselves because we are not, but contentedly bear our lot, and be satisfied with what God has given us.

A True Story.

"I wish my boy was back with me again," exclaimed a mother with eyes suffused with tears. Son was a widow. Her husband had been taken from her, leaving her in charge of several small children, among whom was one son old enough to be of much service to his mother in the way of her support and that of her family. Right manfully did he discharge this responsible position for a while, and thus he was a great comfort to his mother. He labored industriously and was attentive, remaining at home at night with his mother and the rest of the family. Then it seemed to be a happy little home. How proud that mother was of her son! Happy for that boy and all the family had he continued that way! But the Tempter entered and led away that boy by night, sometimes, into evil company. Home became not so attractive, but more congenial associates were sought among those "that stand in the way of sinners," until one night, with an evil companion, he committed such a crime as necessitated his secret departure from home as a means of safety. His sorrow-stricken mother, now for the first time, learned of his evil associations, which robbed her of the affection and support of a son that had given her great comfort and much hope for the future. While she supposed he was resting in his bed, refreshing himself for the labors of the next day, he was leaving a kind mother, without means of support to herself and helpless children, with no kind good-bye and parting kiss. It was so hard to treat this unsuspecting mother so unfeelingly. She could not think that her own boy, could be such an ingrate. It was her own boy, whom she loved; and yet she could but love him. Yes! those big tears told of a mother's love—of a heart that would never give up her boy. The longings if her heart were, "If only my boy would come to me again!"

Dear boys, would you break your mother's heart, make those wrinkles upon her forehead grow so fast—her head to grow prematurely gray—her heart to grow sad—her eyes to be red with weeping? This is the way to do it. Just act as if you had forgotten all her care for you, how she watched over you by day and by night, nourished you, clothed, protected and prayed for your happiness, that you might be an obedient, honorable boy. Just because she loved you even more than her own life. Just treat her as if you cared nothing for her. Go away with evil companions—especially at night—those lonely hours when your night comfort her so much, and, as you take your last leave, don't give her a parting kiss, and your work will soon be done. She will love you till her aching heart ceases to beat and body laid in the grave. Isa, "If children entice thee consent thou not;" "the companion of fools shall be destroyed; evil pursueth sinners." "Honor thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long upon the land." Such cruelty to a mother will be punished. A boy whose heart is so hardened to all the better feelings of humanity will be open to the worst temptations of the devil, and his course is likely to be a rapid one down to death. Think how many heart-broken mothers there are to-day in the world, saying in their sorrowing hours, "If my boy would only come back to me!"

Think of your mothers, boys! make their hearts glad, for they have other things enough to make them weep without sorrowing over a wayward, unfeeling son.—Christian Observer.

BE KIND, BOYS. You are made to be kind, boys, generous, magnanimous. If there is a boy in school who has a cute fool, don't let him know you ever saw it. If there is a poor boy with ragged clothes, don't talk about rags in his hearing. If there is a home boy, assign him some part of the game which does not require running. If there is a hungry one, give him part of your dinner. If there is a bright one, be not envious of him; for if one boy is proud of his talents, and another is envious of them, there are two great wrongs, and no more talent than before. If a larger or stronger boy has injured you, and is sorry for it, forgive him. All the school will show by their countenance how much better this is than to have a great fist.—Horace Mann.

NEVER DO IT. Never reply to father or mother saucily.

Never speak to mother unkindly.

Never act ugly to brother or sister.

Never correct father or mother when they are telling anything in public.

Never steal anything, or tell an untruth, or speak ugly words, or circulate scandal.

Never seek play when you can be more usefully employed.

Never say, "I can't," or "Let him," or "I don't want to," when you are told to do anything.

Never go to sleep without prayer, as it may be the last chance you will have.

An editor at a dinner-table, being asked if he would take some pudding, replied, in a fit of abstraction: "Owing to a crowd of other matter, we are unable to find room for it."

Preventing Grace.

One of the greatest of the divine mercies is that which is hid even from the consciousness of its recipients. It comes unseen and unheralded to every soul. It "lighteth every man that cometh into the world." The Holy Spirit operates upon all hearts and touches all consciences. His ministries are first of all, and limited to no class or condition. He reproves the world, he is silently and powerfully at work in the purlieus of the great cities, and in the forest homes of savages. No missionary goes where the Spirit is not already, and the gospel, wherever proclaimed, has been preceded by the voice that whispers within. To the new-born child the Spirit comes with holy and sacred breathings long before the mother's words can be understood, and before parental counsel can begin to shape the character.

What fallen men would be if the Spirit were withdrawn from them it would be difficult to portray. We know what they are with this quickening and conserving power ever present and active. The depths of uncleanness, and the corruption and crime in civilized society, and the horrible brutalities and degredation of the heathen, are manifest. In countries where the gospel is preached, and the Scriptures are circulated, crime attains a development that is truly astounding. With these exhibitions of depravity, in spite of the checks of the all-pervading Spirit, what would the world be without them? But for these restraints society would soon be torn to pieces by the riot of passion, and the world would destroy itself. It is not too much to say that society and government would be impossible, and that anarchy, violence and uproar would become universal if the Spirit should cease to strive with men. All men would become as wild beasts of prey, and the whole earth would become the arena of the fiercest and most implacable conflicts. There would be no limit to lust, and no bar to selfish and vindictive passions. What hell is the earth would be.

The larger part of the world's millions know nothing of the gospel. The greater portion since the days of Abraham has known little of any special divine revelation. The spread of revealed religion has been partial and slow, but the beams of the Spirit have been shining always and everywhere. In Christian countries the number of believers is small in comparison with the unconverted, but the masses not directly reached by the gospel have been more or less affected by the unseen and gracious influence. Besides the indirect effects of revealed truth in restraining vice, the more general and universal operations of the Spirit are to be considered. Grace was largely in the world before the gospel came. This fact explains Paul's declaration that "the grace of God that bringeth salvation to all men hath appeared." The nature and source of all gracious influences are made manifest in the gospel, and the great plan of redemption with which those influences are connected, and upon which they depend, is clearly exhibited.

That many besides infants are saved without an explicit knowledge of Christ is doubtful. The divine goodness is vindicated by such gift of the Holy Spirit as makes salvation possible. The gospel is the supreme need of men, and the fact that the Spirit everywhere operates assures the ultimate success. He keeps the world from going to pieces until the revealed redemption reaches every part, and holds back and baffles the powers of darkness until they shall be overthrown by the manifestation of the Son of God. Our hope for the heathen and for the unconverted at home lies greatly in the assurance that the Holy Spirit is striving with all souls, and that the ground is prepared by him for the gospel sower. There is One preacher ahead of the missionary. One whose noiseless feet have trodden paths as yet never threaded or explored by the gospel preacher. The capacity for receiving and comprehending spiritual things would have died out of the world but for these universal, unsought and unconscious influences of the Holy Spirit. The light of conscience has not gone out, because He has touched and fed the vital spark. What unconverted people owe to preventing grace they may never know. What crimes, what infamy, what utter shipwreck they have been saved from, by His restraining power, they cannot tell. Christians, in looking back upon their days of sin, may well shudder at the peril they were in, and the certain ruin that would have followed had the Spirit abandoned them in their unbelief. If grace had not gone before they would inevitably have ripened for perdition, and have been beyond the reach of salvation.

That this powerful divine influence is exerted upon the young should be an encouragement to Christian parents and teachers. However early they may seek to lead the children to Christ, the Spirit has been before them. The young are depraved, the seeds of death are in them, and the vile weeds of sin are springing forth. But the Holy Spirit is also working mightily, and our co-operation, if faithful and persistent, has hope of success. Parents in their endeavor to save their children are workers together with God, and the love they feel is but the dimmest reflection of the love of the Infinite Father. But for the grace bestowed upon earliest childhood, and flowing from the fathomless depths of a divine compassion, all our children would be doomed. The flood of depravity is checked at this point, and the repressing influences continue, growing more feeble if neglected or resisted, but still alleviating and modifying the dire disease.

In this special aspect of preventing grace there should be unceasing prayer for the Holy Spirit. For the most part our prayer is that the Holy Spirit may attend the preaching of the word, and baptize the churches. Let us also ask that the Spirit may go before the gospel, and before all instrumentalities, and that those who have not the word, and those who will not and may not hear of Christ, may be wrought upon with greater might and with more wonderful power. May the baptism fall upon the children, upon the ignorant, upon all that are far off, and thus save some, and prepare all for the gospel.

Time to Act.

All reports about yellow fever are certainly premature at this season of the year. There is none here, and we do not remember ever to have known of any here earlier than the last of May, or the first part of June. Neither have we ever known the season immediately following an epidemic to be a sickly one. Judging from the past, there need be no apprehension of an epidemic this year. We believe an early and rigorous quarantine will be enforced against vessels coming from yellow fever ports, and the sanitary condition of the city is engaging the attention of the citizens, the city authorities and the Board of Health. We do not think that the prevalence of yellow fever last summer was owing to the filthy condition of our streets. They were no worse than usual, say for ten years preceding. But for the general health, and as a safeguard against other diseases, cleanliness is demanded.

Nothing less than the most thorough measures will allay public uneasiness and satisfy public opinion. New Orleans must guard herself, if possible, from these visitations of yellow fever, and she must also make it apparent that all in her power is done to protect the whole country from its ravages. To properly grade and drain the city, and to provide ample water works, would cost millions of dollars, but a single epidemic costs much more. These measures are necessary to the comfort and general health, but what their effect would be in keeping away yellow fever time alone could tell. The people of the country reasonably expect this city to use due diligence, and we may be sure that they will be prompt to protect themselves by absolute non intercourse, if, by any chance, the dreaded scourge appears again this year. Such is the panicky feeling throughout the nation, and especially in the Southwest, that the slightest occasion will suffice to arouse a perfect furor and frenzy.

It is the duty of every citizen to take a personal interest in securing the necessary action of the authorities. It is a matter of too vital importance to be left to the rings and local politicians. If ever there was a time when the people of substance and intelligence should rise up and demand thorough sanitary measures, this is it. Quarantine and cleanliness must be enforced, and at once. Hitherto the one has been loosely enforced, and established too late; and the other has been almost entirely neglected. To do any good the work must begin now. A dollar expended in April and May will be of more service than ten expended in July and August. To the business and property of the city, and to the prosperity of the regions contiguous, exemption from yellow fever is the question which most concerns them. Capital, trade, manufactures and immigration will not come to a country subject to the periodical ravages of a disease, the very name of which inspires universal terror. We are glad to observe that public interest is being awakened on the subject, and that our citizens are organizing to assist the city authorities. The following from the Picayune of March 29 indicates the nature of a movement now in progress:

"The Committee of Seventy," a proposed organization of leading citizens, comprised of that number whose mission is to assist the city authorities in promoting, furthering and enforcing proper sanitary measures, looking to the preservation of the health and cleanliness of the city, has been changed into the "New Orleans Auxiliary Sanitary Association," as it was found impossible to confine the number to seventy, applications of membership pouring in to the number of two hundred.

It is proposed to hold a mass meeting of citizens in a day or two for the purpose of organizing the association, electing officers, etc., so that the good work may commence immediately. As an instance of the progress already made, it is sufficient to state that the importance of the movement to the city is becoming understood among all classes of our citizens, and the prospect is that the representatives of the whole people will ultimately merge into the proposition.

The mass meeting referred to above was held on Monday night, March 31, and the society was fully organized.

Good judgment, energy, and an honest expenditure of money are all needed, and they are seldom displayed by city governments. The movement of this citizen's organization may lead to some immediate and effectual measures to give us a clean city. Both city and State are nearly bankrupt in their finances, and our people have suffered fearfully, but something must be done to avert a disaster that would nearly complete our ruin. Everybody living in the Southwest, and the entire nation for that matter, are deeply concerned. The great responsibility, however, rests upon this city, and the whole world may justly hold us to account for the manner in which it is met.

Early Collections.

One of our city pastors came into our office the other day—it was on Monday—but not blue Monday to him—with the report that he had already taken his two most important collections, to wit: for Conference claimants and for foreign missions. To have these off of mind, and thus early secured, is worth a good deal to the comfort and encouragement of the pastor and the people. Our advice is always take the most important collections early in the year, and then the burden will be distributed, and will not be left to fall upon the last quarter. Postponing is hazardous. If our collections last year had been taken in the spring the yellow fever would not have lessened them. The collections for foreign missions and Conference claimants ought to be all secured by the first of May, and for the Bishop's also. Then, in the last part of the year, those for domestic missions, Sunday-schools and pastoral support will be more liberally met.

It is, perhaps, impossible to satisfy all in the matter of assessments. Nearly every Conference, every district, every charge, think their assessments too high, and in many instances it may be so. General, Annual Conferences and district stewards are liable to make mistakes, but we do not believe intentional injustice is done. The pastor should only be solicitous to raise what he can for the various objects, and to bring his people up to the point of a true Christian liberality. It may be more than the assessments, sometimes it may be less. Failures to reach the amounts assessed do not necessarily reflect upon the pastor. If he is not to blame the fact can be easily made to appear. The thing incumbent on him is to use due diligence, to make the appeals to the people at the proper times, and leave the results where they belong.

It is a rare thing now for Conference claimants to be paid in full. We believe nearly all the Conferences fall below their assessments for this purpose. We would not lessen the importance of other objects, but it has seemed to us that the meager stipends allowed our widows, orphans and worn-out preachers should be met. For this collection we would select the very best time, and urge it upon the conscience of the church most earnestly. It can be raised, and will be, if there is a determined and timely effort.

We have no objection to other methods of raising the assessments, but, for connectional objects, we regard it as desirable that they should be presented to the congregations, and that public collections should be made. This course is a very important part of the training and religious education of the people. Public collections are a means of grace, and we would not have them dispensed with.

Mexico.

A WORD BY THE WAY.

Bro. Sostenes Juarez and myself are thus far on our way from the City of Mexico to the city of Oaxaca (Wah-hack-ah). The distance between the two places, by the route necessary to be traveled, is about four hundred miles. We have not yet reached the most difficult and trying part of the trip. The night ride of twelve hours by rail from the "capital," in the direction of Vera Cruz, was easily accomplished. However, as we approached the foot of the snow-covered mountain of Orizava, the air became unpleasantly cold. I found that even a heavy shawl over thick woolen clothes would not keep me warm, and my surprise was no less than my delight at finding in the morning, at the station where we stopped, a good fire in a "sure-enough" fire-place—something I do not remember to have seen before in this republic. In the City of Mexico, during the past winter, we had icicles a half yard long, and ice solid enough to remain on the streets during the whole day, but without so much as a fire-place to look at. This was the first opportunity I had enjoyed of a thorough "thawing out" by a fire since coming to this country. It was refreshing. To be sure, the sunshine after nine o'clock in the morning is as hot here as one can well endure, but its effect is different from that of fire. You may be almost scorching in the sunshine, while two steps will bring you into a shade sufficiently cold to preserve ice the whole day.

On this occasion, as the sun began to gild the mountain-tops in the east, and drive out darkness from the valleys, shedding the brightest luster around the snow-cap of Orizava, we were getting ready for a new experience in traveling. Instead of taking the stage at this point, as we expected, we found ourselves (about fifteen in number) mounted on a "flat" car—only one car constituting the train—and that heavily loaded with railroad iron and cross-ties. There was not an umbrella among all the passengers. There we sat waiting, for what we did not know, but could have testified conscientiously that the thermometer was constantly rising. But I half-way forgot, for the moment, the oppressiveness of the heat by thinking of what it would presently be. Ftually a stout young gentleman, sitting on the end of a projecting cross-tie, gave a startling blast through a cow's horn, and three men began to push at the rear of the car, and the train started out on the track of the new "National" railroad line toward Tehuacan. The men in the rear increased their pace, and soon "struck a trot," but, very much to our surprise, suddenly stopped, and stood looking as if to see how we would gravitate. Our train moved on, increasing its speed every moment, and it was soon apparent that we needed no more pushing, for we were going down hill at the rate of forty or fifty miles an hour, like a boy's snow-sled down the hill side. We had no need of umbrellas either, for we had gotten up such a breeze as not only kept us cool, but engaged our hands in holding on to our hats and to the car. At the approach of every bridge and every town in the valley through which we passed the stout young man gave a telling blast from the cow's horn, and in less than a half hour from our starting he blew up the train at an Indian village twenty miles away. For the manner in which this train gets back to the main railroad I am not responsible. I am told that one pony, with a rope to the horn of a saddle, pulls it back.

We now returned to "first principles," nine of us taking passage in an old-fashioned country stage. The rest of the day was just sufficient to complete our journey to Tehuacan (Teh-wah-can), a distance of forty miles. As there has been no rain for a few months, and the road is constantly traveled by droves of packed donkeys and freighted carts, one can imagine the amount of dust we had in the route; sometimes we could scarcely see each other in the stage. We got through "all right."

Tehuacan is a city of eight or ten thousand inhabitants, and seems to be a thriving place. The railroad will soon be completed this far, as the track is nearly all ready for the rails. Then this will be a point of considerable importance, both as to commerce and travel. It is surrounded by a good country, and will become the shipping point for a large portion of the State of Oaxaca. I have for some time had this place in view for evangelical work, but our preachers have hitherto been unable to find any material with which to begin this work. I have been here only one night, and part of this time has been taken up in hiring ponies and guides for the road to Oaxaca, but I think the foundation has been laid for successful operations hereafter. I hope we shall some day have a flourishing church and school on some of the beautiful plazas of the city of Tehuacan.

We leave this morning for the city of Oaxaca, the capital of the State of Oaxaca. A long, hard journey is before us.

W. M. Patterson.

Tehuacan, March 19, 1879.

In addition to the above, we have just read a letter to Bishop Keener from Bro. Patterson from Orizava, March 20, on his return from Oaxaca. He speaks of the trip as a hard one, long, hot, dusty—416 miles on horseback, 520 miles by rail and stage. He says: "At Oaxaca I found everything doing tolerably well. The young Bro. Solis had been working successfully. During the service on last Sunday we received seventy-seven persons into the church, leaving others on trial. A day school has been opened with Bro. Solis as teacher. He is also to visit other towns on Saturdays and Sundays. I called on the Governor of the State, also on Gen. Hernandez and other senators. Everything is favorable for us, except that we need a new house in another place." Bro. Patterson has an eligible property in view, and we hope the means for securing it may be provided. He reports the charge at Orizava as doing well.

Our Mexican Mission.

This week has been one of great interest at Vanderbilt. Bishop Keener and the superintendent of the Mexican mission, having made a call on Messrs. Pardo and Valencia, our Mexican students—their services being greatly needed in Mexico—preparations were made for their departure. Having been elected to deacon's orders at the late session of the Tennessee Conference, they were ordained in Vanderbilt Chapel on Sunday afternoon, March 23, by Bishop McTyeire, assisted by the professors of the Biblical Department—Dr. Lipscomb taking the place of Dr. Granbery, who was sick. Dr. Kelly was to have preached on the occasion, but he, too, was sick, and the dean of the Biblical Department took his place. He discoursed on the "Great Commission."—Matthew, xxviii, 16-20. This was the first ordination ever held in Vanderbilt Chapel—we hope many will follow. The theological students are fired with zeal in the missionary cause, and they take a special interest in the Mexican mission.

On the afternoon of Thursday, March 27, a farewell meeting was held in the chapel. Bishop McTyeire presided, and made the closing address and prayer. Dr. Granbery offered the opening prayer—both were appropriate and impressive. Student Young made a moving address as the farewell of the class. Messrs. Pardo and Valencia spoke in a very feeling manner of their conversion, call to the ministry, instruction at the University, attachment to preceptors and fellow-students, prospects and purposes. They seem to be full of zeal and devotion. Kind addresses were made to them by the Bishop, Chancellor and professors of the Biblical Department, testifying to their excellent Christian deportment and improvement. Presents of books were made to them, and the shaking of hands was truly cordial. Appropriate hymns enlivened the service, which was one of great interest—never to be forgotten.

There is a great demand for suitable missionaries to Mexico. Br. Patterson, superintendent of the Mexican mission, writes us that the work is prosperous and promising. He clamors for more help; he must have it! A dozen Mexican converts ought to take the place of the three who have been trained at Vanderbilt. Spanish is taught at the University, and some at least, of the theological students ought to study it in view of mission work among Mexicans. Dr. Lupton traveled largely in Mexico last summer, and he testifies that a great door and effectual is opened in that republic, though there are many adversaries. Let us enter that field in force. Let us take the tide at the flood. Let us contribute liberally, and pray fervently, and work earnestly, for the Mexican mission.

Thos. O. Summers.

Nashville, Tenn., March 28, 1879.

Congress, in extra session, has as yet reached no definite action on the appropriation bills and the amendments. The laws which the Democrats seek to repeal are: The law authorizing the Federal courts to appoint two supervisors at each polling place; the law authorizing the test oath to be administered to jurors; the authorizing the appointment of deputy marshals to be present at the polls on election days, and the law authorizing the President to station troops at the polls. The repeal of these laws is sought to be effected by amendments inserted in the appropriation bills, thus bringing a sort of compulsion to bear upon the President, as his veto is the only obstacle in the way. If the President vetoes the bills on account of the amendments, it is the avowed purpose of the majority in Congress to adjourn and leave the government without funds. This expedient in legislation is a familiar one in the history of the British House of Commons, and one that has in other days been resorted to by the party which now brands it as revolutionary. For the last few days the army appropriation bill, including an amendment to repeal the law authorizing the President to station troops at the polls, has been under discussion. It will be seen that every one of these laws is in the interest of the Republican administration, and therefore the struggle to maintain them will be persistent. It is not certain that the President will veto the amendments, but, if he should do so, there will be a dead lock in legislation, from which the extrication will be most difficult. The continuance of the Republicans in power and the next President, are involved in the questions now before Congress.

Rev. H. F. Johnson, D. D., president of Whitworth Female College, Brookhaven, Miss., recently spent a few days in the city. We were glad to find him in improved health, and to learn from him that his school is in a flourishing condition. The new brick building is now about completed. It has been erected for dormitory purposes, is two stories high, 144 feet long, 44 feet wide, and, besides halls, contains 32 rooms, 14 by 17 feet, to each of which a wash closet is attached. Water is conveyed by pipes to every room, and the apartments are heated by steam. The new house will afford accommodations for 122 pupils, two rooms being reserved. It is valued at $15,000, and is unincumbered. For these times the completion of this fine structure is a notable work. Dr. Johnson informed us that the building is the result of private enterprise. The church has not been involved one cent. There will be no suits to enforce builders' liens, nor appeals to the public for money to save the property.

A Normal Department will be added next term, and the best facilities offered for the study of music, the fine arts, French, German, Spanish and Italian.

Rev. Theophilus Moody.

The following note from Rev. W. W. Hopper, dated Meadville, Miss., March 22, brings us the first and only tidings we have of the death of Bro. Moody. He was an old and faithful soldier of the cross, an able minister, and useful. Bro. Hopper says:

MR. EDITOR: We come just to cast one flower of memory and drop one tear of sorrow to perfume and moisten the new-made grave of an aged and faithful servant of God. The sad news comes: Rev. Theophilus Moody, of the North Alabama Conference, went to heaven from his home in Gadsden, Ala., March 13. His sickness was protracted. His tongue was paralyzed, and he was deprived of sight before his death. How many mourning ones there will be when it is told Uncle Ophi is dead! His precious name and works will linger long as sweet incense around many hearts, then, like a glory-cloud, arise in the track his happy spirit flew. An afflicted sister awaits awhile on these sorrowful shores, but longs to join him and the hosts gone over. Let some one who stood with him long and well on Zion's wall give us, in this Advocate, a suitable memoir. The writer loved him deeply, and hung about him to catch the rich counsel falling from his lips.

The Rev. R. Simpson, Wesleyan missionary in Barcelona, Spain, gives the following pleasing incident: "One elder girl gave very bright evidence of grace within, and is most desirous of joining the church, but strictly forbidden by her mother, who even beat her the other Sunday morning for having attended our service. Her Sunday-school teacher says that of the class she (the girl) really becomes the teacher, and talks of her Saviour and the gospel in such a way that she has to stop the others and listen to and learn of her. The schoolmistress tells me that she gave her a class of little ones in the day school, which she soon turned into a Sunday-school; at the close one of the little ones she had been teaching looked earnestly up into this elder girl's face, artlessly exclaiming: 'I do like you, for you only talk to me about Jesus.'"

Rev. John Pardo, in deacon's orders, received New Orleans, from Vanderbilt University, last week. He left on Wednesday for Mexico, where he enters at once the mission work of our church, under the superintendent, Rev. W. M. Patterson. Bro. Pardo has been in this country four years—part of the time at Oxford, Ga, and for three years at Vanderbilt. He is a native Mexican, fairly educated, and by this time, we suppose, pretty well posted in theology.

A tramp met presiding elder James A. Godfrey, of Amite county, Miss., on horseback in the road, a few days since, and demanded of him his watch, which was turned over to him. He then made an effort to dispossess him of his horse, when the divine, becoming enraged, struck him a blow, felling him to the ground, and, forcing a pistol from him, demanded a surrender of the money and the watch; having secured which, he marched him to Liberty, and turned him over to the officers of the law, who immediately ushered him to more appropriate quarters—the jail.

The above appears in one of our city dailies, and we believe is substantially correct, as we have heard the report from other sources. Bro. Godfrey is a true soldier, as good as he is brave, and in this affair has contributed something toward the solution of the tramp question. The value of steady nerves, and of two hundred and twenty-five pounds avoirdupois, were never more happily demonstrated. Let us hear no more of the degeneracy of our modern itinerant ministry, nor let any say that the former times were better than these.

Bishop Keener returned last week from the Greensboro District Conference, held at Gainesville, Ala. He reports a good meeting, and the affairs of the district as prospering under the administration of Dr. Cox. The Southern University was well represented, and its condition encouraging. We hope to hear more particularly of the state of the church, and of the educational interests of that section.

Rev. John O. Keener, stationed at Glennville, Ala., has been home on a short visit recently. He reports Dr. Ellison's health as precarious. We sincerely pray that the health of this beloved and venerable minister may be restored. Bro. Keener informs us that Methodism in East Alabama is doing well.

The Governor of Louisiana on the twenty-seventh of March, signed the bill repealing the act incorporating the Louisiana State Lottery Company. The Company may appeal to the courts, but we are glad to see that Governor Nicholls has done his duty.

A note from Rev. James L. Wright, March 25, informs us that Rev. James E. Cobb, presiding elder of Delhi district, Louisiana Conference, is quite sick at Monroe, La. We trust that Bro. Cobb will be soon restored to health.

Rev. Dr. Deems, of New York, has been appointed Chaplain to the Woodruff Expedition, the floating college, which is to circumnavigate the globe. Dr. Clarke, of Amherst College, has accepted the Presidency.

A line from Rev. T. F. Mangum, presiding elder of Montgomery district, Alabama Conference, informs us that things on his district are moving on well.

The printed minutes of the ninth session of the North Alabama Conference is a model of neat typography and of good arrangement. We have received a copy.

The Quarterly Review of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to thank you for your notice of the first number of the Review, which I have the honor to edit. I wish to notify all timid souls—people who only walk by sight and have no faith—that the Quarterly is an institution, a reality. Our prospects are good, brighter than most people would suppose, in view of the greatness and difficulty of such an enterprise.

The first number is nearly exhausted—only fifty copies on hand. We issue No. 2 this week—April 1. It will show marked improvement in its appearance, will be printed on heavier paper, and will be well filled.

Table of contents: 1. Miracles and Testimony, Editor. 2. Anglo-Catholicism, Rev. J. J. Tigert. 3. Science and the Ministry, A. Means, LL. D. 4. The Will, Dr. W. C. Richardson. 5. Constitution of the Human Soul, Dr. Rivers. 6. Tangibility of Jesus Christ, Dr. T. O. Summers. 7. Mediation, Dr. J. H. Vest. 8. The Supernatural in New Testament, Dr. A. W. Wilson. 9. Age of the English Language, Dr. Starke. 10. Tennyson's Poetry, J. B. Wardlaw, A. M. There will follow thirty pages of Book Notices and Miscellany.

We will print only a few hundred surplus copies of No. 2 and persons who wish to get it had better send forward their names and money at once. Subscriptions run with the current calendar year. Two dollars and twenty-five cents will be the price for the April, July and October issues. Any preacher or other person sending five names, with the money, will be entitled to a copy for the service. Remittances may be made either to Dr. R. A. Young, Nashville, Tenn., or to me, Columbus, Ga.

The July number will contain a fine article from an eminent scholar and writer (not of our church nor section) a critical review of Schopenhauer and Hartmann, the new lights in German philosophy—"Philosophy—Pantheistic and Pessimistic." Several able writers will appear in July. Let names and cash come forward. J. W. HINTON,
Ed Quarterly Review.

LECTURES ON PREACHING, delivered before the theological department of Yale College. By Matthew Simpson, D. D., LL. D., A Bishop in the Methodist Episcopal Church. New York: Nelson & Phillips. Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden, 1879.

There are ten lectures in the volume. 1. The Nature and Work of the Christian Ministry. 2. The Call to the Ministry. 3. The Preacher Personally. 4. Indirect Preparation for the Pulpit. 5. The Preparation of a Sermon. 6. The Delivery of a Sermon. 7. Ministerial Power. 8. The Influence of the Pastorate in the Pulpit. 9. Collateral and Miscellaneous Work. 10. Is the Modern Pulpit a Failure? The lectures make 336 duodecimo pages, and are of great merit. We have published numerous and lengthy extracts from them, from time to time, as they appeared in several of the leading religious papers. They have about them a good deal of the practical Methodist flavor, and show the influences of the itinerant school in which the author was reared. Bishop Simpson is himself a master of pulpit eloquence, and his lectures abound in eloquence. Our young preachers can find few better books than this to aid them in their ministry. Price, $1.50

—Dancing as a Christian Amusement is the title of a tract by Rev. George C. Heckman, D. D., president of Hanover College, and published by the Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia. The evils of the dance are exposed, and the whole subject is treated with candor and strength.

—The Alabama Farm Journal for April has a very fine table of contents.

—The Magazine of Art for March contains a number of very beautiful engravings and much valuable art literature.

—The Sanitarian for April has an article on the relations of the medical profession to the State, by Dr. B. St. John Rhoan, M. D., president of the Medical Society of the State of New York, and a number of other instructive and useful articles.

Publisher's Department.

While we continue to do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements from the ADVOCATE, parties must judge for themselves as to the real value of the goods advertised. In ordering please mention the ADVOCATE.

SPECIMEN COPIES.

Specimen copies of the ADVOCATE will be mailed to any one desiring to look over the paper with a view to subscribing. Pastors will confer a favor by announcing this fact and forwarding the names to the publisher.

CLUB WITH THE CENTRAL ORGAN.

Having made arrangements to that effect, we will hereafter receive subscriptions for our own ADVOCATE and the Nashville Christian Advocate together for $3.50, each paper to be mailed from its own office. O. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

CLUB WITH SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

Subscriptions for Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine and our ADVOCATE will be received at $4 00 for both papers, or $3 50 for ministers; regular rates for both papers $5 00. Each paper to be mailed from its own office. Send subscriptions to O. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

THE art of deception, shamefulness and tenacity to which quackery is resorted in the United States is apparent at the Custom House. Recent issue of the internal revenue stamps of that government establishment. To those disposed to counterfeit the popular cathartic pills, it is an easy matter to imitate the stamps, which are of the most simple character, and could be done by any lithographer. The following, which is copied from the Times-Democrat of this city, is a fair sample of the many frauds practiced upon the public: "Dr. Pierce's Pellets are counterfeited, and the fraud is so perfect that the genuine article cannot be distinguished from the spurious. The counterfeiter has even gone so far as to counterfeit the internal revenue stamp, and the wrapper is an exact imitation of the genuine. The only way to detect the fraud is to open the box and examine the pellets. The genuine are sugar-coated, while the counterfeit are not. The genuine are manufactured by Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., and the counterfeit by some unscrupulous person in Cincinnati, Ohio. Dr. Pierce's Pellets are the best cathartic medicine known to the public, and the fraud practiced upon them is a shameful one."

WE DIRECT the attention of our readers to the statement of the condition of the Union National Bank, published in another column. The exhibit is one that shows a very healthy financial standing. We commend the statement of the bank, as published, to the attention of the business public, showing its successful management.

WE invite the special attention of our readers, as well as others, to the statement of the Citizen's Bank, which is worth while examining. There are few banks in the United States that can present a better showing. They have abundance of assets to meet any demands that can be made upon them.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made in another column of the statement of the New Orleans, Canal and Banking Company. This life old bank is well managed, and its showing is highly satisfactory.

THE statement of the New Orleans National Bank, of which Albert Baldwin, Esq., is the president, and William Palfrey, Esq., cashier, makes a highly satisfactory showing. This bank is in a flourishing condition, and our readers should read carefully their statement.

IN ANOTHER column of the ADVOCATE will be found the statement of that reliable old bank the Louisiana National, which clearly shows that it is in a firm and healthy condition, prepared for any emergency. No bank occupies a more solid foundation, and it is worked efficiently in behalf of the public. J. H. Oglesby, Esq., ought to feel proud of the statement.

CARRIAGES, HARNESS, ETC.—At J. A. Lum & Co., 35 Carondelet street, is the best place in the South to buy anything in the carriage or harness line. There is no depository in New Orleans, or in any other city, that keeps as large or as fine a stock, and our readers will find them imparting and reliable gentlemen, at least we have found them so.

ANCHOR LINE EXCURSION.—The above line of steamboats is the most popular line leaving New Orleans for St. Louis. The steamers are large and elegantly fitted up, and the table is all that can be desired by travelers. Call and see that popular gentleman, Capt. J. H. Wood, the general agent before you purchase your tickets, and in will astonish you with the prices at which he is selling tickets. Through tickets for sale on board and at the office.

TO TRAVELERS.—Mr. Guedry, under the St. Charles Hotel, in this city, is a very excellent gentleman to do business with in his line. He is a railroad ticket broker. This branch of business is not as thoroughly understood as it might be. All the people who have once availed themselves of the special bargains it offers to travelers, however, never fail to buy a second time. It is a legitimate business, and often saves the public many dollars. Call on him before purchasing elsewhere, and save money.

BUTTERICK'S SPRING STYLES.—The attention of the ladies is called to the advertisement of E. Butterick & Co.'s patterns. Catalogues and fashion sheets mailed free to any address. These patterns are very popular with the ladies. See advertisement.

SPECTACLE OR AN EYE GLASS.—Messrs. Keeping & Co., 2147 Third Avenue, New York, advertise to sell spectacles, or an eye glass, at bottom prices, or they say. See advertisement.

HARD PAN.—Those of our readers who, for over thirty years have been in the habit of using Dr. Tobias' Venetian Liniment, will be pleased to learn that the price is reduced to twenty-five and fifty cents per bottle.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

POZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER is acknowledged by thousands of ladies, who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not roughen the skin, chap, blister, or leave black spots in the pores. Mothers can apply it to infants who become chafed with a surety of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot, 607 North Sixth street, St. Louis (Lindell Hotel).

A Spectacle or an Eye Glass at Bottom Prices. An examination of our Copyrighted Chart will enable us to fit you exactly. Spectacle, as low as twenty-five cents. Chart and descriptive price list free. Send for one. KEEPING & CO., 2,147 3d av., New York.

PALATABLE MEDICINES.—Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is a honeyed drop of relief; his Cathartic Pills glide sugar-shod over the palate; and his Sarsaparilla is a nectar that imparts vigor to life, restores the health and expels disease.—Waterford (Pa.) Advertiser.

To the Consumptive.—Let those who languish under the fatal severity of cold Climates through any pulmonary complaint, or even those who are in decided Consumption by no means despair. There is a safe and sure remedy at hand, and one easily tried. Wilbor's Compound of Cod-Liver Oil and Lime—without possessing the very unpleasant flavor of the Oil as heretofore used—is endowed by the phosphate of Lime with a healing property which restores the Oil doubly efficacious. Send for the testimonials of its efficacy shown by those who desire them. Sold by A. B. Wilbor, Chemist, Boston, and all druggists.

What the Birds Accomplish.—The swallow, swift and nighthawk are the guardians of the atmosphere. They check the increase of flies that otherwise would overload it. Woodpeckers, creepers and chickadees are the guardians of the trunks of trees. Warblers and flycatchers protect the foliage. Blackbirds, crows thrushes and larks protect the surface of the soil. Snipe and woodcocks search the soil under the surface. Each of these respective duties so performed in the economy of nature, and it is an established fact that the birds are still sweet of the earth, man could not live upon it; vegetation would wither and decay, insects would become so numerous that no living thing could withstand their attacks. The wholesale destruction occasioned to grain crops, which have lately devastated the West, is mainly caused by the thinning of the birds, such as grouse, prairie hens, etc., which feed upon them. The great and irreparable service done to the farmer, gardener and florist by the birds is becoming known by sad experience to such; the birds and save your crops, the price of corn and fruit taken by them is more than compensated by the great number of noxious insects they destroy. The long persecuted crow has been found, by actual experience, to do more good by the vast quantities of grubs and insects he devours than the harm he does in the few grains of corn he pulls up. He is one of the farmer's best friends.—Rural Home Journal.

Some Facts About Lime.—Several correspondents ask for information concerning the use of lime on land, and as of them contain evidence of several commonly accepted but erroneous notions. First, lime is not plant food; or rather it is so common in most soils and implements comprises so large a portion of many fertilizers that its application as plant food is unnecessary. We have not seen a soil analysis from which this constituent was missing, and there is nearly always considerable of it present in available form. A cubic foot of ordinary soil weighs about seventy pounds, and if one acre of the earth, man could do the work, vegetation would wither and decay, insects would become so numerous that no living thing could withstand their attacks. The wholesale destruction occasioned to grain crops, which have lately devastated the West, is immediately caused by the thinning of the birds, such as grouse, prairie hens, etc., which feed upon them. Amendments to Charter OF THE MERCHANTS' MUTUAL Insurance Company.

New Orleans, Feb. 10, 1879.

At the regular meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the thirteenth of January, 1879, the following members being present:

Messrs. P. Fourchy, P. Maspero, D. Fallo, J. B. Lallande, M. W. Smith, Ed. Toby, John Geddes, J. J. Fernandez and Charles Ellis.

Upon the petition of a large majority of the stockholders the following amendments to the charter of the Company were unanimously adopted, under the powers vested in the Board of Directors by the fourteenth article of the charter:

ARTICLE EIGHTEENTH.

The first article of the charter is so amended as to postpone the expiration of the charter until the thirty-first day of May, eighteen hundred and ninety-nine, unless the affairs of the Company be sooner liquidated, by a vote of two-thirds of the members of the corporation.

ARTICLE NINETEENTH.

The capital stock of the Company is fixed at six hundred thousand dollars. This change to take effect from the first day of June next, when new certificates of stock will be issued. The new shares to be one hundred dollars each. Certificates to be issued for fractional parts of a share to be ultimately consolidated into full shares by purchase or sale.

I, the undersigned, Recorder of Mortgages in and for the parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, do hereby certify that the within and foregoing amendment of the charter of the Merchants' Mutual Insurance Company is this day recorded in this office, in book 132, folio 295 and 296.

NINTH SEASON.

Our this season's catch now ready is the finest we have ever produced. Years of trial have proved their unsurpassed superiority, Purity and Economy, and being unexcelled as a Preserved Fish they are now a recognized favorite in the world's market.

The unparalled success in former seasons induced the packing of forlaxion goods by other parties, which were bought by some dealers through ignorance or for their cheapness. Such purchases were attended with the usual results.

The celerity with which a luncheon or meal can be obtained, (as they require no cooking or preparation, being always ready) render them peculiarly acceptable to travellers, picnic and excursion parties, or our general use; their delicious piquante flavor satisfies the palate of the most fastidious, while their cheapness, being now a half one half of the original price), meets the requirements of the economical are packed in hermetically sealed tins, essentially no glass, in a mild, pleasing appetizing sauce, palatable to all; free from the oily properties of the Sardine, retaining only the natural oil of the Shad, and ready for the table at all hours, for dinner, lunch or evening meal, by merely opening the box.

We are the only packers of the GENUINE SHADINES. They are our Trade Mark.

Scientific.

Novel Uses of the Telephone. Various are the surprises, says the New York Tribune, which blossom out of that wonderful instrument, the telephone. In France they have applied it for marine purposes. The French war steamer Desaix had to tow out from Toulon the old ship Argonaute. A conducting wire was rolled round one of the towing cables, with an end on each vessel. The electric current was formed by the action of the sea on the copper sheathing of the ships. A telephone was introduced in the circuit on each, and communication established between them. During the whole time of navigation conversation could be carried on as easily between the officers of the two vessels as if they had been seated in the same cabin. The next step was to apply the telephone to the work of the diver. One of the glasses of the helmet is replaced by a copper plate, in which is inserted a telephone, so that the man has only a slight movement of the head to make in order to receive communications or report observations. The advantages of such an arrangement are obvious. Frequently at sea the necessity arises of examining the keel or bottom of a ship. The diver descends, and is able to give an account of all he sees and does, and receive instructions without having to be brought to the surface to give explanations, as has hitherto been the case. By the use of the telephone a man at the bottom of the sea can remain in constant verbal communication with those at the surface. But the most singular application of the telephone comes from New South Wales, where Mr. Severn, an enthusiastic experimenter, claims that he has made the deaf to hear with it. After describing a very simple telephone which he constructed out of a tin pot, the closed end of which he opened and tied over it a piece of parchment, passing a fine string through the center, and making a knot inside, Mr. Severn says: "Make a loop in the string some three feet long, put this loop over the forehead of the listener (the deaf man,) cause him to place the palms of his hands flat and hard against the ears, let the loop pass over the hands, and now this listener will hear the smallest whisper, let him be deaf or not. This fact may appear extraordinary; it is, nevertheless, true that a deaf man may thus be made to hear the voice, music, etc."

—Dr. Kirk, Her Majesty's consul general at Zanzibar, has been, the Academy states, continuing his investigations into the distribution of the Tsetse fly in Eastern Africa. He finds that along the road, from the coast to Central Ugogo, the present limit of exploration, there are wide districts infested by it; but there is, however, some reason to hope that they are isolated and may be avoided when their exact limits are clearly known and defined. Dr Kirk reports that the rule everywhere holds good that where the fly is found large game is numerous; but he is of opinion, in opposition to some persons, that it by no means follows the game in their migrations, though it undoubtedly disappears when they are killed off. A curious circumstance in this connection is that the natives appear to be well acquainted with the precise limits of the fly region, and are thus able to keep their cattle in safety quite close to it. No preventitive or antidote has yet proved successful, and if ordinary beasts of burden are to be used to supersede the troublesome pagazi the only way, according to Dr. Kirk, will be to choose such a line of road as will entirely avoid the infested regions, or else to cross them in a narrow part in the night time.

HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER

Has been in constant use by the public for over twenty years, and is the best preparation ever invented for RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOR AND LIFE.

It supplies the natural food and color to the hair glands without staining the skin. It will increase and thicken the growth of the hair, prevent its blanching and falling off, and thus AVERT BALDNESS.

It cures Itching, Eruptions and Dandruff. As a HAIR DRESSING it is very desirable, giving the hair a silken softness which all admire. It keeps the head clean, sweet and healthy.

The State Assayer and Chemist of Mass. and leading Physicians endorse and recommend it as a great triumph in medicine.

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE FOR THE WHISKERS

will change the beard to a BROWN or BLACK at discretion. Being in one preparation it is easily applied, and produces a permanent color that will not wash off.

EDUCATIONAL.

Woodville Female Seminary.

A NON-SECTARIAN ACADEMY, UNDER the supervision of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South: Mississippi Conference; Hon. J. McGehee, President of Board of Trustees. For Thoroughness of instruction, healthfulness, cheapness, and many other advantages, is not surpassed. We invite those interested to examine our credentials, and to obtain circulars, by calling upon Mr. Philip Werlein, New Orleans, La., or address the Principal. A. J. WRIGHT, Woodville, Miss.

The Loquet-LeRoy Institute

AND KINDERGARDEN DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, 280 Camp Street.—This institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses MOISE, Cecelia W., Sallie L., and Corinne, the latter relicts of the late R. G. Raoul, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successors of Mme Loquet LeRoy, whose good will and right to conduct the School under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No change whatever in the conduct and management of the School. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to the institution, and that of their friends, and the public generally, promising strict devotion to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge. C. W. MOISE, Principal.

REFERRING TO THE ABOVE MADAME LOQUET-LEROY announces to her friends and former patrons the entire confidence she has in her successors being in every way suited to the high trust they have assumed. She bespeaks for them a continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded her, and that she will still be actively connected with the institution. For terms and particulars apply to the principal.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,

(Postoffice the same)

MONROE COUNTY, EAST TENNESSEE.

PARENTS desiring to find a safe and healthy location for their sons during the summer season would do well to patronize the above-named institution under the patronage of the Holston Annual Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The spring term closes May 22, and Fall session begins

FIRST MONDAY IN AUGUST, 1879.

Students arriving before the latter date will be beyond the reach of epidemics, and will thus secure some months of profitable study before Colleges usually open in less favored localities.

Excellent board in College Boarding House, by D. A. McKenzie, the well known caterer to the table, at ten dollars per month. Washing included. Same in good private families at nine dollars. Tuition College Course, twenty dollars; English Course, fifteen dollars.

A military officer in the East received orders to take a certain position of the enemy. On a near approach it appeared impregnable. One and another of his command suggested difficulties and proposed delay. Quietly hearing them all he said, "Gentlemen I have my orders to take this position and I must take it." Brethren, we have our orders to take this world for Christ, and we must do it. He has given us this opportunity, and we must use it.

To doubt would be disloyalty
To falter would be sin

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER.

FOR WOMEN & CHILDREN.

Females suffering from pain and weakness will derive great comfort and strength from the use of Benson's Capcine Porous Plaster. Where children are affected with whooping cough, croup, coughs or colds or weak lungs, it is the one and only treatment they should receive. This article contains new medicinal elements, such as is found in no other remedy in the same form. It is far superior to the common porous plasters, liniments, electricity, plasters and other external remedies. It relieves pain at once, strengthens and cures where other plasters will not even relieve. For Lame and Weak Back, Rheumatism, Kidney Ache and all local aches and pains it is also the best known remedy.

TUTT'S PILLS.

SYMPTOMS OF A TORPID LIVER.

Loss of Appetite, Bowels Costive, Pain in the Head with a dull sensation in the back part, Pain under the shoulder-blade, fullness after eating with a disinclination to exertion of body or mind, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, with a feeling of having neglected some duty, Weariness, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the Eyes, Yellow Skin, Headache generally over the right eye, Restlessness with disturbed dreams, highly colored Urine.

IF THESE WARNINGS ARE UNHEEDED SERIOUS DISEASES WILL SOON BE DEVELOPED.

TUTTS PILLS

are especially adapted to such cases, a single dose effects such a change of feeling as to astonish the sufferer.

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS:

DR. TUTT:—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect; regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.

REV. K. L. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

The first effect of TUTT'S PILLS is to Increase the Appetite, and cause the body to Take on Flesh, thus the system is nourished, and by their Tonic Action on the Digestive Organs, Regular Stools are produced.

DR. J. F HAYWOOD OF NEW YORK, SAYS:

"Few diseases exist that cannot be relieved by restoring the liver to its normal functions and for this purpose no remedy has ever been invented that has as happy an effect as TUTT'S PILLS."

Sold Everywhere. 25 Cents.

OFFICE, 35 MURRAY ST., NEW YORK.

DISCOVERY BY which hair can be restored to grow on the almost bare heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. HYATT'S Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. HYATT'S principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. Three bottles for $5; C. O. D. to accompany the order and balance to be paid when medicine is delivered.

WHY?

BY ELAINE GOODALE.

Why does the bud that is near to its breaking
Wake sweeter smiles than the fully blown rose?
Why does the dream on the verge of awaking
Stir deeper truths than a deeper repose?

Why does the love that is broken with parting
Lift itself higher by the fulness of pain?
Why is the incomplete rapture of starting
Close on completion we never attain?

Why? For a boundless unsatisfied longing
Lies deepest down in the warm human heart;
Ever with this are the sympathies thronging,
Ever by this do the heaven-flowers start.

Grow with our Spring: we can follow you wholly
Only as far as its instincts are sent;
Summer is a fact that is hidden and holy.
We have not seen it—we are not content.

—Sunday Afternoon.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

SIOUX CITY, Iowa, March 31.—The Journal has startling reports of the ravages of destructive prairie fires on the Big Sioux Valley and throughout Southern Dakota. The fires on Saturday were of unusual force and destructive beyond precedent. The poles on the telegraph line on the Sioux City and Pembina railroad were burned so that the line has been down and reports from that quarter are not full.

A merchant of Eden, who was in Sioux City to-day, tells harrowing tales of the loss in that quarter.

On Saturday, from his store door the town occupying an elevated position, he counted thirteen farmhouses in flames, and he says more than forty in that vicinity have lost everything, houses, barns, seed, grain etc.

The flames traveled with such rapidity that the people were unable to save anything. The stricken people are dazed by the terrible blow that has fallen on them. A large Norwegian church, five miles from Eden, was burned. In the same neighborhood a child was fatally burned and its father terribly burned in his efforts to save its life.

Northwest of Beloit a Norwegian, named Nickolson, while working to save his property, was caught in the fire and so badly burned that he cannot live. It is reported that two other men in the same locality were burned to death.

In the vicinity of Portlandville it is said not less than twenty families lose their hay, goods, etc.

West of Elk Point, Mr. Richardson lost a large amount of grain.

The school-house with all the books and contents was also burned.

At White Swan, opposite Fort Randall, the telegraph office with all the effects was burned as the operator reports from Yankton agency. At the same place the government stables were burned, but the stock was saved.

Altogether immense damage has been done, and the hardship to settlers is particularly severe. The grass grew very rank last year, and the protracted dry spell has made it powerful food for a fire.

PROVIDENCE, April 2.—In the State election to-day four parties were in the field. The vote was light and the whole Republican State ticket elected by a larger majority than last year.

NEWARK, N. Y., April 2.—The eighty-ninth annual session of the New York Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was convened at Trinity Church this morning. It was presided over by Bishop Morrill, of Chicago.

DANVILLE, April 3.—A severe storm passed over Brown's Summit, N. C., to-day. Several houses were blown down, scattering furniture promiscuously. One boy was killed. Many persons were seriously injured by falling timber. Trees and fences were blown in pieces, and great damage was done in its passage.

STARKEVILLE, April 3.—Governor Stone, ex-officio President, and other members of the Agricultural and Mechanical College Board, arrived here to-day on a special train amid the booming of a cannon. They were met at the depot and escorted into the city by the cadets of the Starkeville Male Academy. The board met pursuant to adjournment, a sufficient number being present to constitute a quorum, and spent the day in inspecting the various proposed sites for the location of the college, and will likely make a selection to-morrow, when a full board will be present.

The Masonic Lodge called a meeting in honor to Mr. Frank Banket, Grand Master, and Governor Stone, the former Secretary of the Agricultural and Mechanical College Board.

Governor Stone appointed to-day as State Sanitary Commissioners: First district, E. P. Sale, M. D.; second district, John Wright, M. D., of Panola county; third district, S. V. D. Hill, M. D., and B. F. Kittrell, M. D.; fourth district, Geo. E. Redwood; sixth district, C. A. Rice, M. D.—upon the recommendation of the Medical Association, now in session at Aberdeen.—N. O. Picayune.

ATLANTA, April 4.—The weather has been quite cold here to-day, the thermometer indicating 31°. The peach, pear and apple crops are ruined, the vegetable crop is not seriously damaged. The cold snap does not extend all over the State.

NEW YORK, April 4.—Intelligence from Port au Prince says the city of Miragoane was completely destroyed by fire during the night of March 16.

BOSTON, April 4.—The U. S. steamer Plymouth, Captain Harmony, which left Boston March 15, for a cruise to the West Indies, has returned to Vineyard Sound on account of two cases of yellow fever occurring on board when about three hundred miles southeast of Bermuda Islands.

The ship had been in Boston during the winter, and as she had come from the West Indies last autumn with yellow fever on board, she had been frozen out and fumigated. As she had not called in any port since leaving Boston, this development showed that the germs of yellow fever still existed in her, and she was headed north, being deemed, under the circumstances, unfit for cruising in the tropics.

BALTIMORE, April 4.—Mme Elizabeth Patterson Bonaparte died this afternoon.

STARKEVILLE, Miss., April 5.—The board of trustees of the Agricultural and Mechanical College have been here for some days, Governor Stone, ex officio President, considering the location of that institution. After a thorough inspection and consideration of the several locations offered, they selected a property of Mr. Wm. Bell, containing 350 acres at the nominal cost of $7 per acre, lying on both sides of the Starkeville branch of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, and about one and a half miles from this city.

The board decided to proceed at once to the erection of the college buildings.

The object of the board is to have all arrangements made, that the college may be opened on the first of January next.

LONDON, April 5.—A special dispatch to the Times, from Alexandria, says: On the day after the battle between the Egyptian and Arabs under lead of Sulelman, five thousand deserters came over to the Egyptian camp. The Egyptians followed the retiring enemy, killing ten chiefs and two thousand more men, and were still in pursuit at last advices. The capture of all the slave depots is considered certain.

LONDON, April 7.—The Standard's dispatch from Rome says: Cardinal Nina, the papal secretary of state, has received an important dispatch from Bismarck. The difficulties preventing an understanding with Germany are probably ended. Several ecclesiastics, who separated from the church because of the proclamation of infallibility, have secretly submitted to the pope, and more are expected to follow their example.

We clip the following from the Buffalo Christian Advocate of March 6:

Last Sabbath a most interesting experiment was tried at the Breckinridge Street Presbyterian Church, Rev. Wm. Alfred Gay, pastor. Recently the church has been connected with the Buffalo Telephone Exchange, so that conversations can be carried on with all parts of the city. The "transmitter" is firmly fastened to the top of the pulpit, facing the speaker, while the battery, call-bell telephones are conveniently arranged under the desk. As Mr. Gay spoke, every word was carried over the intervening two miles of wire to the central office, and he had the pleasure of addressing two audiences at the same time, although they were located two miles apart. When the sermon was about half finished the "switch" was turned, and a lady who had not been able to attend church for about six months heard every word as distinctly in her sick room as if she had occupied her pew at the church. Even the organ and cornet, fifty feet away, and behind the "transmitter," were plainly heard. At the evening hour the wires were connected at twelve separate residences and places of business, and as many different companies of people who had assembled for the purpose listened to Mr Gay's sermon upon "David and Goliath."

The Imperial Government in China has ordered the closing of the Buddhist nunneries. The Rev. Geo. F. Fitch, Presbyterian minister at Soochow, writes on December 19: "Day before yesterday quite a little stir was created in this city, and, indeed, I suppose throughout the whole country, by an order from Pekiu closing all the Buddhist nunneries throughout the whole land. For just what reason we have not definitely learned. Just across the way from our house are two nunneries, and on that day the occupants moved out. The younger will marry, and the elder will be sent to widows' asylums." Miss Safford, of the same mission, gives this account of these institutions: "There are fifty in Soochow, averaging six or eight nuns to a house. Women are the chief supporters of the nunneries, especially wealthy women whom the nuns have deluded into believing that great merit is to be acquired by founding and supporting such establishments. Individuals buy an interest in the prayers of these nuns, at prices ranging from a few cash to several dollars, according to the wealth or liberality of the woman soliciting them."

A number of ladies connected with the Executive Committee of the Auxiliary Lee Monumental Association have decided to have a loan exposition and entertainment for the relief of the "Home of the Aged and Infirm" in this city. The object is certainly a worthy one, and can but appeal to the benevolence of every creed. The enterprise is heartily endorsed by many of the best citizens of New Orleans, and it will be under the management of ladies whose names are a sufficient guarantee that everything will be arranged and conducted in a manner to meet the approval of all. We quote as follows from a card sent us by the president of the Executive Committee, Mrs. Judge Spofford, and signed by herself and others:

A majority of the ladies of the Executive Committee of the Auxiliary Lee Monumental Association having reconsidered their several votes in favor of a "loan exhibition," we, the minority, desire to utilize the work already done by devoting it to the most pressing charity New Orleans presents to the eyes of the needful.

After careful investigation we have decided that the Home of the Aged and Infirm takes a sad pre-eminence in misery, being characterized by the Grand Jury as a disgrace to our city.

This is a plea that must reach every heart, for we may all grow old and our lives might become desolate, no matter how fair the surroundings of present fate.

In conclusion we beg leave to state that reliance must depend upon the generosity of our citizens whether the "loan exposition" shall prove, as in other cities, a blessing and success. Whether it shall inspire hope, suggest invention, stimulate industries, and flatter our pride as denizens of the "Queen City of the South," through the means of a full, free, clerical giving; which, in this instance above all others, "shall not impoverish," or, all contrire, we shall be reminded to the dull regions of croaking and dissatisfaction.

With the hope and belief that the golden side of the shield will be turned toward us, our appeal is ended.

From China.

SOOCHOW CHINA, Feb. 15, 1879.

Edited by Sumner and Morgan Street Sunday School, New Orleans, La.

DEAR FRIENDS: As you have been supporting, for part, the boys boarding-school here in Soochow, I write now to give you a short report of it.

There are now eighteen pupils in the school, ten of whom are supported by special contributions. The amount you have been sending has been about enough to support five boys, leaving two or three to be supported by the board.

The boys have all been well, and have been applying themselves to their studies, and have been making very fair progress.

Six of them have been received into the church, four or five of the others have been baptized in infancy, and some six or eight are probationers. I give part of my time to teaching them every day—about an hour and a half a day. I have a Chinese teacher, who teaches and takes charge of the school all the time. Bro. Dzau (C. K. Marshall) looks after their clothing, food, etc.

The building the school is now in is too small, and we have asked the board to give us money to put up larger buildings elsewhere. We hope to accomplish this in a year or two. We have great hopes of these boys, and look forward to the time when they will be of great assistance to us in disseminating a knowledge of the gospel.

I hope you will all continue your interest in this school, and that your efforts on behalf of these boys will be rewarded by many of them becoming useful men and preachers of the gospel. Yours truly,

A. P. PARKER, Shanghai, China.

Missionary Specialties.

It is a remarkable fact that specialties in mission work increase rather than decrease as the general societies advance their work and their receipts. No people, for instance, give so much money per capita to the great missionary societies as the churches of Great Britain (always excepting the Moravians;) and not even the continent of Europe excels them in special organizations subordinate to the general purpose of evangelism. Let us note a few of these. Besides the "S. P. G.," of which we speak, there are "The Colonial and Continental Church Society," established to provide clergymen, Scripture readers and school teachers in the colonies and for British residents in all parts of the world; "The Church of England Scripture Readers' Association," "The Army Scripture Readers' and Soldier's Friend Society," and "The Anglo-Indian Christian Union," which aims at the evangelization of Britons scattered throughout India in widely isolated groups, in many instances far from the ordinary ministration of the gospel by chaplains and missionaries.

These seem to us, at this distance, to be specialties within a specialty, yet we presume that experience shows that they are efficient, or, by the law of necessity, only the fittest would survive.

The great British Missionary Societies have nearly all their special Woman's Societies acting in harmony with their own, yet these exist. "The Society for Promoting Female Education in the East," whose object is to enable every girl and woman, in all ranks of society in India, China, Africa and the Levant, to read in her own tongue the Scriptures. This society was organized forty-four years ago, and survives in efficiency, though it has been followed by so many kindred societies on both sides of the Atlantic. Besides this there are "The Society for Female Education in India," "The Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society," which aims to carry the gospel to every woman in India by the agencies of Normal Schools, Zenana Visitation, Female Medical Missions, schools and Bible women, and "The British Syrian Schools and Bible Missions for the Social and Religious Improvement of the Syriac Females," which maintains twenty-five schools at Beyrout, Damascus, Tyre, Budbeck, the Lebanon, Boys' Schools and Training Institutions for native teachers, and has 2,500 pupils, with 15 Bible women. Harem visitors and Scripture readers. There are numerous other special female societies in Great Britain alone with similar aims, but having specific organization in fact.

But the special organizations allied with the evangelical movements of the great missionary societies are legion. "The Vernacular Education Society for India" was instituted in 1858 as a memorial of the mutiny, and has for its object the providing of Christian Vernacular education and literature for India. The "Turkish Missions Aid Society" aims to further the cause of Christian missions in Bible lands and throughout the Turkish empire, not by sending missionaries, but by enabling those already engaged in the work to multiply the number of evangelists, pastors and teachers. The "Foreign Aid Society" is of similar supplemental aim to other missions, in France, Italy and other lands. In Naples it has hundreds of scholars, as also in Madrid. The "Evangelical Continental Society" seeks to disseminate truth in the continent of Europe and the work in France, Belgium, Italy, Spain and Bohemia. Added to these are the "Spanish and Portuguese Church Missions Society," established for preaching and school and Bible work in those countries, the "London Society for Promoting Christianity Among the Jews," others among the Indians and among the Roman Catholics, the "South American Missionary Society," which originated as the Patagonian Society, and had, or has, work along much of the very west coast of South America, where Bro. Taylor has located his men, such as at Callao. They were stretched from Panama to Patagonia, and all originated with the zealous but eccentric Capt. Gardiner. To illustrate further, there are societies for still more specific subdivisions of the work, as "The Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society," the "East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions," which trains volunteers for mission service in any part of the world, the "Bible Translation Society," to aid in printing and circulating "only faithful" translations of the Scriptures into foreign languages, and "The Missionary Leaves Association," for assisting native clergy and missionaries in Africa and the East, and other parts of the mission field occupied by the "Church Missionary Society." There are also local missions, like the "Jaffa Mission School," Palestine, established 1868 9, educating over seventy poor native boys, and numerous personal and measurable private enterprises in many parts of the world.

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, familiarly known as the S. P. G., has for its primary object the care of British colonists in all parts of the world by supplying them with catechists, Bible readers and ministers. Its income in 1872 was £142,311.

Rev. William Taylor commenced in India a similar work among English-speaking people, and has since extended his operation to the west coast of South America, so far as to send out several school teachers and ministers—a work in both cases of intrinsic value. The line of operations is so well marked and so simple that hitherto it has been an easy thing for one man to manage it, especially as it involved no further financial transaction on his part than receiving moneys enough from patrons to send forward his men.

The Christian Standard, however, for some time past has been appealing to the public to contribute $20,000 as a permanent fund for Bro. Taylor's operations, and acknowledges receipts at that office of over two thousand dollars toward such sum. This is so distinctively a work for the purpose of helping European and American colonists in various parts of the globe, that it should not be confounded nor contrasted with our missionary work among heathen. It does seem to us that it would be better to have it separately organized if it cannot be brought into closer financial and administrative relation with our Missionary Society. An American S. P. G. would be better than the present administration of the new departure.—Northern Christian Advocate.

Stage Morals.

In two or three daily papers that are by no means Puritanic in their notions we have seen references to the present condition of the stage in this country that do not encourage us to recommend our neighbors to patronize it. A writer in the Tribune, who had been assured that if he had not attended the drama since his youth he would find it an entirely different thing from that of his recollections, concluded to go and take a grown-up child. The audience he found to be decorous and respectable in the extreme, and the play was described as a "regular old-fashioned, legitimate play." But the things that this correspondent saw and heard there are not, it must be confessed, things with which decent people wish themselves or their children to be familiar. Profanity, to begin with, was a frequent constituent of the play; there was a scene of drunken carousal, and a song in praise of wit, women and wine, presently came an allusion to the last degree obscene, so broad that there was no mistaking its meaning, and by and by an interview in which one played upon all the arts of wicked persuasion to break down another's virtue. These coarse and indecent scenes and suggestions naturally made the father doubt the usefulness of this form of recreation. And his conclusion as to theater going is one to which a good many people who are by no means prudish have been forced to come: "As things are at present it is too costly a risk, and the good to be gained is too indirect, while there are so many unexceptionable avenues to benefit and recreation elsewhere. I can't imagine a stage with plays and performers all pure, stuff we ever see it." The prospect of seeing it just now in New York is not brilliant, if we may credit the newspapers. The plays that are now most popular in that city are described as being ghastly immoral; the few that are above reproach on the score of morality are disparaged by the newspapers and ignored by the public. The newspapers, too, that has been crowding the Academy, is based upon one of the most disgusting of plots. "The Standard is degenerating," says the Springfield Republican, "if this vulgarly vicious story, set to perfectly sympathetic music, is well received in the American metropolis." Sunday Afternoon.

The Prince who Wants a Pulpit.

Of all the members of our royal family, perhaps the one with the strongest intellectual bias is Prince Leopold. Unable to mingle much in society in consequence of a malady which has troubled him now and again all through his career, he has naturally been thrown back upon studious pursuits. He is a very fair scholar, and is certainly possessed by a great enthusiasm for learning and the arts. A few days ago he attended a great meeting in the city of London, called by the Lord Mayor, and spoke on behalf of the extension of university education. He was placed at a disadvantage by having to follow the greater orator of his time, Mr. Gladstone, and yet, notwithstanding this, he acquitted himself with marked ability.

Mr. Gladstone congratulated the Prince upon his speech, and was evidently astonished both by his fluency and the cogency of his arguments. Prince Leopold has long desired to adopt the church as a profession, and the matter has again been discussed at court very recently—so it is confidently affirmed. He certainly has a strong leaning to clericalism, but what we should do with a Prince of the blood in the church I do not know. He would make such a "sensation" that there would be no place large enough to hold his audiences, unless Mr. Spurgeon agreed to give up the Metropolitan Tabernacle for his use. I am inclined to think that the church of England would find a great influx of candidates for confirmation if it became known that the Queen's son was willing to lay his hands upon them.

Let Everybody Read This.

We have inquiries as to the facilities we can offer to those who wish to enter into the sale and circulation of our church literature. I answer:

1. We allow twenty cents on each subscriber to the Advocate, when the order is accompanied with the cash, $1 80. To get this premium the agent must send us at least five subscribers.

2. In the sale of the books of our own publication our usual discount is twenty-five per cent., or one-fourth off. For other books we make special contracts, when the discount is not noted in the catalogue.

3. When a person desires to devote his time to selling our books, and when he is prompt, we allow him a larger discount by special contract.

4. Our Terms. We are allowed by the law of the General Conference to sell only "for cash or its equivalent." A positive promise to pay in thirty or sixty days we regard as equivalent to cash, when the purchaser is prompt in his returns. Failure to meet promises will justify a discontinuance of farther indulgence. Those who may desire to enter on this work will please send us the name of some responsible person who can commend the applicant.

5. Those engaged in the sale of books should always sell by catalogues and samples. Take the printed catalogue, furnish yourself with a copy of each book you propose to sell, engage to furnish your customer at the regular price, and when a sufficient number shall be sold to make a shipment, send your order to the Book Agent, receive and deliver the books, always requiring the money before the book is delivered; then send the amount of the bill to the Agent, retaining only your profit. While this is going on get a new list, and forward your order. Thus you will always be at work, lose no money, and will be able all the time to meet your obligations.

We send out no books on commission.

MR. EDITOR: There is already great interest shown in Europe in behalf of the flooded Szegedin, in Hungary. Yesterday's papers report £7,000 subscribed to the Mansion House Fund in London. We Americans, always sympathizing with suffering humanity everywhere, should certainly hasten to add to the number of Szegedin's benefactors. We therefore respectfully beg you to notice the fact that the Hon. E. Cooper, Mayor of New York, has consented to receive subscriptions for the relief of the destitute and homeless sufferers of Szegedin.

Before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, recently held at Dublin, Mr. Alex. S. Wilson read a paper on the nectar of flowers. He found that a bee had to make 2,500,000 visits to clover blossoms in order to get one pound of honey. The remarkable part of Mr. Wilson's paper is the discovery that cane-sugar exists in the nectar of some flowers, contrary to the generally accepted view. The nectar of the fuchsia has three-fourths of its weight cane sugar.

THE MIDNIGHT PRAISETH THEE.

The midnight praiseth Thee—
When deepest silence holds
The sleeping earth so quietly
'Neath dark and dewy folds,
Still sings the purling brook,
Still roars the mighty sea;
And stars through azure ether look,
As midnight praiseth Thee.

The midnight praiseth Thee—
When sorrow's dismal shade
Follows where rode adversity
A wreck of joy has made;
Still there are lights of light
To gild the tears that we
Shed through the watches of the night
For midnight praiseth Thee.

The midnight praiseth thee—
The glories of the morn
That set the waking world agiee
From out its womb are born,
Upon the tender grass,
Upon the lofty tree
The angels brush their wings and pass;
The midnight praiseth Thee.

As solemnly the bell
Tells for a vanished day
Its echoes in the distance swell
With a more cheerful lay
For Time's fast flying feet
Approach eternity,
Whose rising shores the note repeat,
The midnight praiseth Thee.

Rev. P. H. Napier, A. M.,

LATE OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

A notice of the death of this distinguished man appeared in the ADVOCATE a few weeks ago.

I am notified that he desired me to furnish you with a short biographical sketch of his life.

John S. Napier was born in Virginia in 1778. He died in 1852. His wife, Frances Barford Napier, was born in North Carolina in 1789, and died in 1852, three months after the death of her husband. Their eldest son, the subject of this sketch (Philip Hawkins Napier,) was born in Smith county, Tenn., November 4, 1821.

The family moved to Mississippi in 1831. Five years later young Philip, a lad of fifteen, professed religion and joined the Methodist Protestant Church, of which his parents were members. In 1838 he married Miss Sarah Dooly. He was then an uncultured lad, having had no opportunities.

He was licensed to preach, and joined the traveling connection in the Methodist Protestant Church in 1841. For thirty consecutive years he did faithful work in that body; was often its president; filled its most important appointments.

In 1871, when the Methodist Protestant Church in Mississippi united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Bro. Napier was stationed in Canton. He was appointed the next year to Shubuta. In 1873 he served the Moss Point work, and very acceptably. His failing health caused him to locate. He remained local four years, doing much preaching, however, during this time. He was readmitted at Jackson, Miss., December, 1877. While his case was up Bishop McTyeire asked some question in regard to his preaching. Dr. Marshall replied that in the pulpit he had no superior, if a peer in the State, or something to that effect. He was appointed to Lake circuit. A few days after Conference he was suddenly struck down by something like an apoplectic stroke. He was insensible several days, and confined to his room several weeks. When able to be about a little he went to Shubuta for medical treatment. He was also suffering at times from an asthmatic affection.

I frequently saw him during his stay in Shubuta. On his best days he was lively, his conversation showing some of those brilliant flashes that made his company so agreeable in former days. He went to his home in Jones county, continued under medical treatment, but without improvement.

It became apparent that he must soon go hence. He arranged his temporal matters. Other and more important arrangements had been already made. And he sat quietly looking out in the direction of the gates of eternity, waiting to welcome the messenger. He said not a cloud was before him, and he felt it was a fit time to die. No more ability to labor in the Lord's vineyard, his friends around him, no enmity in his breast against any mortal, no children to leave fatherless, thus packed up to go, he had only a short time to wait.

On the third of March, just as the sun was setting, he quietly passed away. The day had been bright, the sun had strided the vaulted heavens, sank amid roseate hues, leaving the lingering glories softly melting into the fast coming twilight.

So this brother, in brightness and usefulness, had finished the day of his life, sank into eternity through a twilight all ablaze with the brilliant rays of hope. Surely thou wilt not mourn, Sister Napier, even in thy loneliness, as "those who have no hope."

I first saw Bro. Napier when I was a small boy. He was to me the big preacher that came from a distance to preach funeral sermons fifth Sunday's, and almost any day in the week. By common consent, he was a great preacher. In after years, for myself, I made an estimate upon his powers. He had a round, and somewhat unwieldly frame and form, yet he was very graceful in the pulpit. His voice clear and musical, utterance distinct, diction pure, rhetoric beautiful, oratory, so far as I was able to judge, as near faultless as any I ever heard, though I have seen Col. Glenn before the bar, Dr. Neely in the pulpit, and Edward Everit in the rostrum.

Late in his life his corpulency rendered him in some degree unfit for heavy work. He therefore filled some small appointments in Wayne county, and also the office of Probate Judge. For one or two terms he was State Senator. This small venture in the arena of politics was exceedingly distasteful to him. These positions were forced upon him by over-anxious friends. But, after an experience, his views were to keep the offices of the minister of the gospel, and the politician as far apart as possible.

"To the Father of Mercies and God of all comfort" I commend his widow. T. S. WEST.

Educating Too Much.

MR. EDITOR: In the issue of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for January 23 appeared an article entitled "Educating Too Much," selected from the New York Observer, in which it is objected to our public system of education; that by over-educating the masses it is doing a positive injury to the country in "forcing upon the market a host of educated men for whom there is nothing to do," thereby "destroying the balance of the social system by producing more of one class of laborers than is called for, and diminishing the productions of another." The suggestion is said to have been made by Prof. Monier Williams in his book on "Modern India and the Indians." In a certain way the idea is a good one, but we think that the impression the Observer's argument is likely to leave on the minds of many of its readers is not a salutary one. There are too many thousands of parents throughout the country who will readily take advantage of those suggestions for not schooling their children at all. And to such, Mr. Editor, I wish here to offer a few thoughts.

No doubt the Observer can recall actual observations to the support of its conclusions, and yet those conclusions not be just ones, for the conclusion that a phenomenon at first seems to warrant is the proper one to be drawn. The many thousands of persons in the United States now seeking the more genteel employments, because they think themselves raised above the more menial by their education and parlor breeding, may be considered as a moderate excess of the actual number needed to supply the demand, because there are not so many of them as to exclude the possibility of their obtaining, by constant striving, the desired business. But suppose that, instead of a moderate excess of individuals qualified by education for "employment in spheres which are thought to be more genteel than such as are called menial" (as the Observer words it,) that the entire people of the United States were educated to the full extent of their capacity. This would exclude the possibility of a person's serving in such employments for the mere reason of his being qualified by education, and the securing of the desired employment being left to depend upon other conditions, people would then be, to a greater extent, forced to follow that calling to which they are by nature best fitted; and the refining influence of education being more generally exercised upon those following the meaner vocations of life, the universal distaste to such would be largely lessened. The complaint, then, should not be that we are educating too much, but not enough.

I do not, however, wish to be understood to mean that every individual should receive a collegiate course, for such would be of no material benefit to many, and an actual disadvantage to others; only a small proportion of the race can profit by it. But to the extent that an education develops the native powers of any one, he should receive it. This is requisite to the welfare of a republic like ours; and what is to the general interest of the republic, it is its duty to promote. But it may be proper, however, to admit that these may be much taught in the State schools that is not just for tax-payers to support.

The natural and intimate relationship of parents to children makes it more their imperative duty to attend to the moral and intellectual welfare of children than of any other party. What the State does toward the education of the young is not from an impulse of natural obligation, but from a motive of advancing the general interest of the commonwealth, and for this reason alone can we hold what it does to be a duty. Hence whatever is taught in State schools that does not directly improve the qualifications of the student for performing the duties of citizenship in the republic, may very justly be objected to by tax-payers. But the case is entirely different with parents. It is as much their duty to attend to the moral and intellectual, as to the physical development of their children. If it is wrong for a father to beget sons and daughters, and leave them to the four winds of heaven to gather their bread or starve, it is equally wrong to leave them to gather their mental food in the same way. The question of the citizenship of his children is not the only one that concerns him, but he has also to look to their financial and domestic welfare. It is not the State's duty to fit any one for a special calling that is of no direct advantage to any other than the one so fitted; it is the parent's.

Knowledge is progressing, and year by year its dissipation is facilitated; and he whose capacity for competing with his fellows for a livelihood lies altogether in the strength of his arm will play but a feeble part in the contest.

G. D. PICKELS.

HOLMESVILLE, La.

When, Where, and How Shall I Die?

I am told I must die. God has said so. It is sad to know I must pass through the valley of death, but encouraging to know that Christ will be with me. My first question is: When shall I die? I do not know. God has not revealed the time. I may live to be very old. I may die to-night or to-morrow.

I may die in Spring. When the flowers are fragrant, when the birds are singing, when the grass is verdant, when the heart is merry, God may call me. Would it not be sad to leave this world then. The flowers that some loved hands would place on our grave would only tell our loved ones that their is a more beautiful home for the good.

We may die in Autumn. When the leaves are falling, when the flowers are fading, when the rain is falling, when the whippoorwill is singing, God may call us.

I may die in Winter. When the nights are the longest, when the snow is falling, when all is dreary, God may call us. Our life is in God's hands.

Where shall I die? Will it be at home? Will it be with mother? Will it be with those I love? It makes very little difference, so Jesus is with us.

How shall I die? We shall die as we live. If we live with Christ, we will die in Christ. The question, dear children, is not how I shall die, but how I shall live? Let us live in Christ. Let us begin right now to live in Christ. Give your life to Christ.

What would you think of a friend, when his flowers are blooming, let them fade, and not give any, but after awhile would give you the faded flowers? Give your young life to Christ.

When and where shall I die I do not know, but I do know how I will die if I love Christ—I will die happy.

"'Tis sweet to think we all shall lie
Ere long within one common tomb,
Till from death's hands released we fly,
To those best realms beyond the gloom."

LOTA.

"God Is Love"

We do not propose an exposition of the text. It seems to us a useful purpose as a heading for what we are about to say.

God graciously condescends to consult our wills, and challenge our affections in the offers of mercy. "Wilt thou be made whole?" is the language of holy writ.

A boy may lead a horse to water, but a man cannot make him drink.

It may occasionally be necessary to alarm the fears and awaken the conscience of a congregation by thundering Sinaitic terrors in their ears, but we question if, as a rule, there is not "a more excellent way."

The Saviour says: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

That piety is selfish and secondary which refrains from wrong-doing through fear of punishment.

How much more admirable and elevating the religion that springs from motives of gratitude and personal obligations to God?

How can the most obdurate sinner resist the evidences and appeals of that love which prompted the Son of God to lay down His life, not for His friends, but His enemies?

If the gospel (God-spell) were more frequently presented as a system of love would it not be more successful? PICKENS.

From the Work.

TRENTON, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad to say to you that we are getting along smoothly and pleasantly on Trenton circuit. The trustees purchased a house and lot for a parsonage as soon as I reached the work, and I was here on the first Sunday after the adjournment of Conference. I have met all the appointments thus far, and have good congregations, with some considerable degree of interest manifested by the people. I am trying to visit my people, and familiarize myself with their condition and wants.

The parsonage, as above, is pretty nearly paid for. I suppose the money yet to be paid on it could be raised in twenty-four hours, or any day—it's less than $100. Our first quarterly meeting was held on the fifteenth and sixteenth of March. We had a very good time. Christians enjoyed themselves. The financial report for the quarter was altogether satisfactory, so far, at least, as the salaries of the preacher in charge and presiding elder are concerned. Our prospects are flattering—truly so. But we are not without our troubles. Our presiding elder, Bro. J. E. Cobb, is completely broken down in health, and has been for over a week confined to his bed, still unable to sit up. He has excellent medical attention and good nursing, however, and we hope he will not long remain in doors. Bro. J. M. Brown, at Monroe, is also for the present not fit for service, but his people have placed him under an excellent physician, and we hope he will soon be restored. I trust the Church will pray for these brethren that they may be restored to health, and be enabled to resume their labors among us.

Yours in Christ,

JAMES L. WRIGHT, P. C.

ELLISVILLE MISSION, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have made three rounds on my work, and think this field promises a good harvest. In some parts of the work the people know but little about Methodism; some grown people never saw any one baptized by affusion, or heard any one shout. I trust you will pray for us, that our labors may be blessed. Fraternally yours, Ministerial Backsheesh.

It would, no doubt, be grossly unjust to say that all presents from parishioners to ministers, were on the same level as the Oriental backsheesh. Many of us have received gifts from our parishioners which we knew to be pure tokens of friendship, nothing more or less. And yet no intelligent observer can deny that in very many of the presents made to ministers the backsheesh element is painfully manifest.

The backsheesh element is often seen, for example, in the publicity which frequently accompanies ministerial present-making. A present is chiefly valuable as an expression of good will from one individual or set of individuals to another. When this is the chief object in the mind of the giver, it is usually sought in the most direct and simple manner possible. Anything approaching ostentation in the manner of making the gift is almost sure to throw suspicion upon the motives of the giver. The left hand is not to know what the right hand doeth. This principle is well recognized in the ordinary gift-making of private life. And yet how often, when the minister is made the recipient of a gift in his home and rudely invaded by a crowd of frolicking parishioners calling themselves a "surprise party," whose good will for the minister seems to be overshadowed, to say the least, by their determination to have a jolly good time. Then comes the presentation speech, by which one of the party has an opportunity to display his eloquence, and after the minister has responded, the company set themselves to work to recover in social enjoyment, so far as they can, the value of what they have subscribed to the minister's present. Nor are they satisfied with this, but take good care that the local or religious paper that represents them shall publish their generosity to the world, and give them due credit for the "elegant gold watch," or the "fine oil painting," or the "provisions for the larder," or the "generous roll of greenbacks," the exact amount of which to a dollar is frequently stated. A brother minister once told me that on the morning after a donation party at his house, one of the donors returned and requested permission to take an inventory and make an appraisement of the articles donated, so that their value could be correctly stated.—Sunday Afternoon.

Obituaries.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, other original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

MAJ. J. E. WHITE departed this life January 10, 1879, in the forty-eighth year of his age, at Montgomery, Texas. He was the son of Dr. Franklin White of Vicksburg. He was born near Brownsville, in Hinds county, Miss. He was a lovely boy in character, and was greatly beloved for his noble qualities. When the civil war commenced he raised a company, the "Vicksburg Cadets," and went to Pensacola, thence to Shiloh. He was there promoted to Major for meritorious conduct on the battle-field.

He was a lawyer by profession, and filled the office of District Attorney with marked ability, so much so that the grand jury, at the first court after his death, by formal action, highly commended him, and expressed their great loss in being deprived of his ability and exertions as a public officers, and "a citizen who felt all that man could feel for the welfare of the people among whom he lived, and whose wishes for the welfare of the country were co-extensive with the great and noble heart he possessed."

He left Vicksburg about five years ago and made his home in Texas. He was twice married; his first wife being Miss Bulkley of Jefferson, Texas, and his second Miss Mattingly, of Montgomery, Texas, who survives him with three children. His demise was very sudden, no one knowing of his death until several hours after; and the cause of his death is somewhat veiled in mystery.

He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when young, but went astray and was not reclaimed until October, 1877, at a meeting held at Montgomery by Bros. Sandel, Tittlepage and others. So far had he fallen that restoration was looked upon as a miracle of grace, and a wonderful display of the mercy of God, and the power of divine grace to restore fallen humanity. From that time he was a constant member of the church up to within three weeks of his death, when he withdrew from the church, without assigning a reason therefor, with the expectation probably of uniting again at some other point. At the time of his withdrawal he was class-leader and Recording Steward. Just three weeks from the day of his withdrawal the writer with a very large attendance deposited his remains in the grave to await the resurrection. He was a man of integrity and honor, and a gentleman of refined feelings, and of a noble nature. He was peculiarly sensitive, probably too much so to meet, without being wounded, the asperities of human nature, and this, at times, made him despondent. Though the writer had been acquainted with him but a short time, he had formed a high opinion of him as a Christian and courteous gentleman. He had many friends, and some enemies, growing probably out of the noble stand he took, and the exertions he put forth in opposition to the political corruptions of the times. His withdrawal from the church was deeply regretted by all, and his death cast a gloom of sorrow over the entire community where he was much beloved.

Throwing the mantle of charity over his faults, and dropping a tear of sympathy and love over his grave, we bid him farewell till the resurrection morn. J. M. PEGG.

GEORGE SKINNER departed this life at his residence, near Spring Hill, Marengo county, Alabama, March 7, 1879, aged sixty-seven.

In 1825, when but a boy he moved, with his parents and other members of his family, to Spring Hill, where he spent his life.

In 1843 he married Mrs. Eliza Ann R. Jones, who, with seven children, is left to mourn his loss. Three children went before him to heaven.

Bro. Skinner was well and favorably known. The large assemblage of neighbors and friends who attended his funeral the day after his death attest the high appreciation in which he was held by all. He was one of the few men I have known, in all my life, against whom I have heard no complaint touching his moral integrity. He was an honest, upright, conscientious, faithful man. His intentions were pure. His aim was to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with God. He was a good husband, a kind father, an obliging neighbor and a warm friend.

By industry, economy and frugality he succeeded in accumulating property, but he did good with his money; he was charitable to the poor; he was benevolent; he delighted to do good with his means.

In 1840 he joined the Methodist Church, and for thirty-nine years maintained a good profession. His religion was not noisy; its genuineness was displayed by his daily life. He kept the rules of the church, attended upon its ordinances and supported its institutions. He loved the church, and showed it by helping the church.

His house was always a welcome and pleasant home for preachers and their families. Every itinerant who has traveled this work or yours, past will remember Bro. Skinner with a great deal of pleasure, and sympathize with his family now he is gone.

Over twelve months ago he became partially blind, and went to New Orleans to have his eyes examined by an oculist, and while there it was ascertained that he had Bright's disease of the kidneys, which it was thought occasioned his loss of sight. After this he went first to Hadon Springs, and then to the Waukesha Springs, Wisconsin, in search of health. He returned to his home last fall, after frost, but little improved.

Some two or three weeks before his death he took the influenza or cold, which has been prevailing in this section of country since Christmas. This combined with his other diseases hastened his dissolution. He did not seem to suffer a great deal; he made no complaint. He bore his afflictions with great patience, and when the final moment came, life went

"As gently shut the eye of day,
As dies a wave along the shore."

I could scarcely tell when he ceased to live, so softly did death perform his work. But thus it was. The great battle of life was over, the victory won, and the redeemed and sanctified spirit had gone to realms above. The scene was touching; we cannot describe it. Our sorrow was deep; we loved him; all loved him; even the servants wept over his lifeless body. But thank God our sorrow was mingled with the consolations of Christ. He was a Christian. He was ready. He said the day before he died, he had no where else to go but to heaven, and we could all meet him there.

Farewell, my brother, till we all meet in heaven. G. HAWKINS.

"SHE hath done what she could" So said the Blessed Master of the precious woman who annointed Him to His burial. No better, no stronger thing could have been said of her. If she could have done anything more she would have done it. She had done what she could. It is a fitting memorial. It will wear away the ages. The church has had many such Mary's since that day. She has many such now. Some have been annointed by Jesus Himself to their own burying, to rise with Him to a brighter, purer life.

Such an one fell asleep in Jesus on the third day of the new year. Doubtless the Master had often borne such testimony to the sweet, pure life of MRS. E CROLA STOCKWELL. "She hath done what she could" was said of her by many when she went home to heaven.

"Cre" was a bright, sweet woman. She loved the Saviour. She knew the Saviour loved her. She loved the church. Those in the church who knew her loved her. It seemed that there was no sacrifice she was not willing to make in advance the cause of Christ. Often was she seen in her place in the sanctuary, face of settled calm, soul at ease, when it was almost painful to her friends, so weak and frail she looked. All she had, all she could save by a wise economy, was freely placed upon the altar of God. She was the Lord's. She lived, walked and talked with Him. And this without the least ostentation. No one's attention was ever violently arrested by her life of godliness. It was natural—life-like.

Sister Stockwell died young. Her life began February 26, 1851. She was the child of religious parents, F. G. and Mary Davis, of Chicot county, Ark. They brought her up at the feet of Jesus. Though religious all her life, yet she felt the need of a great work of grace in her heart. She was twenty years of age before she experienced a satisfactory change of heart. But when it came it was satisfactory to herself and to all who witnessed it. She was converted at Keener Camp Ground in 1871. Two years afterward, in full maturity of judgment and religious enjoyment, she became the wife of John J. Stockwell, a man in every way worthy of her.

Sister Stockwell was never strong physically. For several years she had been a great sufferer—patient, enduring, resigned. It was fondly hoped, and the persuasion of her physician, that when her baby girl came her health would be fully restored. Yet in giving life from which life was looked for, death was born. Only about two weeks did the quiet joy of motherhood reign in her life. She faded, died. In ten days God took the babe too. Mother and babe together in heaven.

Sister Stockwell's death was most triumphant. She had no fear. She talked of death as a pleasant thing. She gave charges to husband, friends, forgetting no one present, and sending messages to the absent. A very little while before the last moment she called for her bible, holding it firmly, turned to and read aloud the last chapter of Revelations, stopping to remark on special verses. When she could no longer speak, with face almost luminous, she would point upward. Thank God for such a dying testimony. D.

MRS. MARY M. CAGE was born in Sumner county, Tennessee, March 21, 1810, was married to Edward Cage December 27, 1831, moved to Yazoo county, Miss., in 1833, where she lived about two years, and then moved to Carroll county, near Black Hawk, in which community she lived until her death, which occurred at the residence of her son-in-law, W. W. Brewer, in Black Hawk, November 30, 1878.

Sister Cage lived to a good old age, and was all her life a devoted, pious, Christian, having united with the Methodist Church early in life. She remained a consistent member until she was called to her reward on high. In the latter part of her life she was a subject of great affliction, and was therefore deprived of sanctuary privileges—a privilege she prized above all others. But in all her afflictions her faith was strong, and sustained her in the Christian way she ever walked. Christian as one can bear. It was my privilege to be her pastor for several years, and visited her in her afflictions, and found her ever ready to depart and be with Christ.

While her sufferings at times were very great, grace sustained her amid them all, and so great was her blessing that she was enabled to proclaim the praises of God aloud. Death to her was a welcome messenger, for it opened the gate to endless joy, and when she entered in she left fond hearts yearning after her, which one only he comforted by the precious promises of our Saviour when he said: "Let not your hearts be troubled. "I go to prepare a place for you." So if we follow her as she followed Christ, and die as she died, our hearts will know no sadness when we meet her in the sweet by and by, the same good mother, and kind friend, only immortalized; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. LEAD THEM HOME.

Lord, we can trust Thee for our holy dead;
They, underneath the shadow of Thy tomb,
Have entered into peace; with bended head
We thank Thee for their rest, and for our light-eyed gloom.

But, Lord, our living - who, on stormy seas
Of sin and sorrow, still are tempest-tossed;
Our dead have reached their haven, but for these—
Teach us to trust Thee, Lord, for these, our loved and lost!

For these we make our passion-prayer by night;
For these we cry to Thee through the long day.
We see them not, O keep them in Thy sight;
From them and us be Thou not very far away.

And if not home to us, yet lead them home
To where Thou standest at the heavenly gate;
That so, from Thee they shall not farther roam;
And grant us patient hearts Thy gathering time to wait.

1785—1879.

DR. PIERCE'S NINETY-FIFTH BIRTHDAY.

Dr. Pierce was born in Halifax county, North Carolina, March 24, 1785. On last Monday, March 24, he was ninety-four years old, and his ninety-fifth birthday (following the doctor's method of reckoning, and is it not correct?) was celebrated at the home of his son, Bishop Pierce, in Sparta, Ga. During many years the celebration of the great old man's birthday by his descendants has grown into a beautiful custom; we might say religious custom, for the spirit of the gospel is in it all. It was a privilege and a blessing to be a guest last Monday.

We do not often see father, son, grandson, great-grandson, great-great-grandson, in one room on the same day—five generations together. This happiness was granted to our venerated friend. The doctor had been sick so long that he had little hope of celebrating his ninety-fifth birthday with his children. But on Sunday, March 23, he was so bright that a conditional appointment was made for him at the church, on Monday, at eleven A. M. There were several of his descendants to baptize, and he greatly desired to administer the ordinance in the church in the presence of the congregation. He has little "patience with private infant baptisms, as if people were ashamed of them." Moreover, he wished to give his matured views on some important points connected with the baptism of children. On Monday morning it was thought he might be safely carried to the church, and the bell was rung. The church was soon full, for the people of Sparta love and honor the "Old Doctor," and they wanted to hear his message to them. But the task was too heavy. He made a brave effort, but got only as far as the hall door. Reluctantly he gave it up, and returned to his room.

Presently the house was pretty well filled up with grandchildren, of one degree and another, their parents and relatives. The Bishop was represented by four of his five children (one being at a distance,) twenty-seven grandchildren and one great-grandchild. The doctor was carried into the parlor on a rolling-chair, and all assembled about him and near him in the adjacent room and hall. That scene—beautiful and hallowed—will live in delightful memory. We shall always see the venerable and saintly man, and the older and younger of his children as they looked upon him. The subdued, tender, joyful, worshipful emotions of that hour will long be remembered. Some felt as did the Elders of Ephesus when they parted with Paul on the seashore. The doctor sat in his chair and prefaced the administration of the ordinance by a ten minutes' talk of singular clearness and beauty. He showed how Jesus, the author of the Abrahamic covenant, recognized and guaranteed the rights of children in the new covenant. Jesus "did not take the infants into His arms as a mere cipher; the act was official and ministerial." This, he thinks, explains the striking fact that only once our Lord is mentioned as taking the children into His arms and blessing them. Sitting in his chair, Dr. Pierce baptized eight children—five great grandchildren, one great-great-grandchild and two others, one a child of the pastor of the Sparta Church, Rev. W. A. Dodge, one of Rev. G. H. Pattillo, of the Hancock circuit.

After this beautiful and sacred service the kindred and friends sat down to a dinner—worthy the occasion. It was a great disappointment that "grandfather" could not go down to dinner.

In December, 1859 in the house of John Lucas, in Sparta, Bishop Asbury ordained Lovick Pierce deacon, at the end of his second year in the Itinerant ministry. In the old "Lucas" house was born, some months ago, Dr. Pierce's first great-great-grandchild. In Dr. Pierce last Monday the Past, Present and Future seemed to meet.

Not a few will be better men and women for having shared in the celebration of his ninety-fifth birthday.

Dr. Pierce, for several years past, has written a fatherly "Birthday Salutation" to the church. Some days before the last occasion he wrote the introduction to his Salutation for this time, intending to finish it on the day. But he could not. When we bade him good-bye, on Tuesday morning, he gave us the unfinished address, thinking he could not complete it.

We cannot tell, but the end, it seems, cannot be far off. Need we say to is ready and has "peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ"?

Below we give the precious "fragment" of his letter. Those who know the writer will read many unwritten and gracious thoughts between the lines. It is unaligned, for he hoped to finish it. We copy it for the printer, keeping the original among our treasures of cherished things.

Dr. Pierce writes to the church the following greeting:

MY NINETY FIFTH BIRTHDAY.

"Truly the light is sweet and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun; but if a man live many years, and rejoice in them all, yet let him remember the days of darkness, for they shall be many."

Life, as a whole, is like light—it is emphatically sweet. But there is always some discount—sometimes pretty large. Yet the world, as a home for probationers, is "very good." And it has fitted me so well that I have never been packing up and hurrying away because the old, flue boat of Saints—on the river of death, all the time coming and going—leaves on its embarking wharf no one uncalled for.

Well, I am willing. All I am careful about is when my time comes to be both ready and willing.

During December, January and February I lay and looked into death's large encampment; looked for the undertakers to come and put an end to this family memorial. But here I am; I know not for what final end. But I do know there is an end with God to be attained by keeping me here at this time. At this time I have nothing in view, except, if it be His will, that I may, in some sort, as an actual relict of early Methodism, bridge the chasm between the Past and the Present. God has made me, as fond friends have expressed it, "the Nestor" among them. To show more fully to our people the power and excellence of unadulterated Methodism, I wish to write my own biography. Whether I shall be spared to do this God knoweth.

But before I leave this world I desire to testify, as to myself, in its favor. It is a good world. As a world, God did His best on it and in it. The Spirit never asked the question: "Who will show us any good?" He could not, and inquire in the next breath: "What shall we render unto God for all His benefits toward us?" As to what we ought to do in return, the Spirit tells us at once: "Let us take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord." In a word, it is to be an open, devout profession of religion. In this connection it is the grand, the glorious moral phenomenon, universally felt to be true, that the light of God's countenance, lifted up upon us, is the soul's panacea.

Here the weary fingers laid down the pen—that never wrote a line except in God's fear and for man's good. The "light of God's countenance" is "lifted up" on him, and he finds what he has so long commended to others—that in God's blessing is our only satisfaction and only salvation.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

Anecdotes of Doctors.

"Doctors bills" are the hardest to collect. It is sometimes said that they charge poor patients too highly, but the fact is there is no class which acts more generously in remitting fees.

Many doctors are noted for their liberality in giving free advice and medicines to the poorer classes, and sometimes to the rich. During the illness of the late Emperor Napoleon III, Sir Henry Thompson, a popular physician of London, attended him once a day for nearly a fortnight, going twenty-five miles to Chiselhurst to visit him. Napoleon died and the Empress Eugenie handed Sir Henry Thompson a fee of $10,500, which was a liberal acknowledgment. He returned one-half the money in a kind and delicate manner. In another instance, when Thompson was spending his vacation in the Highlands of Scotland, now and then taking a raid on the grouse and partridges, a wealthy friend of his met with a frightful accident, and the family sent for Sir Henry, who, without doubt, sighed over the fact of having his rest-time thus invaded. The case was so dangerous that Sir Henry was compelled to remain in attendance on the sufferer for nine days. At the end he pulled his patient through, and on taking leave a check for a thousand guineas was placed in his hand with warm expressions of gratitude for service rendered. It was firmly declined on the plea that attendance was given to a friend, and during holiday. Dr. Hope, of London, when he prescribed direct to the poor always gave them the dollar. Dr. Baillo prescribed that a young lady spend the winter in a mild climate, and, as she was unable to afford it, presented her with an adequate sum to defray her expenses. It was a matter of regret to him if he ever spoke roughly to a poor man.

The eminent Dr. Willis, of the last century, had a patient evidently in reduced circumstances, who, poor as he was made shift always to leave neatly rolled up in paper the fee of one guinea, the usual honorarium for a single visit at that time, and which, the sick man being as proud as he was poor, the doctor could not make any excuse for not accepting. He saw, however, that the patient did not take the wine which, when convalescence had begun, was ordered to sustain and invigorate the system, as the man could not afford to buy it. One day the doctor said: "If you will promise me to take some of my own pills, in which I have great faith, I shall leave them for you, and I pass to-morrow, for you are well enough to dispense with my services." The promise was given, and the next day the doctor left his box of pills. On opening it the patient found all the guineas he had paid as medical fees, with a little note insisting that he must receive them back. There was also a bank check for a further sum. This sick man's son, feeling that poverty was now his chief complaint, persuaded him to accept the money as a loan, and in a short time, fortune having changed, the man was able and glad to pay back what he had received from his medical benefactor. Most every one has heard of John Abernethy, the English surgeon. He had a very fidgetty organization, but, under his rough manners, he veiled one of the kindest hearts. The story of his marriage is a good one. He wrote off hand to a lady a note of proposal, saying that he was too busy to attend in person, and he would give her a fortnight for consideration. On one occasion, when George IV sent for Abernethy, the messenger found him about starting for Bartholomew's Hospital, where he had to lecture to a number of students. "Tell the king," said Abernethy, "that I cannot go to him until after my lecture to my pupils, whom I am bound not to disappoint. After that I am at his service." The king, much offended, sent for another doctor. In occasional encounters Abernethy's patients had decidedly the best of it. One gentleman went to consult him about a pain in the shoulders. Abernethy very brusquely said: "Well, I know nothing at all about it." "I don't know how you should," was the retort, "but if you will have patience till I tell you perhaps then you may." Abernethy at once said: "Sit down," and treated him with the greatest kindness. One day a lady, who went to consult him, found him very uncourteous. "I had often heard of your rudeness before I came, sir, but did not expect this." When Abernethy gave a prescription, she said: "What shall I do with this?" "Anything you like, put it in the fire if you please." The lady took him at his word, laid his fee on the table, threw the prescription into the fire, and hastily left the room. Abernethy followed her to the hall, pressing her to take back the fee or let him give her another prescription, but the lady was inexorable, and left the house. Abernethy absolutely disapproved of vivisection. He considered that such experiments were morally wrong, and also physiologically unsafe.

The famous Dr Radcliffe was brusque with most every one. He told an old woman, who had obtained admission on false pretences, that he neither knew what was good for old women or what an old woman was good for." Radcliffe had a rough humor that approached wit. He once told a pavier, who had dunned him for a small bill, that he "had done his work badly, and had covered it with earth to conceal it." The man answered significantly: "Mine is not the only bad work which the earth conceals." Struck with the retort, the doctor paid the man, adding a guinea to the amount, observing that he was a wit, and must therefore be poor. For going to the continent to see and prescribe for the Earl of Albemarle Radcliffe received $1,000 and the offer of a baronetage, and his patient gave him $2,000, a diamond ring, and a sum to pay his traveling expenses. Sir Henry Thompson, for having successfully operated on Leopold the king of the Belgians, for a disease of the prostrate gland, received the enormous fee of $50,000, with the knightly order of Leopold. Sir Astley Cooper's annual income only amounted to $500 in the fifth year of his practice. But when appointed Professor of Comparative Anatomy in the College of Surgeons, in 1813, it had risen to the large sum of $105,000. It is said that Sir Astley lectured as usual on the day he was married.—Times.

Religious Intelligence.

—The United States sends 460 missionaries to foreign lands, Germany more than 500, and Great Britain 1,000.

—The Presbyterian Churches among the Freedmen have received 604 new members in the past six months.

—The London Watchman of January 1 announces the death of Rev. John Randerson, December 29. The deceased entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1832.

—In September the next General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance is to be held at Basle, Switzerland. A programme of proceedings is being prepared.

—Missionary work in Africa is attended with serious peril. Mr. Penrose, of the Church Missionary Society, (English,) has been killed in the Unyamwezi country with all his camp followers, and Mr. Thompson, of the London Missionary Society, is reported dead at Ujiji, of sunstroke.

—The Archbishop of Paris, in reply to Father Hyacinthe's invitation to be present at the dedicatory services of his chapel, reminds the priest that he has ceased to be a Catholic and none can honor his mission. Only the curious will attend the chapel. The Lord will make no mountain.

—A Kentucky correspondent says that the Morphy movement in Kentucky has accomplished great good. It is now more than a year since it was inaugurated, and although some have returned to the world, enough continue steadfast to establish the fact that it was a good work.

—At the late district meeting of the Mysore (Wesleyan Mission) district for India, thirteen candidates offered themselves as students, and nine were accepted. An increase of five members and 240 scholars was reported. Three orphanages have been opened in connection with the mission, which contain together 300 boys.

—A considerable body of members of the Church of England at Sidcup, Kent, left the parish, on account of differences with the rector, and formed a new church. On being refused consecration for their new Iron building by the Archbishop of Canterbury, they have promptly voted themselves into the Reformed Episcopal Church, under the jurisdiction of Bishop Gregg.

—The New York Methodist Book Concern has a net capital of $1,009,412. The sales for 1878 were $819,423; the profits, $35,220. The net capital of the Western Book Concern, at Cincinnati, is $446,331. The sales for the year were $725,761; the profits, $46,896. The combined capital of the two houses is $1,455,743. The total of sales last year was $1,836,184; of profits, $82,116.

—Instead of putting gifts upon their Christmas tree, for each other, the Seventh Day Adventists, of Battle Creek, Mich., hung presents of money "for the Lord," and realized over $722.

—The Presbyterian Mission in Mexico has organized three churches—at Metamoras, Santa Rosalia and Brownsville. Messrs. Carrero, Leandro and Mr. Chamberlain, a son of a well-known home-missionary in Texas, are studying theology under Mr. Graybill, and will soon be ordained.

—The work of the missionaries in Spain is becoming more and more difficult, and the civil authorities are growing more and more oppressive. Recently a party of processionists in Cermans, at the instigation of the town clerk, attacked the Protestant chapel with knives and stones, and the minister's wife only saved her life by hiding under the benches.

—Robert Arthington of Leeds, England, who has made the various missionary associations in this country and England such liberal donations to establish a line of mission stations across Central Africa, now offers $10,000 additional to provide a steamer for the upper waters of the Livingston river to transport missionaries and supplies to the missionary stations.

When Cardinal McCloskey returned from Rome, he called to him the editor of The Freeman's Journal and delicately rebuked him for being more papal than the Pope. The Bishop of Alton has now interdicted the reading of that hyper-Catholic journal by the clergy of his diocese. That is certainly hard on James A. McMaster, who has served the church with all the superfluous zeal of a convert.

—An Indiana Baptist notes that his State has 194 towns with 300 to 6,000 people, but no church of his kind. He traveled ninety miles on one railroad without passing a Baptist Church. Still there is hope of a baptism for that State, as its Baptist College at Franklin has 120 students, and a property worth $85,000 free from debt. Also many of the Baptist Churches in the State have had bright revivals that turn the Winter of their discontent into glorious Summer.

—There is a movement in the Church of England for the admission of a class of ministers like the local preachers in the Methodist Church. A memorial to Archbishop Tait asks for the acceptance of a measure "for ordaining and licensing fit persons as deacons without requiring them to give up ordinary callings." The memorialists believe the proposal, if carried into effect, would "supply to a large extent the admitted dearth of the clergy."

—By the aid of the active messengers of Christ in Japan there are teachers of materialism in the Imperial College, coming from Christian lands, yet assaulting Christianity. A call recently came from Kioto for the volumes of Rev. Joseph Cook's lectures, as being well adapted to meet the skepticism which was showing itself in certain quarters. On hearing of the call Mr. Cook generously forwarded twenty copies of his published volumes to Rev. Mr. Davis.—Missionary Herald.

—The Congregational Club of Cleveland, O., meets monthly in the parlors of Plymouth Church, and includes ministers and laymen from the city and towns within a radius of forty miles. After social conversation, supper is served, and then informal discussion fills the evening. The membership is forty or fifty. At the last meeting addresses were presented on "The Strength and Weakness of the Church a Century Ago?" and "The Strength and Weakness of the Church to day."

—The scene of the Zulu war, South Africa, is near the Zagela River, the northern boundary of the British colony of Natal, and north of the stations occupied by the Zulu mission of the American Board. It is the impression of the missionaries, as gathered from late letters, that God is about to break up the arbitrary rule of the king of that region, and make, as He often has in the past, way to be a plowshare to open the earth for the reception of the good seed of the Word.

—The Presbyterian mission in Central and Southern Mexico, after less than seven years of labor, can report the organization of twenty-two churches, with an aggregate membership of more than three thousand. Thirty native Christians, eleven of them ordained, are constantly engaged in preaching and teaching in more than sixty different cities and towns. At the present time a special religious awakening is manifest, so that many are saying, "This is Pentecost for Mexico."

The Presbyterian Church in California has four evening Chinese Sunday-schools, with a total average attendance of 212, a day-school in San Francisco, and twenty religious services held each week. Two Chinese churches have been organized, one in San Francisco and the other in Oakland, the former having forty members and the latter twenty-one. In the Sacramento mission twenty-one have been received to the church, and in San Jose seven. The Ladies' Foreign Missionary Society sustains a Home for Chinese women, with eleven inmates. The Methodist Mission has five evening and day-schools, with an average attendance of 119; five Sunday-schools, with an average of 246; four preaching places and 78 Chinese members. The United Presbyterian Church has a mission school with forty pupils. The Congregational Mission sustains eleven schools, with 1,492 pupils enrolled during the year. Ninety three have ceased from idol worship, and seventy-five give evidence of conversion. There is an average attendance of 250 in the Sunday-schools.

Our Young People.

A SONG OF EASTER.

Sing, children, sing!
And the lily censers swing;
Sing that life and joy are waking, and that Death no more is king.
Sing the happy, happy turmoil of the slowly brightening Spring;
Sing, little children, sing!

Sing, children, sing!
Winter wild has taken wing.
Fill the air with the sweet tidings till the frosty echoes ring!
Along the eaves the icicles no longer glittering cling;
And the crocus in the garden lifts its bright face to the sun,
And in the meadows softly the brooks begin to run;
And the golden catkins swing
In the warm airs of the Spring;
Sing, little children, sing!

Sing, children, sing!
The lilies white you bring
To the joyous Easter morning, for hope are blossoming;
And as the earth her shroud of snow from off her breast doth fling,
So may we cast our fetters off in God's eternal Spring.
So may we find release at last from sorrow and from pain,
So may we find our childhood's calm, delicious days again.
Sweet are your eyes, O little ones, that look with smiling grace,
Without a shade of doubt or fear into the Future's face;
Sing, sing in happy chorus, with joyful voices loud
That death is life, and God is good, and all things shall be well;
That bitter days shall cease,
In warmth and light and peace,
That Winter yields to Spring.
Sing, little children, sing!

—Celia Thaxter, in St. Nicholas.

Heart's-Ease.

A pretty little village, nestled among the great mountains that surrounded it on all sides, as if they would fain shelter it from all outside cares and troubles, and very peaceful indeed it looked, with the sunset glow of a summer evening flinging its radiance over vale and hill, and embracing the whiteness of the pretty little cottages that mainly composed the village. Old and young seemed alike to be enjoying the beauty of the evening, as they gathered in groups or rested quietly at their cottage doors. With one of the latter I paused to speak a few words in admiration of the flowers gathered which, I well knew, was the pride and delight of the old man's heart. "Did you ever see finer pansies than these, ma'am?" he said, exultingly, as he gathered a few and gave them to me. Certainly I never did, for their rich dark beauty was only equalled by their perfect formation and the soft cream like shading petals.

"Pansies for thoughts," I said, "they suggest very peaceful ones, I think."

"Don't you like the old English name for 'em best, ma'am? Heart's-ease. 'Pears to me like it fits 'em better. They allars seems to thrive so contentedly in any out-of-the-way corner you puts 'em in, so lowly too, for all their being so much richer looking than many of their taller neighbors.

Quaint as the old man was, I was struck by the force and truth of his remarks.

The melody of a happy, trustful voice came floating out to us from an open window, and he added, "There's our village Heart's-ease singing now."

"What do you mean?" I asked.

"Only a neighbor of mine, ma'am, a young woman who has seen a deal of trouble, poor thing, but she is so happy and peaceful that the poor round about here always call her 'our Heart's-ease,' and go to her whenever they are in trouble. They think it fits her just as it does the pansies."

A few days after, I determined to make the acquaintance of "our Heart's ease," and made my way to the white cottage. Within it covered porch I found Alice Fern, sitting, busily sewing on a little child's dress. As I looked upon the serene and peaceful face, I did not wonder at the name the villagers had given it. After a little, I learned that she was a young widow, having lost her husband, a sailor, two years ago, just when she was expecting him home. Since that time she had been dependent on her own exertions for supporting herself, mother and her little child. A baby had died a year ago.

"How much you have had to worry you!" I said.

"The blessings always came more thickly than the trouble," she answered softly.

"You have found the silver lining to the cloud, then, I expect."

"That is it, ma'am. I have been a slow learner, but God has at length taught me to trust Him in the dark as well as in the light when I can not see the way as much as when I can."

"And you have found Him faithful that promised?" I asked. She looked up from her work as if surprised that I should ask such a question.

"I have found Him able to do exceeding abundantly above all that I can ask or think, for His faithfulness reaches into the clouds. No words of mine can tell what He has done for me," she answered simply.

"I do not wonder now at your neighbors give you the name of Heart's-ease," I said smiling.

"They seem to wonder why I am not worried and tired and anxious as so many of them are. Poor things, I wish they would try my way."

"And what is your way?" I asked.

"Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you when that is done; what is there left to worry about?"

"But people are not willing to do that," I said.

"I know it," she answered, "and I was not once, but I have learnt the better way now, and it is such comfort that I want to get every one else to try it."

It does seem plain that people should be so willing to keep their burdens and their worries, when they might be so easily rid of them all," I remarked.

"That is what I tell them, ma'am. If they could only once realize the comfort there is in leaving everything with Him who knoweth what things we have need of before we ask Him even, they would no longer wonder at the Heart's-ease it brings to one."

No, indeed, for the Lord is a strong-hold in the day of trouble, and He knoweth them that trust in Him, and underneath are the everlasting arms," and with these words I bid her farewell, feeling she was indeed one who through deep waters had come into a fuller possession than many of the "peace that passeth all understanding," the only sure foundation for the tranquillity and restfulness of mind, which was so truly Heart's-ease, and having nothing to trouble her, because she had cast it all upon Him; the result was:

A heart at leisure from itself
To soothe and sympathize.

Boys Carrying Pistols.

A pistol is a very peculiar fire-arm; it is made for a very peculiar purpose. It is quite natural for some boys, to want rifles or shot-guns, with which they may kill game; but a pistol is intended to kill human beings, and this is about all it is good for. There are very few boys in this country who could shoot a bird or a rabbit with a pistol, and any one who should go out hunting with a pistol would be laughed at. This being the case, why should a boy want a pistol? What human beings would he like to kill?

It is useless to say that he may need his pistol for purposes of defense. Not one boy in a thousand is ever placed in such a position that he need defend himself with a pistol. But it often has happened that boys who carried loaded pistols thought that it would be a manly thing, under certain circumstances, to use them, and yet, when the time came and they killed somebody, they only brought down misery on themselves and their families. And this, too, in many a case where, if no one present had had a pistol the affair would have passed off harmlessly and been soon forgotten.

But the way in which boys generally take human life with pistols is some accidental way. They do not kill highwaymen and robbers, but they kill their school-mates, or their brothers, or their sisters, or, in many cases, themselves. There is no school where boys are taught to properly handle and carry loaded pistols, so they usually have to learn these things by long practice. And, while they are learning, it is very likely that some one will be shot. I saw in a newspaper, not long ago, accounts of three fatal accidents, all of which happened on the same day, from careless use of fire-arms. And one of these dreadful mishaps was occasioned by a lad who carried a loaded pistol in his overcoat pocket, and who carelessly threw down the coat.

And then, again, a boy ought to be ashamed to carry a pistol, especially a loaded one. The possession of such a thing is a proof that he expects to go among vicious people. If he goes into good society, and has honest, manly fellows for his companions, he will not need a pistol. A loaded pistol in a boy's pocket is not only useless and dangerous, but also it almost always stamps him as a bad boy, or one who wishes to associate with bad boys and vicious men.—St. Nicholas.

"Go Because it Rains."

"I suppose you won't go to the Sabbath school to day, Lucy?" said a mother one stormy Sabbath morning, setting herself to read.

"Please let me go to day, mamma, I want to go because it rains."

"Why, Lucy, that is my excuse for staying at home. How can you make it a reason for going?"

"Our teacher always goes, mamma, in all weather, although she lives so far away. She told the class that one Sabbath, when she went through the storm, and did not find even one scholar, she was so discouraged that she could not help crying. She asked us, too, if we did not go to our day-school in the rainy weather; and she said, while we must obey our parents, if we felt them pleasantly to do it, we would likely be willing. Mamma, will you please let me go to-day?"

"Well, I am willing, my dear, if you want to go to Sunday-school so much. Go and get ready."

But a mother's heart took my interest in her book, and sent to her footstool a lowly one, who came in from the nursery. "Lucy is going to Sunday-school to-day, because it rains," said the mother, "and I fear her teacher may be discouraged if the presence of at least one scholar be not there. I will go to church for the same reason, if you will go with me."

Asked, I never could plead a cause to an empty court-room, and the minister must find it hard work "preach to empty pews."—English paper.

Things you should pray for—Mercy for the day of judgment.
Judging before judging.
For thinking before speaking.
For holding an angry tongue.
For stopping the ear to a tattler.
For being kind to the destitute.
For being patient to all.
For asking pardon for wrongs.
For speaking evil of no one.
For being courteous to all.
For being as a peace-maker.
And last, but not least
For giving your heart to God, and a life of self-denial and thorough consecration to God.

"There are some preachers who encourage to deliver a sermon and have our Christ's name altogether. Surely the true believer will stand, like Mary Magdalene, over the sermon, and say: "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him."—Spurgeon.

Providence.

By "special personal providence" we suppose our correspondent means such special divine guidance and control as relates to the welfare of every man, and especially to the welfare of Christian men. It is impossible to read the inspired writings without the conviction that they teach that God has directly to do with the phenomena of nature, and with the fortunes of individual men. Whether this is the teaching of God, or the conceit of erring men, depends upon our views of the Scriptures. We believe that these Scriptures are the word of God; that for substance, at least, they are the authoritative declarations of the Author of all things.

The laws of nature are the uniform methods in which God works, and in which he governs, sustains and carries on the material affairs of the universe. The divine impact and force are immediate in all the developments, in all the processes, and in all the changes in matter. In growth and decay, in life and death, in chemical changes, in the revolution of the heavenly bodies, and in the adjustment of molecules and atoms, God is immediately present, and is the living agent and will that upholds and moves. That God should act uniformly or in accordance with certain laws is most beneficent, and necessary to the well-being of his creatures. Wisdom and goodness are as conspicuous in the laws of nature as in the moral law. They are alike holy, just and good.

Another element in the problem is the freedom of the human agent. This must be conceded if we take the Bible for our guide. Man is accountable, and therefore free. God deals with us as free. We are conscious of this freedom, and that we are justly responsible for our conduct. God has endowed us with reason, with spiritual capabilities, with conscience, and leaves us to choose freely. In the domain of morals there are laws ordained for our good, but obedience is not compulsory. We may throw off the divine restraint, and we cannot be coerced into love and obedience. If we disobey the moral law we must take the consequences. It cannot be changed, and the offender can be saved only by recourse to the appointed method. To get on happily in the world in health and business we must act in accord with the laws of nature, and to be now and forever blessed we must be in harmony with the moral law. We can rebell against both, and suffer.

But suppose a man uses his reason, is industrious, enterprising and provident, and at the same time walks humbly with God. For him there are many precious promises that assure the divine guidance. He does the best he can, both as to the means of temporal success, and as to the performance of his religious duties. Such a man is on promised ground. God is under pledge to order his steps, to be a sun and shield unto him, and to withhold no good thing from him. To a special and peculiar sense the hairs of his head are all numbered. God will guide him with his counsel, and afterward receive him to glory. There is in such a life the element of prayer, complete harmony with God as manifested in nature and in revelation and grace, and for him there can be nothing but good. Whatever happens to him must be interpreted as to him, as in accordance with the Divine Providence. It may be fire or death, sickness or health, poverty or riches, pain or ease, but it is of God, and for good.

The question in any case is not whether God directly interposes in the material world, for he is always present, and is the power that moves, changes and upholds all. But does he ever vary from the uniform methods, or from the laws he seems to have imposed upon himself? Do the special blessings that rest upon the good man come from his conformity to the laws of God, or from such providential movements as constitute a deviation from the usual course? Largely from the former, no doubt, and sometimes from the latter, if such interposition be necessary. It is no more incredible than that we live and move and have our being in God, and that he upholds all things by the word of his power. Natural effects depend upon causes so distant and complex that we cannot trace them, and, besides, God may act with uniformity, and yet he may do this or that. He may exercise a high and far-seeing control, the springs of which are so distant as to defy our scrutiny. The believer who yields himself to the divine guidance, asks it, and uses the sense and grace given, may surely be led by the unseen Hand, and he has the warrant of the promise that all things work together for his good.

Besides the supposition, however, of a direct intervention in the outer world, there is this profounder conception. Love secures the good that is in all things. Waiving, for the moment, the teachings of Scripture in regard to providential interventions, love commands good everywhere and in everything. The misfortunes that drive others to despair, and that lead to misery, are sanctified to the loving heart. If precisely the same things were to happen to all, and there were no discriminating dispensations based upon character, still all things would work together for good to them that love God. Men may live under the same sky, rejoice in the same sunshine, or battle with the same storms, and the unbelievers will be miserable, and the lovers of God blessed. Two men may be shipwrecked together, and their sufferings and losses may be the same, but while with one there is bitterness and hardness of heart, with the other there is the working together of good. Nothing in this world, no calamities, no afflictions, can hurt love. Love extracts good from all things, especially from all afflictive things. Love is the alchemist that converts the very dross of life into gold. It is the supreme and royal grace whose scepter compels homage and tribute from all things, and that all things conspire to crown with good. The promises are true upon the lower plane of Providence as involving special divine interposition, but they are surpassingly glorious as indicating the power and beatitudes of love.

Stealing Their Own.

Bishop Haven, writing to the New York Christian Advocate, concerning the German work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Texas, says:

"The Methodist German element seems rapidly returning to its old home. Objections have been publicly made to our presence as being little less than stealing. But as all the German Methodist work, whether South or North, come originally from Dr. Nast and our own Church, it cannot be a very great sin for us to steal our own.

"The animus and principle governing the agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church in their work in the South are very candidly expressed in this confession of a Northern Bishop. These are the grounds on which they vindicated their course in getting hold of our colored churches, and in seizing and holding our white churches until compelled to give them up.

"The German work in the South, up to the close of the war, was organized and sustained by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It no more belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church than does the American work. To attempt to vindicate their efforts to disintegrate and absorb our German churches by claiming ownership is one of the most shameless pieces of effrontery that has ever been witnessed in ecclesiastical affairs. Bishop Haven is incapable of blushing, but some of his brethren may possibly blush for him. His words do not represent the whole church to which he belongs, but they do represent a part of it. The avowed purpose of that part is to claim all and get what they can. They steal on principle. They intrigue, proselyte, and sow dissensions, and expend missionary money, in order to damage and break down our churches, unable to carry on the spoil.

"Much as we regret the existence of such a spirit on the part of those who claim to be Christians, we are not sorry that their principles and purposes are thus avowed and published. It is not to us a revelation. It is only a confession and acknowledgment of what we in the South have known all the time. 'It cannot be a very great sin for us to steal our own.' That is the whole matter in a nut shell. It is a manifestation of conscience and of religion that would do credit to the worst developments of the followers of Loyola. There is scarcely any form of stealing that fanaticism might not justify on a similar pretext.

"With this avowal of a Northern Methodist Bishop, it is not difficult to fix the responsibility of those antagonisms that occur where the two Methodisms touch each other. The mission of the Northern Church is declared to be one of strife—an invasion for the purpose of absorbing and destroying. We can conceive of nothing further removed than this from the Spirit of Christ, or more in contrast with the principles of the Christian religion. The only mitigating feature in the course of Bishop Haven is that he avows the real object in view, and gives such reason as he has for the faith that is in him. He is a wolf, but he is not a wolf in sheep's clothing.

Letter from Bishop McTyeire.

MR. EDITOR: In the obituary department of the ADVOCATE I have felt a sad interest of late. "Friend after friend departs." The sketch of that wise and meek man, the Elder Pilley, as given by Rev. A. C. Ramsey, who was instrumentally so closely connected with his conversion and induction into the ministry, was very edifying. Sometimes one is tempted to think the art of writing lives has been lost since Plutarch; but ever and anon a genuine specimen refreshes current Christian annals—simple and to the point—not dealing in generalities, but giving the particular facts; nor these tediously; only such as are characteristic.

I remember the sketch of the patriarch Hearn, by Rev. A. West; and now who will do the same for Theophilus Moody and P. H. Napier? They were both men of mark; the latter by force of mind as well as heart—he had a head becoming a senator. The former, by long continuance in well-doing, delivered upon the church and society a more than ordinary force for good. He always seemed to be about the same age, and I saw him first at the session of the Alabama Conference, in 1847, and last not long ago. The tabernacle looked, any time, like it was ready to fall down; and yet he has outlived nearly all of that generation. In what part of Alabama and eastern Mississippi do you not cross Bro. Moody's path and see his tracks?

We owe to these men more than we know. They labored, and we have entered into their labors. To subdue the rude elements of society to the gospel; to gather and form them into primary organizations, to lay the foundations in the wilderness, was a work that required faith and wisdom and strength and sacrifice. The log meeting-house was often a higher achievement than the elegant frame or brick church—its successor. It is our reproach that, with a line of things made ready to our hands, improvement waits so long upon us. The men who could bear their part in the first era, and hold their own in the next, show a breadth of character as well as of years that entitled them to our reverential respect. Measured every way, they are broader than common men. These convictions, or feelings if you please, have grown upon me, so that I am more and more out of sympathy with the habit of the Conferences in pushing old preachers aside—the men who have borne the burden and heat of the day. For lessened physical activity there is compensation in their mellowed experience and matured wisdom. I am not sure that the cry for young pastors, in order to gain and hold the young people to the congregations, is not mistakenly emphasized. There are other interests to be guarded as well as that, great as it is; and even for that the charms and sympathies of reverenced years, judicious, tender and impressive in counsel, are not to be overlooked.

Excuse the digression. May be some of your readers suspect me of approaching the "sere and yellow leaf." You know better. Three or four years ago I was called as witness in a will case. The testator, a former neighbor, died at sixty, and some of his children contested the will. A point was made on the physical infirmities of their father, in connection with his advanced life that there was a letting down, etc. Lawyer to witness:

What do you think of sixty years; is not that an old man? Answer: Once I thought a man of sixty years an old man, but since I have got within seven or eight years of it I have changed my mind."

The laugh—the kind of laugh—that overspread court and jury reminded me that I had unconsciously hit a very general though occult sentiment.

Our Bro. Napier came to us (or we to him) from the Methodist Protestant Church. He was a leader, by right of nature and grace, among his former brethren, and would have been so with us, in his prime. I met him first in their convention at Montgomery, Ala., in 1867 a convention called to see if a union could not be effected between the two churches, since we had adopted lay delegation, at our General Conference, the year before. The convention failed of the object, though I was, and still am, of the opinion that it would have favored union if a square vote had been taken. Napier and his colleagues, Houston, of Mississippi, McGhee, of Virginia, Coxe and Graves, of Alabama, and others, made the point that since the original and material ground for which they stood, and on which they stood, had been conceded, and was locked up in the constitution of the mother church; they had nothing to stand for, or to stand on, as a separate ecclesiastical organization. What failed as a movement en masse has since largely taken place, in the Southern States, by individual and congregational election. These brethren, with hundreds of their people, are with us, and Methodism has been the happier and stronger for it. Some of our best editors and presiding elders have been furnished from their ranks. Never was union more complete and harmonious. The success of it is largely due to the influence and example of Bro. Napier and such men. As one of the commissioners of our church to the convention, let me here record my sense of the high Christian character and courtesy of the members of that body with whom we found it impracticable to bring about organic union. With good will and brotherly love we separated, going different paths in the same direction. Two years ago the Mississippi Conference did a handsome thing. Bro. Napier, after useful years of toil in their ranks, located—sensitive, perhaps, about being burdensome at his time of life. Misfortunes overtook him, and poverty was attended with disease. The brethren voted him back into the Conference, that he might draw, for his support, from its funds so long as he lived. It was not at his request; and the delicate but strong claims of his case went far to condone for what is considered a close trenching on the law.

Of Bro. Pilley I once heard a preacher say he was the best presiding elder he had known; in this his young men always came up to Conference examinations ready with their studies. He stirred up their pure minds, by way of remembrance, the year through. In his rounds he inquired: "How far have you got? Which book?" He would help them over difficulties, "quizz them," as the doctors call it, quicken the laggard, and assist the unlucky ones who had entered at disadvantage. This was carrying out that clause of the Discipline under the duties of presiding elders: "To direct the candidates for the ministry to those studies recommended for them by the Bishops."

This week I leave for St. Louis; then to three District Conferences in Mississippi. May will be occupied in Tennessee, June and July in Kentucky and Georgia. This will excuse me to brethren in Louisiana, who have requested attendance. My slate is full; but I keep up with joy with the progress of revivals, Sunday-schools, church building and parsonage building among them, as reported through the ADVOCATE, and by personal correspondence.

Yesterday I saw the first strawberry blossom. The buckeye and wild cherry are bursting buds, and the white maple, hard after them, will soon be in tender leaf. You are far ahead of this; and this will seem quite forward to some of our friends in latitudes above us.

H. N. McTYEIRE.

NASHVILLE, April.

"The church here has not paid me a cent since I came." The Conference was held nearly three months ago. The church referred to is regarded as among the best appointments in the bounds of the Conference, and the pastor who writes is one of our best preachers. That pastor and his family must have suffered, or gone in debt—probably both. It is almost certain that something could have been paid. Perhaps not too full amount due, but something could have been done toward meeting the necessities of the preacher and his family. Some of the members may have been too poor to have given even as much as a nickel. This is not very probable, but it is possible. Many, however, could have contributed from one to ten dollars apiece. The most could have given something. And yet nearly the first quarter has passed, and not a cent has been raised for the pastor's support. Somebody must be to blame. There is a great wrong to be laid at somebody's door. Perhaps the stewards are the chief sinners; but every member of that church who could have contributed as much as five cents, and has not done it, is guilty. We know not how to reconcile such indifference to the support of the ministry with the possession of an enlightened Christian conscience. Perhaps there is no plan, and no call has been made. What if it be so? Can those who are inclined to do their duty find no way in which to send in their contributions? We confess that we are both perplexed and humiliated. We know not how to explain a case of this sort.

Chinese New Year's Day.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Jan. 22, 1879.

MY DEAR CONFRERE: To-day is Chinese New Year's day, and as I have just returned from a walk through the chief thoroughfares, pleasure grounds and celebrated tea gardens, embracing also a visit to the great City Temple, I now propose, at the risk of being prosy, to give you some account of what I saw.

The first impression was that of a strong contrast. The hum and bustle of men, the rumbling of vehicles, the open shops, and the eager throngs of purchasers had all disappeared, and the streets presented a quiet known only once a year in China. Already, however, early in the afternoon, the time of my walk, the people were beginning to arise from their protracted feasts, and saunter abroad in search of amusement and pleasure; and not a few were noticed with candles, incense and mock money in their hands, hurrying to the temples.

Passing along the streets every door and shop front presented an air of unusual tidiness. On the center of the main doors, and on each window, I observed a large character, Fuh Happiness, written on bright red paper, and on the door posts some such couplet as this: "May your happiness be as the Eastern sea;" "May your age be as the Southern hills;" or this: "May a hundred happinesses arrive together;" "May thousand tokens of good luck assemble in clouds;" or this: "Let the house be clean, why need it be large;" "The fragrance of flowers does not consist in their number;" or this: "How can we do completely as we should like;" "I ask only that which will not make me ashamed;" or this: "Where there is magnanimity of soul the virtue is great;" "Where there is no deception the heart is at rest," etc. On the pillars of shop doors such as the following: "Our trade does not deceive a small boy;" "Justice draws honest wealth from all places;" "Thus wealth is always sufficient;" "Let integrity be regarded as profit;" "Good calculations from which there is no vacillating bring profit;" "Forecaste and deliberation is the way to determine wealth;" "Let good faith and loyalty be your occupation;" "Maintain generosity and integrity as your trade."

But I tire you with these specimens of Chinese love displayed in so characteristic a manner. Suffice it to say, that such couplets are to be met with everywhere—in private houses, shops, temples and Yamuns, differing only in their sentiments as one place or person differs from another.

Continuing on my way toward the New North Gate, the entrance nearest the tea gardens and the main temple, I found the crowd in the streets had grown perceptibly larger. The children, in holiday dress, were assembled at the doors, and there, at a street corner, was perched a little man vigorously parading his Punch and Judy, while an eager company surrounded him cracking watermelon seeds, and smiling at the oddgrimaces of the diminutive actors.

Further on and the Physiognomist and Palmister were encountered by the way plying their cheats and telling the new year's fortunes. Now, joining the living current, I crossed the bridge that spans the city moat, and left the wide clean streets of the Foreign Settlement. The city gate is narrow, and, as there had been a slight fall of rain, the entrance, as it was through dirt and filth, well mixed and compounded by ten thousand feet, had more the appearance of introducing one to a pig pen than to a great city. Once in, my course was through the chief "Go to Street," direct to the tea gardens.

There are tea as some have imagined—gardens for the cultivation of the shrub—but resemble somewhat the beer gardens of Germany, the tea substituting beer. They are situated immediately behind the city temple, and in fact the grounds they occupy belong to the temple and from them a large part of its revenues is derived. The area thus denominated comprises about ten acres, in the center of which an artificial lake has been excavated, leaving here and there islets on which tea houses or saloons have been built. These are reached by means of zig-zag stone bridges, and the whole would be picturesque enough were the general surroundings in keeping with the original conception. Surrounding the lake are other tea shops, intermixed with shops and stalls for the sale of pictures, fans and toys. On the northeast corner of the plot is an artificial mountain covered with shrubbery, and surrounded with a high wall, access to the interior being granted only on the first and fifteenth of each month. Near the borders of the lake are the remains of a former rockery, and on the south side is an inner or close garden which contains a fair specimen of Chinese skill in rockery ornamentation.

But what spoils the whole scene is the recent encroachments of small unsightly buildings on what was formerly an open pleasure ground. These are occupied chiefly by numerous fortune tellers, vendors of small wares, etc., while now all the available open space is encumbered with jugglers, peep-shows, peanut and candy stands, gamblers at roulette and other chance games.

On entering I found the crowds immense, and with difficulty forced my way along the narrow lanes and paths. Near the entrance I came to a goldfish stand, where hundreds of that finny beauty or monstrosity, as the case may be, were exhibited for sale. They are very common here, and cost only a few cents, whereas in London I heard of them being sold for as much as five pounds sterling each. I might here stop to tell a fish story, but as that would take me from my mutton, I shall desist. I next came to a little barricade, with a placard over the entrance, announcing that there was on view within "a young lady eighteen years old, and just fourteen inches high." "Admission—Common people, half a cent each; Gentlemen more, but left to their discretion." "One look will make you rich."

The showman was very earnest in his entreaties for me to enter, but I declined, as it was not all fools day. Passing on, I next encountered a series of gaming tables, each with an excited circle of spectators looking on and watching the issue of the stakes that were being ventured—some on a throw of the dice, some on a turn of the roulette hand, some on a one-of-three-ivory-point game, name unknown. Near by, in a corner, was a young man delighting a small party with a song. Crossing over one of the numerous small bridges that connect the shores of the lake with the islets, I there found a juggler entertaining a select crowd with the bird and bowl trick, and yet another with the magic rings. At tricks the Chinese are exceedingly clever. A tenth of a cent is generally the fee expected, and with that, even if but a tenth of those who witness their feats of legerdemain contribute, they are contented. Like some more respectable folk, they have no defense, and so take what they can get for their services.

After winding in and out for a time among the tea shops I finally landed on the shore again, this time on the temple side of the lake, and near where all the paths through the garden concentrate in a narrow passage that connects the gardens with the court of the temple. Here there was a great press, and I was caught up, as it were, by the surging stream, and almost nolens volens, ushered forward into the eddying sea of humanity that filled the open court directly in front of the main temple. The temple was ablaze with the burning of red wax candles, and the court and entrance filled with worshipers, some entering, some retiring. I tried to secure a standing place from which to command a view of the whole scene, but only partially succeeded. However, holding for a little time a position near the main entrance, from which I could easily see the idols and worshipers within, and the movements of the crowd in the court outside, I shall now attempt to give you, if possible at least, a faint idea of this great festival of heathen worship. The temple is a triple building, occupying the center of a large square, bounded on the north by the tea gardens, on the east and west sides by narrow streets, on which are small shops, that completely shut out the view, and on the south by a large street, whereon is situated the main entrance, which is through a grand ornamental gateway, opening directly into the large shop-enclosed court within. Over this gateway is a rostrum or stage where theatricals are occasionally performed for the delectation of the gods, while the people, thick as standing wheat in a fertile field, look on from the court below. In the center of this court, which is nearly a hundred feet square, is a huge iron censer, and around the sides were ranged, on this occasion, numerous stands for the sale of joss (mock-money), incense and candles, and other temple requisites. Among them also I noticed a great many persons tempting the unwary to try their luck at a variety of chance games, hawking sweet meats, fruit, etc., and, judging from the crowds that surrounded them, they must have been doing a thriving business.

I now call your attention to the temple itself. Unlike our church buildings, it is broad side on and without doors, the whole side front being open, except so much of it as was on this occasion obstructed by the venders of the above-mentioned temple wares, who press in and occupy stands right at the feet of the idols. The Chinese style of architecture was derived from the tent, and the best specimens are undoubtedly to be met with among their temples. Imagine, then, a huge long tent with lofty-peaked roof, supported on gigantic pillars held together by equally large beams above, and you will have a fair idea of the Shanghai City Temple. Entering this between the central columns or pillars, you have immediately in front of you the stupendous object of all this new year's display—an immense idol richly gilt, and occupying a lofty seat on the opposite side of the temple. He is fat to obesity, and in his face there is not a trace of intelligence—stupidly placid, he is ever sitting in his dark and gloomy abode, and one would suppose almost suffocated by the smoke that has so discolored his surroundings. The dais on which he sits terminates at the top in a sort of canopy, and around him curtains are draped in such a manner as to obscure all but his face and hands, which on the present occasion were only dimly visible through the smoke of ten thousand candles. Just below, and immediately in front of this idol, there were arranged three wooden frames, not unlike clothes horses or racks, the cross rail at the top of each being filled with upright spikes on which to fix the candles or suspend the din before consuming it. Still below and in front of these altars were the kneeling boards, where the worshipers performed the usual services—which consist in reverently kneeling successively for three times, and knocking the head against the board three times at each prostration. This is called the San Kwe Kiu Dien or Kourtow. No priests belong to the temple, and there is no master of ceremonies. Only a few attendants wait on the altars and regulate the burning of the candles and other offerings. On the right and left of the entrance there are some eight other gods, four on each side. These are the police attendants of his godship; and with these a few symbols of authority, and here and there a votive offering to attest the power of the great god, you have a fair inventory of the contents of the main temple. Passing on through this hall you next come to a long narrow passage, connecting the large temple to another similar, but smaller in the rear. The passage is occupied along the sides by a great number of constitutes representing the home or household attendants of the god. The next temple, or second, is presided over by a smaller god, and the third, which is still further in the rear, is occupied by the wife of the great god, who is worshiped as a goddess. In the matter of worship all are alike as to form, and differ only in that the chief god receives the lion's share, while the goddess receives mostly the attentions of females only.

The two inner temples are opened usually only on the first and fifteenth of each month, but on the present occasion all of them were open, and thronged with eager worshipers.

Men of all ranks and degrees of respectability—gentlemen and coolies, silks, satins and rich furs—knelt beside rags and filth, all intent only on the object for which they had come. But I must here close this letter, already too long, and reserve some account of the history of this purely native specimen of idolatry for a future communication.

Yours, J. Allen.

New Subscribers

The publisher informs us that in spite of the depression existing all over the country we are increasing our subscription list rapidly. If all our agents would take hold of the work as some are doing, our list would very soon double and treble in size. One of our Louisiana agents reports twenty new subscribers in a field we had supposed almost swept clean before more than dunning the list in a small town. Another in Mississippi sends twenty-four new names, in addition to those previously sent from the same town, and the brethren at less than two thousand inhabitants, increasing the list fourfold. There are exceptional cases, but show what can be done in almost any section. In Alabama they are coming in one, two or three at a time, but in the aggregate make a goodly number, as the effort seems to be to send at least four new subscribers by each agent. Now is the time, as the spring opens for every pastor to make a thorough canvass of his work, and, especially in his rounds of appointments and visiting, to see that every Methodist family is supplied with a copy of the paper. Not much extra work will be required—only to keep the matter in view, and urge our people to take and read our church literature. The occasional mention from the pulpit, and the consideration of the matter in Church and District and Quarterly Conferences, will secure many subscribers.

The New Orleans District Conference held only night sessions, beginning on Wednesday, April 2, and closing on Saturday night. The Conference met at the St. Charles Avenue Church in New Orleans, and was admirably and thoroughly presided over by Bishop Keener. The affairs of the district were carefully reviewed, and the questions affecting its interests were discussed. We do not remember when the spiritual condition was better than now. Collections are generally good, love-feasts well attended, and the class meeting record, on the whole, is excellent. Our Sunday-schools are in a growing and healthy condition, our local preachers are going to work with renewed zeal, and strong promises and resolutions were made touching the support of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. The next District Conference is to be held at Felicity Street. The following delegates were elected to the ensuing Annual Conference: W. H. Foster, W. H. N. Magruder, B. O. L. Rayne, Rev. T. J. Carver, Alternates: Rev. T. W. Dyer, Dr. J. J. Lyons. The trustees of the Seashore camp ground from this District Conference are: W. H. Foster, J. H. Keller, P. Haraan, G. W. W. Goolwyn, B. O. L. Rayne, W. B. Thomson, S. K. Russ, Dr J. J. Lyons. Besides the above five trustees are elected by the Mobile District Conference, and two by the Seashore District Conference.

A recent note from Rev. James A. Godfrey, presiding elder of the Woodville district Mississippi Conference, says: "Saw Judge Edward McGehee at his home near Woodville, a few days since. He is well, as usual, and riding out on pleasant mornings." Judge McGehee is now over ninety years of age, and it will be gratifying to his many friends to know that he enjoys comfortable health at his advanced age. May his days be still lengthened, and may they be brightened with the fullness of grace.

Bro Godfrey informs us that the prospects of the church in the district are generally good, pastors all well at work, revivals commencing in some charges, and seasons of refreshing at some of the quarterly meetings.

Bro Godfrey closes by spoiling a good story. It is all a mistake about his being attacked by a tramp. Nothing of the kind happened. "It was made up by some imaginative man, and, being told to an editor, was published, and hence it goes."

Our readers will be glad to see the communication which we publish this week from Rev. Young J. Allen, one of our missionaries in China. In a private note, dated Shanghai, China, February 3, 1879 Bro. Allen says:

Our missionary operations are increasingly hopeful, and, as we have the means, are enlarged. I am glad to see the individual Conferences enlisting heartily. We shall soon be able to organize a Conference here—it is very much needed.

We have the promise of other communications from the same pen. They will be welcome.

"Yours sincerely, a subscriber." So a writer of a marriage notice subscribes himself. And in some such way obituaries and other articles are sent. And when so sent they cannot be published. We must in all cases have name and address of the writer. Our correspondents can choose what anonymous signature they please. The editor, however, must be furnished with the writer's true name.

Thomas L. Mellen, Esq., writing from Natchez, April 2, says:

Our church here is improving in some respects. We have now one of the oldest parsonages in the State, and it will soon be one of the prettiest. Six members of the Sabbath-school call boys ten or twelve years old—made private application to Bro Wm Tweed, a few days ago, for tuneful preachership. Offices are much interested. A Wednesday prayer meeting for Tuesday night has been organized, and is increasing in interest, and promises great good.

What is known as the Army Bill, the Appropriation Bill, with the amendment to repeal the law which permits the President to station troops at the polls, passed the National House of Representatives Saturday, April 5, by a vote of 155 to 122. The bill now goes to the Senate, where another long and exciting debate will be had, and then it will go to the President.

Dr. Edward Wadsworth, presiding elder of the Mobile district, Alabama Conference, writing April 7, says:

I have gone round the district once, and hold Quarterly Conferences in all the charges. The preachers are all at work. Our prospect for the year is encouraging.

On our third page will be found a very interesting article from the Wesleyan Christian Advocate giving an account of the ninety-fifth birthday of Dr. Lovick Pierce. We extend to this venerable minister our congratulations on his wonderful preservation.

There is to be an entertainment, under the auspices of the Bishop Polk Society of Trinity Church, at Grunewald Hall, in this city, Tuesday, April 22, at half-past seven P. M. We are indebted to the managers for complimentary tickets.

Constantly receiving fresh supplies of pure Drugs Medicines, Chemicals, Patent Medicines, Combs of all kinds, Brushes, Soaps, Perfumery, Toilet and Fancy Articles, etc., and at small margin. Coral Tooth Paste, recommended by all who use it as a very superior dentrifice. It beautifies the teeth to a fine pearl like ornament and invigorates the gums. Gives the child a rosy vigor, to the bud of the shipmate, but it enriches the blood, and satisfies all of its scrofulous symptoms.

Get the Genuine Article. The great popularity of "Hubbell's Compound of Cod Liver Oil and Lime" has induced some unprincipled persons to attempt to palm off a simple article of their own manufacture; but any person who is suffering from Coughs, Colds or Consumption, should know where they purchase this article, as no pulling. The results of its remarkable cures is unprecedented; and the proprietor has ample evidence in the life of his extraordinary sales as to publish a few only complaints. The Phosphatate of Lime possesses a most marvelous healing power, as combined with the pure Cod Liver Oil by Dr. Wilbor. This is the only medicine, regularly prescribed by the medical faculty. Sold by A. B. Wilbor, Chymist, Boston, and all druggists.

A Cough, Cold or Sore Throat should not be neglected. Brown's Bronchial Troches are a simple remedy, and will give immediate relief. Sold only in boxes.

No More Despair for the Debilitated. Where Consumption—not always the intellectual consumption of the lungs, but general decline of vital energy, and wasting away without local disease of the body. When this slowly advances itself to death unless the proper prescriptions and orders, Cod Liver Oil, Phosphates and the patient tries to swallow the nourishing food, but nourishes little; the nourishing food does not nourish, but the nourishing food causes weakness the power of nutrition, and digestion, far more than it supplies nourishment to the debilitated system. It is only by mingling the Oil as in Scott's Emulsion with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda that the oil's exciting taste and effect is destroyed, digestion promoted, and nourishment derived from the food eaten. Then nutritive is pure and strength and blood are sweet milk and not only restores positive vigor, to the bud of the shipmate, but it enriches the blood, and satisfies all of its scrofulous symptoms.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Beef Stew.—Six pounds of the flank of beef, cut in small pieces; boil in two quarts of water until tender. Then put in a dozen potatoes, a dozen onions and four turnips; cover it so that the steam shall not escape; pepper and salt to the taste.

A large mushroom is said to have forced its way through twelve inches of concrete, covered with a thick layer of asphalt, in the floor of the savings bank department of the Genera Post Office in London.

Best Food for Work Horses.—The West Division street railway company, of Chicago, works about 500 head of horses, and after a careful test of various kinds of food, have adopted a mixed ration of corn and oats ground and fed with cut hay, slightly wetted. In winter the bulk of the rations is two-thirds ground corn and one-third oats, but a gradual change is made as warm weather approaches, until in the heat of summer the ration consists of one-third cornmeal to two-thirds of oats, which is again changed as winter approaches.

To Dress Rabbit Skins: Sprinkle with salt for two days, letting it lay exposed to the air, so as to gather plenty of moisture; shake or scrape off what is loose and rub on powdered alum; a couple of teaspoonfuls for a rabbit or muskrat skin, or a pint for a deer skin; rub a small, thin skin at the end of the third day's exposure, with alum until it is pretty dry. A large, thick skin must be "alumed" a week. Skins will be white, and not red, on the under side, when cured by this process, and make excellent rugs or garments, as no tool on is used.

Good Yeast.—Put two small handsful of hops into four quarts of cold water, and, if the latter be hard, a pinch of baking soda; boil gently for about two hours, strain off the hops through a colander, then blend in a little cold water, smoothly, three large tablespoonfuls of flour, mix this with four, water, and boil it gently for a few minutes after it comes to the boil, taking care to stir the yeast frequently, to prevent the thickening from sticking to the bottom of the sauce-pish of tally. Pour mixture into a deep dish to cool, and, when milk-warm, add half a cup of old yeast to work new, bottle at once and cork securely; the bottles should be three parts full only, and one bottle will set ten pounds of flour. This yeast makes excellent bread.

When to Eat Fruit.—The Spanish proverb says it: "Fruit is golden in the morning, silver at noon, but lead at night." Americans do not seem to have heard of this proverb, due to have one of their own experience. Mostly they eat fruit at night, and hence have not the sovereign idea of it that they would have if they had eaten it at more proper hours. They eat it as dessert at dinner. This may be the most proper time to eat dried fruits, but it is not the right time to eat juicy ones. The Spanish people learned their proverb from eating the very juicy fruits, like oranges. These should be eaten in the morning, a little before dinner, not later than noon. Early in the day they will, if eaten, prove to be the best possible medicine for the bilious.—Fruit Recorder.

Large Crop Yields.—In raising crops, the object should be to get the greatest quantity in the least space. We want larger yields. To get these, we must manure more and cultivate better. Most farmers make mistakes by cultivating more land than they can attend to properly. Half the land with better cultivation would produce more. In stock raising, quantity of land is essential. In crop raising, quantity is essential. It is true that in stock-raising, good quality is quite important, as one acre of good grass land frequently produces more grass than three acres of a poor quality; but quantity of land can make up the deficiency, and quantity cannot do it so well for grain crops. The farmer should concentrate his labors on fewer acres for crops, and put the balance of the farm in grass. This he will find will pay better. Then let him keep the improved breeds of stock, and he is on the highway to success.—Rural World.

Borax for Salting Butter.—The Italian minister of agriculture, industry and commerce has addressed a communication to the chamber of commerce of Milan relative to experiments in salting butter with borax which have been carried out at the agricultural station at Florence. From the account which appears in the Giornale di Agricoltura, borax would appear to have a most marvelous effect in insuring the absolute preservation. Samples of fresh butter made at the Florence station, and purposely not carefully freed of their buttermilk, were found, on the addition of about eight per cent. of borax, to maintain their natural fine flavor, without the least change whatever, for upward of three months. To maintain this satisfactory result it is necessary that the borax should be perfectly dry and in very fine powder, and care must be taken to ensure its thorough mixture with the whole mass of the butter operated on. Among the further advantages of this plan it is noted that borax imparts no flavor of any kind to the butter, while it is entirely harmless in its nature, and also reasonably cheap. Subsequent experiments have shown that a very much smaller proportion of borax suffices to produce a perfect effect, and a solution of the same powder in water will work quite as well as the dried powder.—Yankee Farmer.

The investigation of Frank McGlynn, by T. Augustus Pratt, read a report before the American Social Science Association in Boston recently on "Public Health Associations," in which he said:

"Cheese is found to be adulterated with red lead, lime and with chromate of lead, curry powder with red lead, tumeric with sulphuric acid, starch and various substances. It is said that probably half the cayenne pepper sold in our shops is white. She knew where. He had the wife always at a hand there was put a drop of the juice of the grape in it. An eminent medical gentleman of Boston said to me: 'The adulteration of drugs in this country are abominable.'"

Scientific.

—The geographical distribution of plants is one of the most fascinating branches of the science; but good geographical botanists are rare. Yet some of the most interesting facts can be gathered from its careful study—facts which have especially a value when studying the history of the world and of the human race. It is only of late years that Prof. Asa Gray, of our country, was able to show that the flora of Japan had a close affinity with the flora of the Atlantic portion of the United States—much closer affinity than with the western; and this fact shows that in all probability there was a close connection between the continent of America and of Japan in ages long past, and that since that connection was severed the western part of our country has been thrown up. It would be for the geologist to decide on the probability of this, but we can see how botany in these geographical aspects can perhaps be an aid to other sciences. Papers on botanical geography are much more common than they once were. Prof. Thiselton Dyer has recently given a lecture before the Geographical Society of England especially to show how interesting to geography may be botanical research. Isolation of plants from their fellows in various parts of the world, he suggested, could often be used as a startling hypothesis in the search for geological disturbances. The plants now existing were to a great extent the descendants of species of great antiquity and their dispersion over the face of the globe by the aid of winds, migratory birds, and the currents of streams offered an inviting field for study to the highest order of intelligence. He gave some instances of remarkable concurrences of identical species in remote points. Mr. New had brought from the top of Veil-manjaro plants which proved to be the same species as some found by Lieut. Cameron on the other side of Africa. A tree brought from the Isle of Amsterdam by Commodore Goateneugh, in 1873, was found to be the same as a species growing on the Island of Tristan d'Acuha, five thousand miles away.—Independent.

—Among other exhibits the Venezuelan government sent to the Paris Exposition several flasks of vegetable milk. These having been carefully analyzed by M. Boussingault, he makes the astonishing statement that this fluid, in its constituent parts, is not only greatly like cow's milk, but in some respects is a decided improvement on that article. It contains fatty matter, sugar, caseine and phosphates; but the relative proportions of these substances are such that the fluid has all the richness and nutritive qualities of cream. The trees, of which this is the sap, grow upon the sides of mountain chains in Venezuela. The Indians go each morning to the trees nearest to their settlements, and cut in them deep incisions, from which the milk pours out in such quantities that in an hour or two only a large vessel is filled with the fluid. This is taken back to the villages and forms a staple article of food for both old and young. It is singular that the rare virtues of this plant have never before been made public; but now that they have been, it will be stranger still if some effort is not made to extend their usefulness. As long as cow's milk can be had at every corner grocery for a few cents a quart it will hardly pay for any one to send to South America for a supply; but if the trees can grow wild in the mountainous parts of the torrid zone, it may be that they are hardy enough to bear transperation to, and transplanting in, colder countries.

—The skin of the stingray, Raya clavata, is said to be used instead of isinglass for the clarification of liquids.

Ayer's
Hair Vigor,
FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

It is a most agreeable dressing, which in all cases, harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray hair, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always, secured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to lanky, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The Vigor cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair, The Vigor is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

EDUCATIONAL.

Woodville Female Seminary.

A NON-SECTARIAN ACADEMY, UNDER the supervision of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mississippi Conference; Hon. E. McGehee, President of Board of Trustees. For Thoroughness of Instruction, healthfulness, cheapness, and many other advantages is not surpassed. We invite those interested to examine our credentials, and to obtain circulars, by calling upon Mr. Philip Werlein, New Orleans, La.; or address the Principal, A. J. WRIGHT, Woodville, Miss.

The Loquet-LeRoy Institute

AND KINDERGARDEN DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, 280 Camp Street.—This institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses MOISE, Cecelia W., Sallie L., and Corinne, the latter relicte of the late R. G. Raoul, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successors of Madame Loquet-LeRoy, who give good will and right to conduct the School under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No change whatever in the conduct and management of the School. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to the institution, and that of their friends, and the public generally, promising strict devotion to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge. C. W. MOISE, Principal.

REFERRING TO THE ABOVE MADAME LOQUET-LEROY announces to her friends and former patrons the entire confidence she has in her successors, being in every way suited to the high trust they have assumed. She bespeaks for them a continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded her, and that she will still be actively connected with the institution. For terms and particulars apply to the principal.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,

(Post-office the same)
MONROE COUNTY, EAST TENNESSEE.

PARENTS desiring to find a safe and healthy location for their sons during the summer season would do well to patronize the above-named institution under the patronage of the Holston Annual Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The spring term closes May 22, and Fall session begins

FIRST MONDAY IN AUGUST, 1879.

Students arriving before the latter date will be beyond the reach of epidemics, and will thus secure some months of profitable study before Colleges usually open in less favored localities. Excellent board in College Boarding House by D. A. McKenzie, the well known farmer-steward, at ten dollars per month, washing included. Sunin good private families at nine dollars. Tuition, College Course, twenty dollars; English Course, fifteen dollars.

This is the unpregnable fortress of a soul—all is at the disposal and command of my God; my Father rules all—what need I fear? The soul trusting on God is prepared for all; and in the saddest apprehensions of the soul, beyond hope, believes, against hope; even in the darkest night casts anchor in God reposes on Him which it sees to light.—Leighton.

"While Christ is most precious He is most beloved, and where He is most beloved, there He is most valued, and where He is most valued, He is most followed."—Grove.

That is a heavenly frame, to be heartily willing meekly to receive what, ever it may please God to send; "Not as I will but Thine be done."

Why Not Take It?

About two years ago, when I was coming out of a preaching service, I saw an old man looking very unhappy. So I said: "My friend, you are not happy."

"No," he replied, "I am not."

I added: "You are not saved."

"No," said he; "I have been praying for it for twenty years."

"What!" I said; "praying for it for twenty years! Let me tell you a story, for you remind me of the circumstance:"

"I saw a gentleman the other day who was paralyzed on one side, and was wheeled about in a Bath chair. As he was out one day he saw a poor man sitting by the roadside afflicted in the same manner, and calling out: 'Oh, for God's sake, give me a hapeny!' The rich man told his servant to wheel him over to the poor man. He did so, and the gentleman held out half a crown to the beggar. But the blind man still kept crying: 'Oh, for God's sake, give me a hapeny?'

"He was blind. The gentleman said: 'Here, my poor fellow, is half a crown for you.' But the poor man was deaf, and still he kept calling out for a half-penny. The servant wheeled the gentleman nearer; and at last he made the poor man hear, and then he thankfully took the half crown.

"Now, my friend, this is just what you are about. God is offering you salvation as a free gift, through the blood of Jesus Christ; but instead of taking it, and thanking Him for it, and rejoicing in it you keep on asking for it."

"What!" said he, interrupting me, "can I have salvation without asking for it?"

"Of course you can," I replied. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord; and the thing to do with a gift is to take it, not to pray that you may have it. 'He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life.'"

"Oh, sir, I see it all now!" he exclaimed, and turned away comforted.—British Evangelist.

TUTT'S PILLS.

SYMPTOMS OF A TORPID LIVER.

Loss of Appetite Bowels Costive, Pain in the Head with a dull sensation in the back part, Pain under the shoulder-blade, Fulness after eating with a disinclination to exertion of body or mind, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, with a feeling of having neglected some duty, Weariness, Dizziness, Fluttering of the Heart, Dots before the eyes, Yellow Skin, Headache generally over the right eye, Restlessness with disturbed dreams, Highly colored Urine.

IF THESE WARNINGS ARE UNHEEDED SERIOUS DISEASES WILL SOON BE DEVELOPED.

TUTT'S PILLS

are especially adapted to such cases, a single dose effects such a change of feeling as to astonish the sufferer.

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS:

DR. TUTT: Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. I have tried your Pills which were recommended to me; have used them but with little faith. I am now a well man, have good appetite digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.

Rev. R. J. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

The first effect of TUTT'S PILLS is to increase the Appetite, and cause the body to Take on Flesh, thus the vital forces are nourished, and by their Tonic Action on the Digestive Organs, Regular Stools are produced.

DR. J. F. HAYWOOD OF NEW YORK, SAYS:

Few diseases exist that cannot be relieved by restoring the liver to its natural functions and for dyspepsia no remedy has ever been invented that was as happy an effect as TUTT'S PILLS.

Christ's Rule of Revenge, and That of Confucius.

"But I say unto you, love your enemies—do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you." This is the golden saying of the Prince of Peace.

"Thou shalt not live under the same heaven with the murderer of thy father or thy master," says Confucius, the teacher of four hundred millions of men. So likewise taught Moses, the law giver of the Hebrews. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy." "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth."

Blood and iron, hatred and revenge to one's enemy, taught Moses and Confucius. Forgiveness and mercy taught Christ, the Son of God.

Yet in Japan, where texts from Confucius' writings are inscribed on wall and silken scroll, and book and cup, and cut into the steel of sword blades, there were no cities of refuge, as in the old Hebrew commonwealths. The murderer, if not instantly killed, was pursued and hunted down until slain. If the children of the dead man were but infants, the duty of revenge was taught them at the breast. Kataki-Uchi (vengeance on the murderer) was the daily theme for years, while all the time, from the age of ten, the boy practiced swordsmanship and spear-exercise. At eighteen he sallied forth in disguise, but with girded sword, to stain his bright blade in the murderer's blood.

If the children were girls, they too were trained for the supreme duty of revenge. They were taught to handle the spear, and the sickle and chain, which, skillfully thrown around an enemy's neck, would sever the jugular vein. Or they practiced Shuriken (throwing flat pieces of steel, sharpened at one end like arrow-heads,) to put the eyes out and penetrate to the brain.—Prof. W. E. Griffis, in Sunday Afternoon.

"O, LORD, AND IS THIS THE WAY?"—Among the last words of dear Dr. Beadle were these: "O Lord, and is this the way?"

Yes, O yes, thou loving brother, thou faithful servant of God; this is the way; not the way that thou wouldst have devised, perhaps, not the way that any of thy earthly friends would have chosen for thee. But it is the way appointed by infinite and unerring wisdom, and selected by eternal and unchanging love. It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps, nor is it for Jordan, or any where else, A wise man would rather, if it were possible, die twenty times than be compelled to decide when, where and how he shall leave the world. If God determines such things, there will be no error, no mistake. If man determines it, a fool will be arranging matters of which he knows nothing.—Rev. William S. Plumer, D. D., in Sunday-School Times.

EBONY TREE.—The ebony tree of Ceylon is a most magnificent forest tree, with a tall, black, slender stem spotted with white. A great deal of the furniture in Ceylon is made of ebony. At Font Hill Abbey, England, there is a large and splendid set of furniture made entirely of ebony, carved in the most elaborate manner and of prodigious weight. This wood, it will be remembered, is almost as heavy as lead. The set spoken of once belonged to Cardinal Wolsey.—Congregationalist.

Among the 240 lay delegates to the British Wesleyan Conference were four members of Parliament.

THE PIANOS I KEEP.

Every Piano sold by me has stood the test of time—from ten to fifty years. A first-class house like mine cannot experiment at the expense of its patrons with untried or unreliable instruments. Being thoroughly familiar with the construction of a Piano, I am positive of their durability and reliability. I sell my Pianos with the understanding that if in ten or more years a defect in their construction under fair usage should show itself,

The Money Paid will be Cheerfully Refunded.

THE CHICKERING PIANOS

Have been before the public for fifty-four years, and their reputation extends over the whole world. A six octave Piano of this make forty-seven years old and perfect in every respect can be inspected in my store. Their superiority over all others is now universally acknowledged.

THE MATHUSHEK PIANOS

Constructed on entirely new and patented principles which insure their retaining their original brilliancy of tone for a life time, and their standing longer in tune than any other Piano. Those excellent Pianos have been sold here during the last ten years and not the least defect has ever occurred. Their new Uprights are real models of perfection.

THE HALE PIANOS

Are good, reliable and well made Pianos, of excellent tone, and with elastic touch. There are over 1000 of them in this city, and not a defective one worn out one am ong them.

NEW PIANOS are well known to be the lowest, as I prefer to sell ten pianos at a small profit than one at a large. My terms are liberal. Selling new pianos on monthly payments of $ 0, and second hand ones at $. Fifty second hand Pianos in perfect order from $50 to $150. New Pianos from $225 upwards.

MASON & HAMLIN AND ESTEY ORGANS,

The best instruments of the kind made, from $50 upwards. Direct importation of

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, STRINGS AND MUSIC.

The parents all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the Hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. THE CROCUS

BY MARY AINGE DE VERE.

The flowers were dreaming, all fast asleep,
For the parni brown earth is a pleasant bed
When suddenly, breaking their slumber deep,
They heard a patter in t over head
Like the tramp of a million fairy feet,
Or tapping fingers that beat, and beat.
"Who knocks so loudly?" the wild rose said;
The pansy opened her purple eyes
And stared through the darkness in mute surprise;
Fair lond lily, with saint like grace,
Just crossed herself and began to pray;
The violet nurred in her drowsy nest—
"It must be too early for me to rise,
There's not so much as a gleam of day"—
Then turned on her pillow and slept again;
For daffodil yawned and covered her face,
Ily auca murmured "Oh, hush; be still;
We need not wake ful the blue birds thrill;"
But dear little crocus, meek and good
Rose out of her quiet resting place;
I hear the knock of the wild March rain,
It time for me to be up and dressed,"
She wrapped herself in her warm green vest
And silvering, pulled on her yellow hood,
And slid the bolts of the heavy door
And pushed her away through melting snow,
Through showers that patter and winds that blow,
Into the bare bleak world, to bring
The welcome and joyful news of Spring!

Some children scampering home from school
Stopped that day near the woodland pool
And laughed and shouted with joy; for there,
Out of a snow wreath peeping fair,
A dear little crocus bravely stood
And smiled to herself in her yellow hood.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

TRENTON, April 8.—Rev. John Miller, D. D., late professor of the theological seminary at Princeton, was to day formally deposed from the ministry for heresy.

SELMA, ALA., April 8.—The Alabama State Medical Association convened here this morning. There was a full attendance.

CINCINNATI, April 8.—A letter was received to day by Archbishop Purcell from Cardinal Simeoni, Secretary to the Pope, declining to accept the Archbishop's resignation on account of his long service to the church. The Archbishop was instructed to select a coadjutor with the right of succession to the See of Cincinnati.

CHICAGO, April 9.—During a thunderstorm this evening a meteor, which looked white to the naked eye, fell to the ground on the south side, bursting into many pieces just before striking. It was white with heat and the fragments resembled cinders. The wire of a telephone connecting two business offices on the south side was struck by lightning about the same time and the electric fluid entering both offices played havoc with the furniture.

BOSTON, April 9.—A number of representative colored men of this city held a meeting to night to consider a plan of favoring the negro exodus from the South. A committee was appointed to call a mass meeting in Faneuil Hall and arrange for means to transport as many as may be desirous of leaving for new homes West.

NEW YORK, April 9.—The members of the Chinese Embassy arrived here yesterday afternoon. They will remain until Saturday, when they will sail for Madrid, via Liverpool, London and Paris. They propose establishing at Madrid a Chinese Embassy, if possible. Chin Lan Pin, the Chief minister, will accompany the delegation to Europe, while Yung Wing and Mr. D. W. Barbitt, American Secretary, will go back to Washington, and take care of the embassy there.

WASHINGTON, April 2.—A communication from the Secretary of the Navy was laid before the House this afternoon giving information in reply to the House resolution regarding the breaking out of yellow fever on the ship Plymouth. The Secretary says the opinion generally prevails among experienced naval men that the freezing process is sufficient protection against the appearance of yellow fever after it has once appeared on board of a vessel.

There are instances in which it has resulted otherwise although they have not been sufficiently numerous to entirely destroy the opinion. The question why the Plymouth was not sufficiently frozen and fumigated has been referred to the medical board to report thereon. The remarkable fact that the disease broke out at the precise point in the ship where it appeared in November last may be supposed to weaken somewhat the theory that the freezing process is a reliable remedy.

A single example cannot, however, be sufficient to entirely overthrow the presumption in its favor. The department will continue to resort to it in all cases, but will at the same time add to it all other known sanitary remedies, as well as such as additional investigations may discover. In the meantime whatever experiments either experience or science may suggest, should be tried in order that nothing shall be omitted to arrest the progress of this terrible scourge.

NEW YORK, April 12.—Gen. Richard Taylor, of Louisiana, only son of the late President Taylor, died this morning, at the residence of S. L. M. Barlow, in this city. The cause of death was dropsy.

GALVESTON, April 14.—To-morrow's Galveston News will publish the following special: A fire occurred at Cuero, Texas, Sunday morning, destroying almost the entire business portion of the town; loss $40,000; very little insurance.

A special from Austin to the Galveston News says: The Senate to-day adopted a resolution taxing commercial travelers from other States one hundred dollars per year in addition to ten dollars for each county visited on business.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—The Department of State to-day received a telegram from the United States Charge d'Affaires at St. Petersburg, Col. Wickham Hoffman, announcing that an attempt was made on the Russian Emperor's life this morning, while his Majesty was walking near the Imperial Palace. The would be assassin discharged five shots at the Czar, fortunately without effect, his Majesty being untouched. The assassin was arrested.

PHILADELPHIA, April 14.—Dr. Isaac Hayes, editor of the American Journal of Medical Sciences, who has been on the staff of that journal fifty two years, died yesterday, aged eighty-three.

LONDON, April 9.—A dispatch to the Standard from Cape Town says: Convoy from Derby was obliged to encamp on the banks of Intombie, as the river was too full to cross. Lieut. Harward, (not Harwood as before reported,) and survivors were encamped on the Luneburg side of the river. Although there had been some previous alarms the surprise was complete; the sentinel only saw the Zulus when they were within fifteen paces. Lieut. Harward's men poured a steady fire across the river; the Zulus lost heavily but were undaunted; only fifteen of Capt. Moriarty's men escaped across the river.

They were sleeping in wagons when attacked. The sentry was the only one who had time to fire. The scene of the surprise is a hollow surrounded by long grass and weeds. One gun, which the Zulus had not removed has since been recovered. The chief column for Ekowe numbers 5000 men.

ROME, April 9.—The Capitale publishes a letter written by Garibaldi before leaving Caprera. He says: Italy owes gratitude to the royal house for having contributed to its unity, but it did not accomplish it alone. The country was more floorishing under its old tyrants than it is now.

It commends Signor Depretis in unmeasured terms, and concludes: "The monarchy is not eternal. Its duration will be in proportion as it merits the affection of the people and calls to its councils not flatterers but capable and truthful men."

The Pope's donation of $20,000 to the school fund is a first annual contribution from his private fortune.

LONDON, April 11.—The Times' Rome correspondent says:

The Pope's letter concerning the education question has great importance, apart from the subject upon which it treats, as it directly confirms the impression which some newspapers have combatted, that the Pope understands the liberty and dignity of the papacy to consist in removing from Rome all means of practicing and propagating whatever the church holds to be heretical, and that his gradually increasing insistance on restoration of the temporal power is prompted by the equally increasing conviction that until the Pontiff regains his earthly sway it will be impossible to prohibit the liberty of worship and instruction; thus he declares in his holy city the religion of Christ ought to reign the sovereign and universal teacher of faith, and ought to have free power to close all access against impiety and to maintain the purity of Catholic teaching.

PANAMA, April 5.—News received from the South this morning is to the effect that the Chilian forces have occupied the towns of Cobija and Calama, reprisals for the confiscation of the property of Chilians in the interior of Bolivia.

LONDON, April 12.—A dispatch from St. Petersburg to the Daily News states that immediately after Gen. Todieben's return a special commission on the Roumelian question was appointed, consisting of the Minister of War, Gens. Todisben and Imeritinsky, M. de Glers, of the Foreign Office, and others. The commission reported, on Wednesday, that mixed occupation was impossible, and recommended a conference of all the powers with a view to provide for prolongation of Russian occupation.

Germany has stated she is not opposed to a conference, and recommended that an arrangement be made with England.

LONDON, April 12.—The Times' correspondent at Paris telegraphs that the Sultan, on Tuesday, addressed a telegram to Lord Salisbury, formally condemning the proceedings of the Khedive as a danger to the whole East, expressing a willingness to cancel the firman regulating the Egyptian succession, depose the Khedive and send Halem Pasha to Alexandria in a Turkish man-of-war as the Khedive's successor.

LONDON, April 14.—A dispatch to the Daily Telegraph from Alexandria says: A great fire is raging in Cairo and has destroyed blocks of new buildings.

The chief god of Shanghai

SHANGHAI CHINA Jan. 10, 1879.

MY DEAR CONFRERE: In my last I promised you some account of the history of the chief god of Shanghai, whose temple I visited on New Year's day.

The Chinese name of the temple is Ching Hwang Miau—"temple of the god of the city," or city temple. The word hwang originally referred to the fosse or moat around the imperial city, but afterward became the name of an illustrious individual charged with the protection of the city, and thence was used as the designation of the patron divinity of the city." The name is now general, and is applied to the patron divinity of the chief city in each district throughout the empire whose residence is denominated the Ching Hwang Miau. The rank and office of his godship correspond to the chi hien or chief magistrate of the city—the one ruling over the visible world, while the jurisdiction of the other is limited to the invisible—one rules the living people, the other the spirits of the dead.

His title, Hien Yeu Peh, "illustrious protector and superior," is said to have been conferred on him in the Ming dynasty while he was yet living. His family name was Tsin.

To the Chinese Repository I am indebted for the following details of his life, and the story which led to his apotheosis, and promoted to be tutelary divinity of the city of Shanghai. His grandfather at first came to Shanghai as a visiter at the time of the Yuen dynasty, A. D. 1280-1368, and subsequently became a resident. His name is recorded in the annals of Shanghai as one of the illustrious visiting residents. His son, the father of the hero-god Liang Hau, went abroad to study the language of the Mongols, in which he made great proficiency, and became an author.

(Note—The Yuen dynasty is the title of the Mongol rule in China, and embraces the period from 1280 to 1368, A. D.)

Afterward he held high office in the imperial court, then established in the southern capital—Nanking. His son, whose name was Ya-peh, accompanied his father, both when a student and when in office, and in due time was promoted and sent into the province of Fuhkien. At length, when disorders arose, he withdrew from public life; and, when summoned by one of those usurpers who had fixed his residence at Soochow, he declined; first, because it would prove himself unfaithful to his late imperial master, and, in the second place, he was then mourning for his mother.

(Note—The law in China requires that any and all imperial officers, on the death of either parent, particularly the mother, shall retire from office for a specified time—say from twenty seven to thirty-six months—and a special dispensation be granted, by imperial rescript, commanding their services as indispensable to the welfare of the State.)

When subsequently Hung-wu had established a new dynasty—i. e., expelled the Mongols and introduced the Ming dynasty, purely Chinese—and seated himself securely on the throne, he sent for Ya-peh, who declined going to court on account of ill-health. The Emperor then, with his own hand, wrote after the following tenor: "The people on the seacoast are fond of fighting; Ya-peh is a man of genius, now residing there, and, refusing to come to court, we fear he will have cause to repent." Thus no alternative was left to the poor man. Accordingly he went to court; was there repeatedly promoted, and often extolled by his master. His career, however, was not long. He became sick, obtained leave to retire, went home, soon died, and his remains were buried in Shanghai.

After this no further notice of him occurs in history till the tenth year of Shun-chi, the first monarch of the present or Manchu dynasty. In the spring of that year bands of pirates invested the city. The commander of the Chinese forces was defeated. The people in great numbers assembled and inveighed against the conduct of the general.

Thereupon the governor of the province came to investigate the matter; and the general, whose name was Wang-King, turned round and accused the people of being in league with the pirates, fearing that their complaints against him would prove his overthrow.

(Note—Even to this day the people suffer as much or more, during disturbance, from their defenders than from their enemies. They could, with great propriety, pray deliver us from our friends.)

The governor was deceived, and resolved instantly to exterminate the people far and near. The city magistrate and his friends tried to interfere in their behalf, but the governor was inexorable. That night, a few hours before the bloody decree was to be executed, a god descended and went to the court of the governor. His heart was agitated. Still at the late hour of midnight he was bent on slaughter, when again and again the god appeared before him, shaking his head and admonishing him. This at last had the desired effect. His cruel purpose was given up. The happy effects of that interposition continue to this day, and tradition says the god who appeared was Tsin Ya peh.

An image of this hero-god, with the title above given, also an image of his wife, with images of their retinue, are now to be seen in the Ching Hwang Miau, where they are worshiped not only by multitudes of the common people, but by the chief magistrate and other local officers of the government. This we have mentioned in a previous letter. The local officers worship twice a month—the first and fifteenth—and generally very early in the morning. At that time also the Sacred Edict is read to the officials and whoever may be present. This is the only attempt at preaching or public instruction of the people made directly by the government.

As for the temple of the god of the city was small, movable and temporary, having no fixed place; but now it has risen and become both spacious and splendid after its kind, hardly inferior to any in all the provinces, and is permanently located in ample grounds devoted, as we have seen, for the most part to worship, pleasure and refreshments.

Here now we take leave of the Pan Cheng Hai Fu, the "Protectors and Defenders of the Seacoast."

Yours,

YOUNG J. ALLEN.

Apportionment of Claims.

The apportionment of the salaries of presiding elders, and assessments for Conference collections, among the several charges of the districts in our Conferences, is a matter deserving careful and unselfish consideration. No uniform method of distributing these claims is now adopted, but that which is most common leaves the distribution entirely with the judgment of the majority of the Board of District Stewards, and does not fix any rule by which that majority may be governed. Hence this board, in the exercise of its liberty, adopts any basis that is acceptable to the largest number present, and the result is a distribution unsatisfactory to the minority, be it great or small, which develops complaints of unfairness and injustice that must prove a serious trouble in the charges where such complaints are made. The exercise of this liberty of the district stewards is the more objectionable because more than half of the stewards are seldom present at the time when the apportionment is made. The question arises, then, cannot some rule be adopted that will not be liable to these and other objectionable features of the present plan? It has been suggested that the apportionment should be made on the basis of the number of church members; but a very superficial investigation of the matter will convince any one of the injustice of this plan. The charges numerically strongest are, as a rule, for obvious reasons the weakest financially. This is certainly true as to circuits, for the more people settled in a square mile of territory, the more poverty you will find, if agriculture is the resource for living. Other objections might be presented, but what has been written will suffice for the present. It might be interesting to look into other suggestions which have been made from time to time, but that which is interesting is not always profitable.

Our Discipline, in requiring the "Committee on Episcopacy" to divide the Bishops' support among the Conferences according to their "ability," very plainly intimates that this ought to be the rule in the distribution of all claims on the church. No one, perhaps, will question this, but the trouble is to point out those who shall settle the question of ability, and who, it may be asked, are so competent to settle it as the Boards of Stewards of circuits and stations. Does not the Discipline require these officers to find out what each member of the church is "able" to pay for the support of the church? Surely by reason of their knowledge and experience they are in position to say more accurately than any one else can what can be done in the charges they represent. Every consideration inclines us to recognize these financial agents of the church as the proper men to decide upon the ability of the people, whose agents they are. If it is asked how is the judgment of these boards to be made known to the Boards of District Stewards, the answer is plain: By the allowances they make for the support of their preachers. Let the salaries of preachers be the basis of distribution of all claims on the church, and we may hope hereafter to hear nothing more of unfairness and injustice in the apportionment made by district stewards. Of course, where this plan is adopted, the assessments to charges cannot be made till the presiding elder has held one round of Quarterly Conferences; but there is no good reason why this delay should not be made. Answers to question seven need not be made till the second round of the Quarterly Conferences, there being no necessity for them earlier in the Conference year.

A desire to direct the attention of all concerned to this matter, Mr. Editor, has prompted me to send you this communication. If it does no good, I trust it will do no harm.

HENRY O. MOORE.

MOBILE, ALA., April 2, 1879.

Seashore Camp Ground.

The trustees held a meeting upon the grounds on the tenth and eleventh instants, in accordance to previous call. There were present a three-fourths majority of the New Orleans members, with Bros. O. S. and Williams from Mobile and Bros. Griffin and Pettevent, of Seashore district, Miss.

The board organized by the election of W. H. Foster, of New Orleans as president, Price Williams, of Mobile, vice-president, G. W. W. Goodwyn, of New Orleans, treasurer, and Phillip Hallbran, of New Orleans, secretary.

Important action was taken preliminary, and looking to a larger collection than ever at the approaching camp meeting of 1879 which commences on the sixteenth of July.

The trustees report the grounds in good order, appearing more beautiful, and lovelier than ever. The springs have been greatly improved, and now flow freely with bold streams of health-giving waters. Much clearing and grading have been done, and the trees and grasses set out are growing finely, and a general state of improvement is visible.

Attention of all interested is invited to early preparations to secure tents by building or renting, in order to be in full readiness for the camp meeting, to enjoy all its opportunities and advantages.

To Pastors in the Woodville District.

BRETHREN: I have ordered to your address (per G. T. Lathrop, New Orleans,) each a copy of the "Pastors Visiting and Memorandum Book," to be kept accurately by you, and handed to me at the Annual Conference ensuing.

I like the plan suggested recently by Dr. Linfield (see NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of March 27, in this regard.) Its execution will, I think, result in much good to all interested in the pastor's sacred work, secure accuracy in all reports to be made to Quarterly, District and Annual Conferences, and be of great utility to your successor in charge, whether he be yourself or another brother.

When this writer was announced (in 1848) as appointed to the Carrollton circuit, Bro. H. H. Montgomery handed him a book—the plan of the circuit—which was of great benefit to him on taking charge of the work.

The Pastors Visiting Book, if used as has been indicated, will meet in a systematic way the demand which every successor in charge has upon his predecessor. And then it seems to me that this plan will essentially enhance every interest of a financial kind, to which we are expected to attend, and increase the number of subscribers to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, the organ of our Conference, which ought to be in every Methodist family in our district. Fraternally yours,

JAMES A. GODFREY.

GREENSBORO, LA., April 2, 1879.

American Bible Society.

The stated meeting of the Board of Managers was held at the Bible House, Astor Place, on Thursday, April 3, at half past three P. M. William H. Allen, Esq., LL. D., president, in the chair.

The Rev. M. B. Hutton, D. D. read from the tenth chapter of Romans, and offered prayer.

Two new societies were recognized as auxiliary, one in Michigan and one in Minnesota.

Secretary Gilman presented a report concerning the Society's work in Mexico, with recommendations suggested by his recent trip to that country.

Henry A. Oakley, Esq., of this city, was elected treasurer of the Society, and Robert L. Belknap, Esq. was chosen to fill a vacancy in the Board of Managers. Several copies of Scriptures, in different languages, were presented for the library.

Among the papers submitted to the board were annual reports from its various agencies in China, Japan, Brazil, Uruguay, Russia and Turkey, each of which showed some increase of Scripture circulation over the preceding year, this increase being especially large in Russia, Japan and China. Other reports were received from the missions of the American Board in Prague, Santander, Zaragoza and Jaffna; of the Presbyterian Board in Louisiana; and of the American Baptist Missionary Union in Stockholm, and from the Bible Society of France.

Upon applications connected with the reports and other communications, appropriations were made for Bible work in foreign fields to the amount of $31,000; besides grants of books, for sale and distribution at home and abroad of the aggregate value of $12,750, including six volumes in raised letter for the blind.

The receipts for March were $68,265 and the entire receipts for the year ending March 31 were $462,271 66.

The volumes issued in March were 80,850. The whole number of copies issued from the Bible House during the year, not including those issued in foreign lands, was 950,340.

To the Corresponding Secretaries of Conference Missionary Societies.

The first meeting of the General Executive Association of the Woman's Missionary Society, M. E. Church, South, has been officially announced to be held May 16, 1879, in Louisville, Ky. Corresponding Secretaries of Conference Societies are now requested to send to my address, without delay, the names and addresses of the delegates who will represent their respective societies at that meeting, in order that a knowledge of their accurate number may be acquired, and that arrangements for their entertainment may be made in accordance with the desire of the Louisville Society to do honor to their guests.

MARIA L. GIBSON,
Cor. Sec. Louisville Conf. Society.

Address Miss Maria L. Gibson, care of American White Lead Works, Louisville, Ky.

The Brooklyn Eagle says: "Our good effect of the temperance movement is shown in the decreased business of the Excise Commissioners in New York. Four clerks have been dismissed and eight suspended. The salaries of inspectors have been cut down from $1,200 to $800."

PRAYER AGAINST DOUBT.

"Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief."—Mark ix. 24.

BY CAROLINE MAY.

Lord, take away my doubts, the deepest source
Of all unspringing restlessness and strife.
I would not doubt God rules with tender force
The tidal waves that toss man's fragile life
That seems near wrecking on a dangerous reef;
Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief.

I would not doubt; God hears and answers prayer,
Though strong men, good and wise, are borne away,
And they live on whose lives we well could spare,
Bringing to us, and to themselves, each day
An added weight to an o'erburdened grief;
Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief.

I would not doubt; God bends a watchful eye,
And looks with pity on man's sufferings;
That His quick ear notes the unnoticed sigh;
Or that His hail of tribulation brings
Good grains of wheat from sorrow's well-filled sheaf;
Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief.

O question not the cause of good or ill,
For querulous distrust brings danger near;
But hush thy heart, and lose thy restless will,
In that all-perfect love that casts out fear;
Still urging this, of all thy prayers the chief,
Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief.

From the Work.

GROVE HILL, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: When I wrote you my last letter for the ADVOCATE I was in the land of flowers and oranges, but now I will write from the land of hills and rocks. I was removed by the Bishop, at our last Conference, from Calhoun circuit, in west Florida, to Grove Hill circuit, Clarke county, Ala. I reached this circuit on the fifteenth of January. I learned a short while after my arrival that Bro. B. C. Glenn, the former pastor, had just left for his new field of labor in west Florida. I am glad to say he has left some very kind and hospitable people behind him in this country. If you want to find it out, just come over to our next camp meeting, which will come off some time in September; I can't say yet what time, but I will let you know in due time, if you will come. You will find a strange-looking country, but a very pleasant one in some places. We have some very good Methodists and Baptists over here on Grove Hill, but they can be improved in some things. They are generally poor, but they will give you a plenty to eat, such as they have, and that is generally very good.

I hope that I shall be able to make a good report this year from Grove Hill. We have not done much up to this time, everything seems to move off quietly, yet I find the church in a lukewarm state, which is a dangerous condition for it to be in. I think it will be in a better state soon, as the spring is now opening upon us, and the weather is getting pleasant enough for us to have more prayer meetings and Sunday-schools through the country. We have only one Sunday-school, which has lived during the winter.

Our first Quarterly Conference embraced the fifth Saturday and Sunday in March. Dr. E. Wadsworth, our Presiding Elder, was at his post in due time. He was with us at Grove Hill several days before the Conference. The doctor commenced service on Wednesday night, and kept it up every night during the week but one. I have never been associated with a more zealous worker in the kingdom of Christ than Dr. Wadsworth. He is filled with the Spirit of his Master.

Yours fraternally,

APRIL 1, 1879. JOHN A. GREEN.

VICKSBURG DISTRICT.

MR. EDITOR: A retrospective survey of this district at the close of the first round of quarterly meetings for the year awakens lively emotions of gratitude to the great Head of the church. All our preachers are at their places, in health, and cheerfully devoting themselves to the work which has been assigned them. The people too are, I believe, without exception, pleased with their ministers. This is not always, nor necessarily the case. Though no man is so apt to be loved and appreciated for his office's sake as the preacher, yet he is sometimes unsuited to his people. In some instances the people are lacking in appreciativeness, and fail to perceive that an unpopular minister, by doing necessary work which no other could or would have done, may sometimes make himself the indispensable predecessor of a wholly acceptable man. It is one of the supreme excellencies of the itinerant system, however, that it not only may, but, perhaps more generally than any other system, actually does suit the man to the people he is to serve. It is worthy of remark that our itinerant system is supplying the country people with well nigh all the preaching they have throughout this region. In the large county of Warren there is not an active minister outside the city of Vicksburg save one, and he is a Methodist itinerant. Those ecclesiastical systems which require a contract for the payment of so much money to be entered into before a minister can be called or installed are ill suited to the diminished fortunes and financial embarrassments of the people. Hence they welcome the Methodist itinerant who takes them as a man takes his wife, for better or for worse, and they will not let the preacher starve.

Every charge in this district, but one, now rejoices in the possession of a parsonage. The destitute charge would, I think, have secured a home for their preacher this year had it been practicable for him to have occupied it. Four parsonages have been procured within the last twelve months, and the work of paying for a fifth, costing about $2,500, is just about to be finished. Others have received needed repairs without and furniture within. In all the enterprises of the church which have occasioned extraordinary demands for money or labor the ladies' societies have furnished not only most acceptable, but indispensable aid.

Class meetings are not in general use, though they are regularly and profitably held in several of the city appointments. Love-feasts, which may in some degree supplement, though by no means adequately substitute the class meetings, are well attended and highly appreciated.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy is still doing good work in the line of education. It would be hard to find a more pleasant place to live and learn than with President Jones and wife at the Academy. The people are showing a wise appreciation of this institution by giving it a larger patronage than it has had for several years. Planting interests are well advanced. March was, I suppose, never milder, nor blessed with kindlier showers. Corn is up, and a good stand, and cotton is being planted vigorously. The emigration of negroes to Kansas produces considerable uneasiness among land-owners in places. Some thousands have gone, and still they are going. If half of them would leave the South the price of the cotton crop would scarcely be diminished. The negro has been greatly wronged. Merchants with mortgages and liens have taken advantage of his necessities and of his ignorance, charging him exorbitant prices for supplies, and often involving him by drams and other cajoleries to buy what he did not need, while planters have either winked at the merchants' game, or imitated their covetous practices. The negro very naturally desires a country where he will be better treated. But will he find it in Kansas? Is there a land on this earth where the love of money is not the root of all evil, where intelligence and skill do not hold impoverishing and ruinous advantage over ignorance and improvidence? If there is such a land, it has not yet been discovered. It is surely not Kansas.

Poor negro! It is to be feared his experience in changing his home will be like that of the flying fish, which in the water meets a shark and in the air a hawk. He will find no better climate for him than the South affords, unless it be a tropical one, and no better friend than his "old master," who has a more kindly appreciation of him upon the whole than any one else will ever have.

Our people are anticipating another visitation of yellow fever. Well may they fear some great evil, for while some are striving to walk uprightly, yet, "because iniquity abounds, the love of many waxes cold." Sabbath-breaking, drunkenness, and, horrible to tell, murders abound. Scarcely at any time during the late war were men from this region killed more frequently than during the last few months; they have fallen by deadly weapons in the hands of their neighbors. Let all God's people be earnest and importunate in prayer for the restraining and transforming power of God to rest upon the wicked and for his blessing and peace upon the faithful.

As one round ends another begins. Were it not for the kindly reception, the affectionate appreciation and the sustaining prayers of the brethren everywhere I go, and the hope of a reward not earthly, the labors and responsibilities of the ministry would indeed a tiresome burden prove, but with these, and the help of Christ, I cheerfully labor on.

W. L. C. BUNNICUTT.

MARCH 28, 1879.

From Villula, to Ozark, Ala.

MR. EDITOR: At half-past two P. M., March 24, we—wife, sons, daughter and self—bowed good-by to the pleasant little town of Villula, and drove to Beale—two and a half miles—in time for the evening train, bound from Columbus, Ga., to Troy, Ala. At four o'clock we boarded the cars, and soon were rushing, roaring and flying by the power of steam. At all points along the road the signs of energy and thrift were manifest from the improved condition of farms, new dwelling and business houses erected, or being erected. Just before six o'clock our train came to a dead halt and complete stand still at Union Springs, and there we had to remain for the long and heavy period of one hour and a half, waiting for the train from Montgomery, bound to Eufaula. However, we reached Troy at ten minutes after nine P. M., and were met on the train by that prince of Christian gentlemen, Hon. J. R. Goldthwaite, who conducted us to his pleasant and hospitable home, so gracefully presided over by his equally clever and amiable wife. In the morning all were up early enjoying the pure and refreshing air. After early breakfast we were taken charge of by other pleasant and accommodating ones—R. G. Skipper and N. P. Dowling, of Ozark. Skipper with his double-seated buggy and span of fine mules, and Dowling with his buggy and fine Tennessee mare. The early hours of that charming morning found us in good speed on the highway to Ozark. About eight miles from Troy our Tennessee nag began to cut strange pranks and freaks. Apparently she became as much alarmed as if she had run into a nest of mad yellow-jackets. By steady hands and kind words she became quiet, and on we moved about five miles, when a worse scare and shine occurred than the former. She threatened to smash and tear up generally. Her mean conduct caused a separation; for she was soon exchanged for a young, gentle, fine-looking, swift-footed horse of Alabama nativity. At early dark we rolled into Ozark, all safe and sound—thirty-three miles from Troy. On all the route it was manifest that prosperity has crowned the efforts of honest toil and skilled labor. Plenty fills the land.

Troy is still building up. It is now a beautiful and thriving city. Troy does a heavy business, and is still increasing. Its main stores are of brick; hotels brick. It has a church-loving and church-going population. The cause of Christ is growing in interest and power. But while the cause of Christ is flourishing, the devil has his agents at work. One of the old ones was in operation the night we got there. He was and is known by the name of the dancing master. This dancing master is an old man, gray-headed, and trembling under the weight of years, upon the edge of the grave and brink of —— Yet he still goes about teaching the young idea how to sin. As we returned he was on the cars on his way to Union Springs, to conduct a dress calico ball. I looked at the poor old man as he tottered about in the ways of sin, and felt sorry for him. May God have mercy upon him, and bring him to better knowledge and ways before he soon goes hence.

Ozark is also growing in size and business. The merchants in that place do considerable business in cotton, and sell large and fine stocks of goods at reasonable rates. The prices of goods compare favorably with those of great commercial centers. Its citizens are religious and high-toned. Honesty and fair dealing is the ruling principle in business transactions. Its leading business men are church members. Its people not only love the church, but work for it. It has flourishing literary and Sunday schools.

During my stay in Dale county I had the pleasure of making a visit below Daleville, and of spending two days and nights near Choctawhatchee river, and one afternoon fishing on and in the river. An elegant repast of savory fish repaid us for the delightful toil. That section of country has plenty for man and beast; found cake of the very nicest flour, and bought sugar, paid for, with which to sweeten the coffee.

Sunday, March 30, the writer, assisted by Rev. E. M. Turner, preached the funeral sermon of Wesley Dowling, at old Claybank Church, to an immense congregation, composed mainly of relatives.

After delightfully spending eight days with near relatives and friends, we bid them an affectionate farewell, and under the control and direction of our former leader, Bro. R. G. Skipper, we returned to Troy, and stayed all night with our former host, Bro. J. R. Goldthwaite; found Sister Dickinson, widow of the late Rev. J. P. Dickinson, of the Alabama Conference, at the point of death. Her mind was clear, and heartfully assured of heavenly rest. She was ready for death and heaven. Talked sweetly of the bright prospect of glory.

April 4 left Troy, and reached home at twelve M.

VILLULA, ALA., April 7, 1879.

Logansport Mission and Miscellany.

MR. EDITOR: We received a hearty welcome by our people on returning from Conference. We have made two rounds on the work, established two new appointments, and baptized two persons—a mother and her infant. We did but little last year, except establish our lines, organize the work, and preach to the people. We propose this year to advance our front lines by developing the material interest of the church. We need church houses; no work can assume any degree of permanence without them; and never can be self supporting. But how to build a church in these times is the question! "Hard times" is the plea for not doing anything; but withal we have adopted a plan for building churches. We propose, first of all, to get a parcel of ground at every point where a church is needed, say four acres, and secure titles. Many say less would do, but we want enough for a permanent graveyard. A burying ground on a church lot is the only one which will continue sacred. In less than a hundred years graves on private property will be liable to be in some man's farm, and have cotton and corn growing on them. In view of this, it is to the interest of every community to have a church and public burying ground. We asked for a donation of four acres at Mission Chapel, in Sabine parish, but they said all the land in this community belongs to Mr. E. W. Hamline, and he is in Washington City. We wrote to him immediately. He replied that he would most cheerfully give the land, for which he has the thanks of the community. After we get titles secure, we further propose for all hands to meet on the ground and do that portion of the work which they can do within themselves, such as sawing blocks, hewing sills and sleepers, and getting boards. Having done this much, the greatest difficulties are overcome, and the church can be built.

In this region of country we have good productive land, good water, and abundance of the best timber; but we need more people. There are not less than 280,000 acres of land in the bounds of the mission, and not exceeding 3,500 inhabitants. There is room for ten times that number. This is an admirable poor man's country. Away from the fashionable circles of society, common to towns and cities, the people can adopt their own methods of economy in dress and living. We have the benefit of public schools, and, if something better is desired, Mansfield Female College is near by. There is also a good male school in Mansfield. Yesterday being the fifth Sabbath, and a leisure day with us, we heard Bro. Borden preach two good and practical sermons. So far he has made a most favorable impression as pastor in Mansfield station. Bro. R. Randle is making great efforts to stretch himself over his work, but how he is to do it we can't tell, as he has seventeen works in his district, making sixty-eight appointments to be filled in fifty-two Sabbaths.

No man has a better opportunity of doing good, or more labor to perform, or more sacrifices to make, than a presiding elder. In our judgment, ten or twelve appointments is enough for any presiding elder's district, and as many as he can attend to properly. We are glad to find occasional good articles on temperance in the ADVOCATE. In view of the heart-rending evils of intemperance, the subject ought to be stirred to its profoundest depths, and agitated from the center to the circumference of civilization.

We regretted that sickness prevented us from making our report on temperance at the last Annual Conference. We had collected some facts and figures on the subject, which it would do well to ponder, but they will keep. The spring weather is delightful, and the prospect for a good fruit and crop year is gratifying. J. P.

MANSFIELD, LA., March 31, 1879.

PRAYER ANSWERED IN A LUMP.—The Rev. Dr. Kidd, of Aberdeen, had a hearer—a good and converted man, as everybody but himself judged—though troubled with doubt as to his own salvation. The doctor said to him one day:

"Well, Thomas, how long have you been praying?"

"For forty years."

"And what have you got?"

"I canna say I ha'e gotten onything."

"I wonder you are not tired then, and don't give up that kind of hopeless work."

"Nay, sir, we manna dee that."

Well, when Thomas lay dying—was very near his end—Dr. Kidd called, and asked, as he always did when he was going to pray:

"What shall I pray for?"

"Give thanks," said Thomas, "give thanks; for my forty years' prayer answered in a lump."

"The following is the poetic part of an inscription to be cast upon a bell which Meneely & Kimberley, of Troy, N. Y., are now making for a church in Newark, N. J.,—a mission offering:

"Presented by Miss Abbey Coe.
'Praise God from whom all blessings flow.'"

Obituaries.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

MRS. JULIA A. BUFORD died, in Bastrop, La., March 13, 1879, in the sixty-third year of her age. She was the daughter of John M. and Elizabeth Folkes, and was born in Jefferson county, Miss. At an early age she was married to Rev. John A. Cotton, and came to north Louisiana about the year 1836. She was married a second time; her last husband being the late P. Buford. In 1853, while absent from her home, her only son sickened and died. He was at the time about seventeen years of age.

Sister Buford, being one of the first settlers in this country, was widely known, and her friendship was valued highly by all who knew her. She was a modest, unassuming, earnest, faithful woman. Her religion was a part of herself. You could no more separate her and her religion than you could separate the sun from his rays. She was not demonstrative to the point of noiseness, and yet you always felt the force of a penetrating, spiritual power when in her company. During the most of her three-score years she was a great sufferer, yet, like Paul, she often said, when referring to her sufferings: "None of these things move me." She said that she started early in life to serve God, and nothing ever caused her to swerve from that great purpose. Through affliction and in joy, in trouble and in peace, in prosperity and in poverty, she kept herself steady in the course she had marked. She kept herself "unspotted from the world." If ever there has been an "elect lady" since the days of John the Evangelist, she was one. Part of Solomon's description of a virtuous woman is so appropriately descriptive of her that it sounds as if it was written since she died, and was intended for a part of her biography. "She openeth her mouth with wisdom and in her tongue is the law of kindness. She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness. Her children rise up and call her blessed, her husband, also, and he praiseth her."

She was like Abagail, "a woman of good understanding." She was like Ruth, in early life she choose the people of God to be her people, and God to be her God. She was like Joanna, she ministered unto the Lord of her substance. She was like Martha, a busy and indefatigable housekeeper. She was like Mary, she sat at Jesus feet and learned His lessons and practiced His precepts.

The result of her life was, that when she came to die she was ready. She had used her privileges and opportunities so well, had done her work so faithfully, that the messenger found her listening for the call. Her last days were days of agony, but the religion of the Master had so fortified her spirit that there was not an expression of fretfulness nor a gesture of impatience during all her last illness. When we thought her so prostrated as to be unable even to converse, she sang with the writer the whole of that glorious old hymn: "How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord." And then, the "Gate ajar;" and then "Close to Thee." She said there was not a cloud nor a shadow to see, nor an obstacle to her obtaining an inheritance among the sanctified. She died as she had lived, firmly believing that the Master she loved and served would provide for her in the realms of glory. We sorrow for a stricken household and a bereft church, but the blessed truth of revelation is, no matter what has been the life, whether pain or joy, whether prosperity or poverty, God says that the death of His saints is precious in his sight. "Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

ROBERT A. FAULK, son of David and Jane Faulk, died at his residence in Moorehouse parish, Louisiana, December 20, 1878, in the thirty-second year of his age. Robert was brought up by his parents "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Manifesting in early life a desire for knowledge, and an aptitude for learning, he received his early education at Centenary College, Louisiana, while under the presidency of Rev. W. H. Watkins, D. D. He was a true friend and supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; a respected citizen, and a kind and considerate son, brother, husband and father.

Early in life he had an experience of pardon and hope in Christ, the influence of which was never wholly absent, though it was only during his last sickness he made an open profession of his faith. He was entirely resigned to the will of God, manifested great meekness and patience during his short affliction. While sinking into death, he was enabled to testify that he was upon the Rock, and that all was right. A widow and two children, and a number of relatives and friends are left to mourn his loss.

ALFRED BRIGHT was born July 7, 1828, in Columbia county, N. C.; removed to Alabama in 1840; was converted under the ministry of Rev H. Urquhart, of the Alabama Conference, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South in 1853, and died of Paralysis February 9, 1879.

Some men die unregretted, but no so with him. I met brother Bright at the Douglas Camp-ground near Troy, Alabama, in 1866, had never met him any more until the day on which he died.

The second Sunday in February, 1879, was my first appointment. At his church (Hellcon) as I walked up to the church-yard, he met me with a smile, reminding me of the camp-meeting at which we met in 1866. After a short conversation we walked into the house, and he with an animated voice struck up "Jesus lover of my soul, let me to thy bosom fly." He led the congregation in every song, then in the last prayer. At the close of the last service, "now," said he, "go home with me and be with us in our Sunday-school." It was out of my power to do so, however. He went home to his dinner, walked a few hundred yards to his Sunday-school, after the usual exercises closed the school and dropped down, apparently dead, his left side entirely paralized. But in a few minutes his mental powers seemed to partially rally, and being assisted by friends he reached his house, telling his distressed and sorrow-stricken wife and children that he thought he would soon be better. His family physician, Dr. W. H. Posey, reached him at six o'clock P. M., and twenty minutes later this model Christian gentleman and laborious worker in the Church of God, bedewed with the tears of wife, children and many friends ceased at once to work and live.

BROTHER DAVID KING died at his residence in Franklin county, Miss., on the fifth day of March, 1879, aged eighty-three years three months and one day.

Brother King's early life was that of an upright, honest citizen, honest in all his dealings with his fellow-man, always kind to children and friends, a kind father and a most excellent and devoted husband. We realize that we can no more grasp his social hand, no more hear his kind advice, but we cannot wish his return to this world of pain.

He was a member of the Methodist Church for about fifteen years, and was faithful till death. About five hours before his departure he told his wife that he would die that night, told her where to bury him and who must dig his grave and make his coffin and whom he wished to perform the funeral service, and best of all told her his hope was sure and steadfast, and all was well with him. He leaves a twin sister, an excellent wife and two lovely little boys, and many friends to mourn his loss. We sincerely sympathize with his family in their bereavement.

J. G. G.

STERLING R. BAYKIN was born in Jasper county, Georgia, and died of consumption in Russell county, Alabama. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was faithful to the claims of home, society, his country and church. Residing in the country he accepted the disabilities of rural life, and strenuously sought to overcome them in the matter of church duties. Hence it is said of him that, when able to attend, his seat in the house of God was never vacant. He clung with ardent devotion to the Sunday-school, he loved employ.

For a year before his death his health was quite feeble. His last attack was sudden and brief. A severe hoarseness rendered his dying words unintelligible. Yet he had often expressed himself as resigned to the will of God; was confident that the Lord would afford him grace to endure his sufferings; his work was done; he had finished his course, and was ready to depart.

He survived two companions, and was the father of nine children, of whom four still live, two sons and two daughters. In the family of the younger daughter he passed his last days. He was devoted to his children and grand-children, a good husband and useful man.

HIS PASTOR.

MARTHA ELIZABETH SEXTON, daughter of John D. and Mary Wilson was born in Autauga county, Alabama, December 21, 1824 and died in Ouachita parish, Louisiana, of congestive chills, February 26, 1879. She embraced religion and united with the Methodist Church at the age of sixteen years, moved to Louisiana in the year 1849, and at the first opportunity identified herself, by letter, with the church. She bore an excellent character as a faithful earnest Christian wherever she was known. As death approached she became delirious, but those acquainted with her needed not evidence in the last hour of her readiness for the change. She had often said that for thirty years she had not had a doubt of her acceptance with God. Though for years an invalid she enjoyed peace of mind, and rejoiced greatly in the Lord. She was a most consistent self-denying Christian. She leaves in this State a husband and three sons to mourn their loss. Sister Sexton was a sister of the Wilson brothers of the Alabama Conference.

MRS MARY C. HALL died at Kilgore, Gregg county, Tex., of black jaundice, March 17, 1879.

She was wife of Rev. J. B. Hall of East Texas Conference and a daughter of Rev. James Hunter, a minister of sixty years in the Georgia Conferences. She had been a faithful Christian for over fifty years.

Death found her ready for the summons—and after forty-eight hours of intense suffering her spirit took its flight to the paradise of God. Glory be to God for his grace and salvation.

A HER SON.

Georgia and Alabama papers please copy.

MRS. E. J. FELLOW, aged about sixty-four years, died January 22, 1879, at the residence of her son, in Hinds county, Mississippi.

The deceased had been a member of the Methodist Church since the days of her childhood, and was regarded by many who knew her as a model of consistent piety.

She was greatly afflicted during the last two years of her life, but bore her affliction which Christian patience and resignation. She manifested no alarm at the approach of death, but breathed her last in great peace under the influence of the lofty hopes inspired by our holy religion.

A MICUS.

RICHARD H. ELLIS departed this life March 12, 1879, aged four years, seven months, and thirteen days.

"They shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up My jewels."

HOPE FOR THE BEST.

BY MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

O be not despairing
Whatever shall come;
The glad sun shall brighten
Each sad, shaded home;
And trouble puts courage
And truth to the test,
So trust, and so forward,
And hope for the best.

Though sorrow may darken
The skies of to-day,
Some new flowers are budding,
To brighten life's way.
Though weary of labor
Each worker has rest,
God chooses our portion,
Then hope for the best.

The Father is watching
Each well-beloved child;
No trouble shall hurt us,
Though tempests are wild;
He ever life's path
With His children has prest,
Then all that has happened
Must be for the best.

And now in the future
Are flowers and sweet song,
The sorrows are passing,
The joy shall last long;
And after life's conflicts
Are heaven and rest,
Then bravely and cheerily
Hope for the best.

Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has three distinct methods for carrying on its work in heathen lands:

1 Sending out missionaries.

2 Employing native Bible women.

3 Supporting day and boarding schools for girls.

The missionaries, by teaching, by visiting the native women at their homes, by gathering them in circles for religious conversation, singing, reading and prayer, and superintending schools for girls, have accomplished a great work. But the openings have been so many, and the desire for education so great, that the Woman's Society was organized to assist in this work, and a number of young ladies have been sent out, who have devoted themselves especially to labors among the women. These ladies organize schools, superintend them, visit the women in their homes, and by their personal efforts in training and superintending others, a great and good work is done.

The second method of reaching the women is by native Bible readers. These are native women who have been trained in mission schools, and who are leading consistent Christian lives. They go from house to house, in the city and through the villages, to labor among their own people. Some who are prejudiced against a foreign missionary will receive these agents gladly, and talk with them freely. Their familiarity with the habits of the people, the small expense necessary for their support, the great number that can be prepared for such service, and the great success that has attended their labors, make this one of the most efficient agencies for carrying on mission work.

The third method is that of carrying on schools for heathen girls, and day schools, orphanages and boarding schools for Christian girls. Famines are frequent in India, and as a consequence there are a great many orphans. Numbers of these orphans are made over to different missions by government. These children then come under the direct influence of the missionary, and are separated from the corrupting practices of idolatry. The orphanage in Bareilly, India, was one of the first institutions of our mission. It was carried on by the board for some time, and early in the history of this society given over to its charge. And now for nearly twenty years this school has been a great center for Christian influence. Many have married and gone to remote villages, and have been the only Christianizing agency within many hundred miles of their residence.

The question is frequently asked: "What is zenana work, or what does zenana mean?" The word is of Persian origin, and signifies the apartments of the women, and signifies the same as harem in Turkey. As soon as a woman in India is married, custom requires that thenceforward she shall no more go outside the walls of her home, only on very special occasions. Her marriage takes place when she is still quite a child. From the age of eight or nine years the women of the higher and middle classes are doomed to a life of seclusion and ignorance. In the outer life the zenana woman has no part, no recognized position at all. She has no knowledge, nor cultivation. She has nothing to do; so the dreary hours are spent in sleeping or cooking, or making garlands for the gods, or looking at her jewels, or braiding her hair. Many of these women are very religious and extremely bigoted and superstitious. Over one hundred and twenty millions of females now are in India.

By zenana work we mean work among the women secluded in their homes; carrying to them what they cannot come forth to receive—a sound Christian education, with all the blessings which follow. It is telling to these inmates the "sweet story of old," which brings life, light and liberty. This work must be done by women; the missionaries cannot do it, because they cannot be admitted. This task is given us to do. Formerly it was a difficult matter to get into these homes, but now they are open to the lady missionary. She wins the confidence of these women, and then teaches them to read, and sometimes shows them how to do various kinds of fancy work, which enables them to pass their time pleasantly. Zenana work is one of the most important missionary agencies, for here in these homes is the stronghold of Hindooism. Some of these women are earnestly desiring knowledge. Doors are opening every day. Let us make haste to open them, and give Christian training, and carry comfort to hearts that are without it.

If every woman in the Methodist Church would give something, as the Lord has blessed her, for "zenana work," we might soon not only occupy the homes of the higher classes, but send agents to every village and hamlet, and carry the glad tidings of salvation to all the women of India.—New York Methodist.

Ancient Lake Dwellings.

A fresh interest in the subject of "Ancient Lake Dwellings" has been awakened within a few months by the new and important discoveries made during some engineering operations near Neuchatel. By these works the shallow part of the Lake of Neuchatel was drained and a large area laid bare, exposing several extensive settlements of this early race of men. They seem to have fixed their dwellings in these strange places, because they provided some immunity from the attacks of both men and beasts. These houses were built on platforms supported on wooden piles or posts driven into the bottom of the lake, and grouped in villages, that were sometimes a quarter of a mile from the shore, which could only be reached by boats, or, perhaps, in some instances by a movable bridge. We believe that the first discovery of these ancient remains was made in 1853, when some wooden piles that had served as the foundation of dwellings, with stone and bronze instruments of warfare, earthen vessels, bones of animals, and other evidences of an extinct race, were found in the Lake of Zurich, near Obermeilen. Similar remains of old lacustrine habitations were some time after discovered in and near the lakes of Bienne and Neuchatel. On the shore of Bienne an ancient village was dug out of the morass more than a thousand feet from the present shore.

In 1861 more than eight hundred stone axes, chisels and other tools were dredged from Lake Neuchatel, not far from Concise. These, with many other discoveries of like kind, have attracted the attention of archæologists, and the question of their probable date has been earnestly discussed.

The dwellings, of which we have spoken, seem, from the foundations, to have been huts of a circular form, and were probably thatched with interwoven osiers, and had trap-doors for access to the water beneath. "The platforms were large enough for the accommodation of their cattle, with supplies of fodder and other needful stores." All that at present remains of these ancient structures are the wooden posts that are left standing in the lake, or in some cases where the lake once was. The groups and rows of these piles, sometimes thousands in numbers, show the great extent of the villages, and the large population that they sheltered. The wood of the piles is so well preserved that at first one can hardly believe that it has been submerged for thousands of years, but the excavations in the mud at their bases brings to light weapons, utensils and other evidences of their great antiquity. Some of these articles are rudely made of chipped flint, but others are of better quality and of polished stone. Among them are axes, knives, daggers, arrowheads and other weapons, with household implements, such as hand-mills for grinding corn, flat stones for baking bread, and various other things of known or unknown use. The gems of art which are found in the rudest races are also seen here in curious ornaments of shell and bone, often wrought with great labor and ingenuity, and showing some appreciation of the beautiful.

Even the ashes of the primitive hearths are preserved, with the charred bones of the animals and fish on which this prehistoric people lived, mingled with the litter of their barnyards and the general refuse of their habitations. In the town library of Zurich is a large and interesting collection of these articles from the lake dwellings of that neighborhood, and we believe there is another at Neuchatel, to which these recent discoveries will furnish rich additions.

Many of these lacustrine villages appear to have been destroyed by fire, either accidentally or by enemies. Though well defended from ordinary attack by their natural moats, they were, of course, not absolutely impregnable, as they might be reached from the shore by means of boats, and perhaps were sometimes set on fire by brands thrown from the shore.

Future investigations will, doubtless, throw more light on many questions connected with the history of the strange dwellers in the ruined habitations buried for ages beneath the waters of the Swiss Lakes. An eloquent writer has said: "Few can be more interesting than the speculations of an ancient and long-forgotten people rising, as it were, from the waters of oblivion, to take that place which belongs to them in the history of the human race."—Prof. J. J. Brown, in Northern Christian Advocate.

A Thirst for Knowledge.

Edward Eggleston, writing in Scribner for March, of "Some Western School-Masters," tells this anecdote:

"While the good Presbyterian minister was teaching in our village, he was waked up one winter morning by a poor bound boy, who had ridden a farm horse many miles to get the "master" to show him how to "do a sum" that had puzzled him. The fellow was trying to educate himself, but was required to be back at home in time to begin his day's work as usual. The good master, chafing his hands to keep them warm, sat down by the boy and expounded the "sum" to him so that he understood it. Then the poor boy straightened himself up, and, thrusting his hard hand into the pocket of his blue jeans trowsers, pulled out a quarter of a dollar, explaining, with a blush, that it was all he could pay, for it was all he had. Of course the master made him put it back, and told him to come whenever he wanted any help. I remember the huskiness of the minister's voice when he told us about it in school that morning. When I recall how eagerly the people sought for opportunities of education, I am not surprised to hear that Indiana, of all the States, has to-day one of the largest, if not the largest, school-fund."

Later on, speaking of Mrs. Dumont, a famous teacher of her time, Mr. Eggleston says:

"I can see the wonderful old lady now, as she was then, with her cape pinned awry, rocking her splint-bottom chair nervously while she talked. Full of all manner of knowledge, gifted with something very like eloquence in speech, abounding in affection for her pupils, and enthusiasm in teaching, she moved us strangely. Being infatuated with her, we became fanatic in our pursuit of knowledge, so that the school hours were not enough, and we had a "lyceum" in the evening for reading "compositions," and a club for the study of history. If a recitation became very interesting, the entire school would sometimes be drawn into the discussion of the subject; all other lessons went to the wall, books of reference were brought out of her library, hours were consumed, and many a time the school session was prolonged until darkness forced us reluctantly to adjourn."

A Reliable Man Wanted.

"A reliable man wanted to take charge of a farm"—"A reliable man wanted in a counting house"—"A reliable man wanted to superintend a mill"—"A reliable man wanted as teller in a bank"—so the advertisements read. What a demand there is for reliable men! Young women want them for husbands; fathers and mothers want them for sons-in-law. People in trouble inquire anxiously for a reliable lawyer whom they can consult; the sick want a reliable physician; the churches want a reliable man for a minister, although they do not advertise their want in a newspaper.

There seems to be no end to the demands for reliable men. Are reliable men so scarce that so much profit is made of getting them?

We apprehend they are not as plenty as they should be. Reliable architects and contractors and engineers are not to be found in every place, or there would not be so many railway and bridge accidents; cashiers and other bank officers are not always reliable, or there would be no defalcations. The same may be said of trustees and insurance officers. In truth, reliable men do not crowd one another in any class or occupation.

Young man, it is for you to determine whether you will be a reliable man or not. It all depends upon yourself. Nothing is easier; only resolve that you will be a reliable man, and stick to it through every temptation.

There has been some criticism on the word reliable, as not being good English. But the word will answer very well, if we can only have the quality which it describes.

Religious Intelligence.

—Mahometans claim that the original gospel has been lost, and that the true version is a verbal one not possessed by Christians.

—A grand centennial celebration of the establishment of Sunday-schools may be expected in 1881.

—The Evangelical and the United Mennonites, both small bodies, are negotiating for a reunion.

—The Newfoundland Conference of the Methodist Church of Canada has recently established a mission among the people of Labrador coast, who are comparatively destitute of religious privileges.

—There are in Europe, exclusive of Denmark, Switzerland, Portugal, Greece and Turkey, 64 752,000 Evangelical Christians, 136,466,000 Roman Catholics and 63,478,000 Greek Christians. In all about 264,000,000 Christians.

—The Raikes Monument in London is to be erected on the Thames embankment, and application for permission has been made to the Metropolitan Board of Works. The amount thus far received in the Raikes memorial fund is £1,066 16s. 7d.

—The offensive Tooth has been extracted; that is to say, the resignation of the Rev. Arthur Tooth, the persistent court-and-jail defying ritualist, as incumbent of St. James', Hatcham, has been accepted by his bishop, and the Church of England is rid of his disturbing presence.

—Dr. Stuart Robinson proposes a plan for the reorganization of the Presbyterian Church of the United States in several General Synods, independent of each other in jurisdiction, but confederated in a General Synod, which shall have charge of the department of benevolent work.

—The circulation of religious newspapers and periodicals in the United States amounts to about 4,764 000, coming next to the circulation of political newspapers, which is 8,781,000, and far in advance of those of other interests."

—That St. James' Parish, Hatcham, whose unsound Tooth was so long a grievous sore to the English Church, still gives trouble. The Rev. Mr. Walker, recently a curate of that other obstreperous ritualist, Mr. Mackonochie, has been installed in Mr. Tooth's place, and he also brings in candles and vestments.

—The death has been announced of Rev Henry Breeden, the oldest itinerant minister in connection with the United Methodist Free Churches. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1831, seceded in 1835, and was president of the U. M. F. C. Annual Assembly in 1848. He was a successful revivalist in his early days; and a few months ago he published recollections of his ministerial work.

—Mr. Muller, of the Bristol Orphanages, says, in his thirty-ninth Annual Report: "Since founding the institution we have received, simply through prayer and the exercise of faith, more than $3,920 050. Sixty-six thousand six hundred children, or grown-up persons, have been taught in the various schools, entirely supported by the funds of the institution. Ten thousand five hundred children now attend the schools."

—The Brooklyn Y. M. C. A. goes out into the highways to invite young men to its meetings. Large transparencies are carried up and down the avenue in which their beautiful rooms are located for an hour and a half before the meetings, and hundreds of young men have thus been attracted to the services. They also kept open house on New Year's day, and about 350 young men accepted their hospitable invitation.

—A general jubilee, proclaimed by the Pope, and which is to extend throughout the whole world, began March 2, and will continue until the first of June. In announcing this jubilee, his holiness says that he has been induced to proclaim it in view of the approaching anniversary of his election, and by the knowledge of how necessary to him is abundance of divine grace in the fulfillment of his missions in this time of mournful strife, while the church is laboring under such tronbious conditions. Benefits of indulgence are extended to all those who, either being in Rome or going thither, shall during that time have visited the churches of St. John Lateran, St. Peter and Santa Maria Maggiore, praying there for the prosperity of the church and of the papacy, for the extirpation of heresy, for the conversion of sinners, for the concord of Christian princes, for the peace of the faithful and for the Pope's intentions, and who shall also have followed the rules regarding fasting, alms-giving and receiving holy communion laid down by the rule of the church. Persons absent from Rome will obtain the same benefits by twice visiting the three churches in their city or parish. If there are only two churches in the parish, they must be visited three times, and if only one church, six times.

—The Scottish Free Church Missionary Society has heard from Dr. Laws and Mr. Stewart, who are on an exploring expedition on the West shore of Lake Nyassa, with the purpose of finding a better site for the mission than Livingstonia. They left Livingstonia August 12, and, after crossing the mountains westward, arrived at the village of Chikuse, head chief of the Mangones, who number 15,000 to 20,000. Chikuse was surprised at the sudden and unheralded appearance of the foreigners and was suspicious of them for some days. But before leaving him they won his friendship and an invitation to "come again." They succeeded in obtaining the release of a captive daughter of Miolo, and thus secured the friendship of two important chiefs. The people in Chiwera's district, lying north of Chikuse's, were very suspicious of the travelers, and could not understand that they had come simply as friends, and not as warriors or traders. Chiwera, however, gave them a friendly reception, and furnished them with guides north to Kotakota. His country is well watered and populous. At Kotakota they had a warm reception from Jumbe, the tyrant and great slave chief of the West Coast. He told them he had just suppressed a rebellion, led by four or five of his head men. Continuing north, the explorers visited Chipatula's capital, and succeeded in restoring peace between his people and the Mangones. Subsequently returning to Kotakota, to examine the country back from the coast, they found Jumbe in an unfriendly state of mind, and they could get no guides from him. At last accounts (October 30,) Dr. Laws and Mr. Stewart were journeying toward the northern end of the Lake.

—The Church Missionary Society has been gradually extending its work on the Niger River, in Africa, until it now has ordained missionaries at nine stations, all under the charge of Bishop Crowther, a native, whose interesting history has been so frequently told. The Society has news that the long and severe persecution at Bonny has about broken down. Archdeacon Crowther writes that the attendance on the Sabbath has run up from 110 to over 500, the chiefs having surrended so far as to allow a general invitation to divine service to be given to the people of Bonny. Mr. Crowther had labored long and earnestly with the chiefs to persuade them to cease the persecution of converts and adherents. One day he had an opportunity to address all the head chiefs together, and he noticed as a favorable sign that they were disposed to hear him patiently. After he had concluded, Oko Jumbo, the spokesman for the chiefs, said they had heard all that had been said, and it was good. There were, however, some under chiefs to be consulted; and as soon as they could be seen a favorable answer, he trusted, would be given. On the strength of this statement, the Archdeacon announced that he would summon all Bonny to the house of prayer; and the chiefs raised no objection. Some of the chiefs attend church and others have promised to come; and Mr. Crowther is of the opinion that heathenism in Bonny will soon be overthrown, and Christianity be securely established. At Brass persecution raged some years ago; but it was ended in 1876, and the king turned the large brass idols over to Bishop Crowther. The churches are well attended now, and one of the chiefs, Samso, has been married according to the rites of the church. Inquirers are frequent. The mission has now entered its eleventh year, and counts now over 1,100 worshipers of a Sunday.—Independent.

A LUNCH PARTY.

The bear went out to lunch one day
With a beautiful Maltese cat,
He carried a fan and a large bouquet,
And wore a gold band on his hat.
The lunch was ready at two o'clock,
But they didn't begin till one—
And the bear was so hungry he couldn't wait,
So she fed him with currant bun,
And sweetly she said: "If you stand on your head
I think it will add to the fun!"

The cat was dressed in her very best—
A blue-pink sewing-silk gown;
And she smiled at the bear with the kindest air,
But the cherries were baked too brown—
The cook had forgot that pepper was hot,
The clams weren't sugared at all—
The beef was left out of the blackberry pie,
And the gravy was spoilt in the hall—
So the bear said at last: "I think I shall fast!"
Though the next course was stewed rubber ball.

They talked of many and curious things,
As they sat at their lunch together—
Of fish with whiskers, and cats with wings,
Of signs of war in the weather;
He told her a tale of a cat that would sail
In an egg shell instead of a boat;
She told him another, about a bear's brother,
Who rode every day on a goat.
Then he bade her good-bye, with a tear in his eye,
As he put on his big ulster coat.

He said he would take the rest of the cake,
So he took it to eat on the way—
"I've had a nice time," he whispered in rhyme,
"I wish I could come every day!"
But the cat said: "Oh, no! it's time you should go,
You've made such a very long stay."
So he left her alone, and she yelled with a groan,
"What's left for my breakfast, I pray?
There's naught in the house but a cold pickled mouse,
And I don't care for that, I must say!
Well, well—I declare, I won't ask a bear
To come and take lunch every day!"

Westminster Abbey

Most people have heard of the grand old Abbey of Westminster, in London, and many would be glad to visit this famous historical place. I have often been there in my thoughts and dreams, and have often wished that I might really walk through its quiet aisles and chapels, when, at last, I should make a trip to Europe. And my wish was granted. It was on a November morning—one of those dark, gloomy mornings peculiar to London, that I started from my lodgings to walk to the Abbey.

After a little walk, I came in sight of Westminster Bridge, and then on the right I noticed the two tall towers of the Abbey; so I quickened my steps until I had gained the entrance door. What a change from the busy, crowded streets to this old sepulchre, and its relics of the dead! It almost made me shudder, for the interior of the building was dark and gloomy, and I saw many cold, white figures towering high above me. The original Abbey was built many, many years ago, and has been restored from time to time by the succeeding kings and queens of England, until we find it in its present condition, safe and sound, and one of the greatest objects of interest in London.

Westminster Abbey may certainly be called a tomb, for we could spend a whole day in simply counting its monuments. There were so many of these that I hardly knew which to look at first, but I thought it best to follow my own inclinations, and so, instead of procuring a guide (men with long gowns, who take visitors around and point out the objects of greatest interest,) I roamed about at my will. The first monument that attracted my attention was the venerable shrine of Edward the Confessor, in the chapel of St. Edward, once the glory of the Abbey, but which has been much defaced by persons who were desirous of obtaining a bit of stone from this famous tomb. In this chapel I saw also the old coronation chairs, in which all the reigning sovereigns of England, since Edward I, have been crowned. They are queer old fashioned chairs, made of wood, and not very comfortable, I imagine. The older of the two chairs was built to inclose the stone (which they call Jacob's pillar) brought from Scotland by Edward, and placed in this chapel. Many other interesting tombs are to be seen here, and the floor of the chapel is more than six hundred years old!

I next visited the chapel of Islip, built by the old Abbot, who dedicated it to St. John the Baptist. One very interesting monument there was to the memory of General Wolfe, who fell, you remember, at the battle of Quebec. His monument is a very beautiful piece of art. It represents him falling into the arms of one of his own soldiers, who is pointing to Glory, which comes in the shape of an angel from the clouds, holding a wreath, with which to crown the hero. A Highland sergeant looks sorrowful on the dying warrior, while two lambs sleep at his feet. The inscription reads as follows: "To the memory of James Wolfe, Major-General and Commander-in-Chief of the British land forces on an expedition against Quebec, who, after surmounting, by agility and valor, all obstacles of art and nature, was slain in the moment of victory, on the thirteenth of September, 1759. The King and Parliament of Great Britain dedicated this monument."

I now walked to the north transept, and the first monument I noticed was one erected to Sir Robert Peel, the great orator and statesman. I seated myself on an old stone bench to rest, and looking around, saw a magnificent statue of the great William Pitt, who, you may remember, was also a great statesman, and accomplished more for the glory and prosperity of England than any other statesman that ever lived. In this transept there is a beautiful window, which represents our Saviour, the twelve apostles and four evangelists. As I was sitting quietly in this secluded spot, looking up at the window, strains of solemn music reached my ear, which sounded as if they came from one of the gloomy vaults around me. I walked on to discover, if possible, whence this music came, and I saw, in the nave of the Abbey, the Dean of Westminster conducting a service, assisted by his choir boys. I seated myself until the ceremonies were over, and I thought it was a very odd place to hold church—among so many graves.

After the Dean and his choir boys had disappeared I commenced my walk again, and saw many fine old monuments. One of these was in memory of Sir Isaac Newton, and I am sure I need not tell you who he was. Prominent among the monuments in this part of the Abbey, is that to Major André, the fine young officer who was executed during our Revolutionary war.

I next visited the south transept, better known as the "Poet's Corner," which I think is the most interesting part of Westminster. A hundred and more monuments to the memory of great men can be seen here; but I can only tell you of a few of the most important. The one I thought most of is erected to the memory of William Shakespeare; although his bones repose far away in the little church at Stratford-on-Avon. Then I saw the tombs of David Garrick, the great actor and delineator of Shakespeare's characters, George Frederick Handel, the eminent composer, the author of that beautiful anthem, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," the great Milton; rare old Ben. Jonson; Edmund Spencer, author of the "Faery Queene;" and those of Southey, Dryden, Addison, Gray, Campbell and other well-known English poets.

Then, among the names of the dead of our own day, I saw those of Dickens, Bulwer, Macaulay and Dr. Livingstone.

Kings, queens, statesmen, soldiers, clergymen, authors and poets here have equal station. Some may lie under richer tombs than others, but all rest beneath the vaulted roof of Westminster Abbey, the place of highest honor that England can offer her departed sons.—St. Nicholas.

Going Home To Be Forgiven.

Some boys were playing at ball in a retired place one afternoon, when they should have been at school. They absented themselves without leave, intending to go home at the usual hour. Thus they thought their absence would not be noticed by their parents and friends.

While thus engaged Mr. Amos came along. "What are you doing here?" said he. "Your parents think you are at school; I shall let them know where you are, and what you are about."

He passed on and the boys stopped playing. What was to be done? He would be sure to tell their parents. It was too late to go to school and too early to go home. Their consultations came to no comfortable conclusions; the probabilities of punishment were talked of. Some thought they might escape, but the prospects of most of them were not promising. At length John Roberts rose up and said: "I'm going home."

"What for? to get a flogging and have it over?" said one.

"No, I'm going home to be forgiven;" and away he went.

John never played truant before. He had very kind parents, and they would deny him nothing that was for his good, and he felt that he had treated them ungratefully by acting contrary to their known wishes. He resolved to go home and make a full confession of his fault, and ask their forgiveness.

On reaching home he met his sister, several years younger than himself, to whom he told his resolution, and, like the loving sister she was, she agreed to go with her brother and ask mother to forgive.

As they came into the house they met their parents just starting out to make purchases for the house, but when the mother saw the anxious look on the children's faces she willingly waited until John had told the story of his playing truant, and then asking to be forgiven. As in the case of the Prodigal Son, the parent was as willing to forgive, if not more so, as the son was to be forgiven. John was right; it was a good thing to go home for—to be forgiven.

"For Jesus' Sake, Amen!"

In the Helping Hand Miss E. E. Johnson tells the following stories:

"I know of a little girl who promised the Lord all the paper rags she could find; and her mother told me her carpets were never so neat before, for not a scrap or ravelling escaped that rag bag. Every month the rags were sold, and the proceeds went to the Sabbath-school mission fund.

"Another little girl had the greatest dislike for sewing. She had commenced a bed-quilt, but was not likely to finish it. One day she came home from Sabbath-school burning with missionary zeal, and asking for work. "'Well, Lizzie, I'll pay you if you will piece a block every other day.'

"Poor Lizzie!' her missionary spirit threatened to depart. But finally she said, solemnly, 'Yes, grandma, I'll piece blocks, or anything else, for Jesus' sake, amen!' That bed-quilt is finished now, and there is an earnest little worker for the missions in that home."

Would that some older children who shrink from laborious and disagreeable work would get a little more of this spirit, and say, "I'll do anything for Jesus' sake, amen!"

When the evening stars come out,
On pleasant summer eves,
You can hear the little Katy did
Crying out among the leaves—
Katy did, Katy did,
She didn't, she didn't;
Katy did, she did,
No she didn't, Katy didn't.
How I wonder what they mean
In the leaves so thick and green,
What the mischief is that's hid
Which little Katy did?

Treatment of Doubt.

The disposition of religious teachers, in certain quarters, to glorify doubt, is in wide contrast with the treatment which it received from Christ and the New Testament writers. It was dealt with by them as something to be condemned—never to be excused or extenuated. Doubters may have received compassion, but certainly doubt was neither glorified nor respected by them. Peter, sinking beneath the waves, is rescued and at the same time rebuked: "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" Thomas, sincerest of doubters, is censured while he is convinced by the loving condescension of his Lord: "Jesus saith unto him: 'Thomas, because thou hast seen Me, thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed.'". There are other evidences than those of sight, and they are ample. His doubt was inexcusable, although it was graciously dispated and forgiven. The rich man who lifted up his eyes in hell, "being in torments," had been a materialist, believing in neither angel nor spirit, and his five brethren were also skeptics of the same order. "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead." They had evidences enough. "They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them." The trouble was in their indisposition to know and obey the truth. A messenger to them from the dead would have been discredited as easily as they discredited Moses and the prophets.

Christ demands faith of all, and insists that unbelief is a willful and perverse opposition to the truth. The condemnation is "that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." Nicodemus doubted—he was staggered by the mysterious and incomprehensible. "How can these things be?" Nevertheless, this is the ultimatum for him and for all: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Manifestly the doubter, clever as this one was, cannot be saved in his doubts. He must be born again. This is the cure for doubt, and this is salvation. The Jewish skeptics claim our sympathy as much as any class of unbelievers. But Christ gives them no quarter. "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life." And He announces a principle that at once sweeps away all the vindications of doubt: "If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." The will or disposition to do God's will leads to assurance and knowledge. Here is the way out of perplexity, and the means in the reach of all, of deliverance from the anguish and unrest of doubt. The want of this disposition is necessarily charged upon all phases of persistent skepticism. Doubt has a moral cause, and the doubter is responsible for it.

Paul affirms that it is "with the heart that man believeth unto righteousness." The exercise of saving faith depends upon certain moral conditions, upon the state of the heart, upon the disposition and motives. The great difficulty is not in the region of the intellect, but in the heart. Paul further admits that notwithstanding the glory and simplicity of the gospel, it is veiled to some, but the veil is upon the heart. "But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost; in whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." The gospel is veiled to the lost. Doubters doubt because they are perishing. The root of skepticism is in the lost condition—the depraved nature. There is something startling in this: "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema, maranatha." There are those who have their doubts concerning Christ—whether he is, indeed, the divine Son, the Saviour. They do not love Him, and they cannot, while this doubt is in them. It would be a hard saying, indeed, if doubt were excusable, if it be not sinful. If the heart be right, Christ will be loved. Not to love Him indicates a depraved and guilty condition.

The reproving work of the Holy Spirit has largely to do with unbelief. He reproves the world of sin, "because they believe not on Me." While in ministers of certain faiths there are apologists for doubt, and while there is a disposition in these days to make it respectable, the Holy Spirit reproves the world for it as sin. The apologetical treatment of doubt is in violent antagonism to that which it received at the hands of Christ and Paul, and is in complete opposition to the convictions which the Holy Spirit seeks to awaken. As between the platitudes of a so called liberal Christianity, and the declarations of the divine word, we need not hesitate which to choose. The effort to relieve the character of certain eminent and learned men, and to extenuate the prevailing skepticism in connection with science, have much to do with this unscriptural leniency.

The true and right treatment is that of Christ and Paul, and that of the Holy Ghost. Doubt, skepticism, unbelief, or by whatever name it be called, is sin most deep and heinous. The way out of its baneful meshes is pointed out by the gospel. If there be an honest doubter in the world, Christ has told him what to do that he may have assurance, and that he may have the witness in himself. Christ was patient with skeptics, but he was not compromising. Paul reasoned and persuaded, but to obstinate and persistent unbelief he left no hope. Men must be born again, they must believe the gospel, they must love the Lord Jesus Christ, and the plea of unwelcome and of invincible doubt will not justify them before God. The man who brings his doubts to Christ will be helped out of them. Honest study, earnest prayer and practical obedience will lead him to the light of life.

The More Earnest Heed.

A religious memory is as necessary to successful religious life as a business memory to business success. The methods by which it is to be cultivated are the same in the one as in the other. Attention is essential to the clear impression of an idea. The force of impact, rather than duration, is the measure of distinctness and permanency of impressions. This is evidently one of the truths which the apostle wishes to enforce by the words "more earnest heed."

It is the habit of many, if not of most Christians, to endeavor to find a way of softening the sharp angular presentation of truths. They are lovers of the beauty rather than of the power and sublimity of truth. They never weary of it if it present smiling vistas of the moral landscape, or stud the moral heaven with stars twinkling through azure deeps; but the lightning flash, the thunder peal, the tempest roar, are startling. The multitudes tremble as God speaks out from smoking Sinai, and ask not to hear that voice again. Let truth come more gently, that they may act more rationally and deliberately. But the angularity and force being rounded and reduced, the attention slackens and the impression is weakened. As a consequence, zeal subsides, and men are seen spending a lifetime in doing what they ought to have done in a year. The sense of urgent duty lost, even that which is done is a miserable piece of botch work. The lucid intervals of ordinary Christians may be condensed into about as many days as they live years. The remainder of their lives may be said to be a state of moral coma, or, what is little better, of half-waking dreams. They hear as in a dream. The impression of what they have heard lingers like the memory of the visions of their sleep. Ghostly phantoms everywhere, but no clearly-defined figure; or should one now and then appear as some known friend of our waking hours, it changes upon our approach into a thousand protean shapes, or vanishes altogether. "We ought to give more earnest heed."

But, no doubt, the apostle meant more than have attention in hearing. He meant by "more earnest heed" that we ought to be more particular in obeying the truths which we have heard. To be told how to do a thing is very necessary, but to carry out instructions is even more necessary to real knowledge. The former may be theory, or even science; but the latter is the real thing itself. There is no business or pursuit in life, from the highest to the lowest, that does not illustrate this truth. It does not fail in religion. "He that will do His will shall know of the doctrine." The students of religious theories can be numbered by the million; the students of the science by tens of thousands; but those who are paying "the more earnest heed" to the practice of every tenet of their faith, testing it by experiment, are found only here and there. But wherever such a one is found, he is at once seen to be an extraordinary man. The calendars of such men have no blanks—no dies non. Life past with them has not been a dead level, with only here and there a death's head or a scare-crow—a jolt or a halt to relieve the dreary monotony. Compared with the inattentive and indolent, such men have reached the age of Methuselah, and, in good to the world, have been as Abraham compared with Lot.

But the apostle furnishes an argument which appeals to ourselves and not to our benevolence. "Lest we should let them slip," means that our own memories shall suffer. Nothing is more natural than for men to forget how to do a thing which they neglect to perform; yet nothing is more common than for such men to think they can do it as well as ever. They are only undeceived when they come to try it again after long neglect. How many a professor has forgotten how to pray, and yet unconscious of the fact! How many have lost the art of loving their fellows, and yet feel insulted if you hint that they have forgotten how to love! How many think they have faith, yet, never having put it to test, are living in a land of religious air castles! They have let the things which they heard slip. There are times, no doubt, when the danger of letting things slip our memory is greater than at others; but there is danger at any time. The most dangerous time is when we are most off our guard. Many a preacher has slipped just when he was about to win the greatest triumph of his life. He had toiled, until at last success was about to reward his labors; but, thinking success assured, he lay down to rest, and, awaking in the morning, he found that the enemy had fortified. So Waterloo was lost, so Gettysburg. Many let the truths which led them to repentance slip in the joy of conversion. The great sense of duty from the terrors of the Lord slip away under his loving smiles, and the convert forgets that henceforth every new joy must spring from the discharge of the duties required of him. Clayed with the excessive bliss of first love, his goodness flies as the early dew, and he turns back to the "beggarly elements," saying that religion is a cheat.

Comparatively few ships at sea are wrecked by storms. Carelessness in port, or in time of smooth sailing to repair some slight damage, or to take some slight precaution, has left the ship unprepared for the storm. Then unable to bear the strain, she is said to have become the prey of the furious elements, when in fact she was the victim of negligence. Few Christians are crushed by calamity, or overpowered by temptation. The moral and spiritual wrecks are the work of the dry rot of sloth and silent eating of the worm neglect. Outside, when the sun shines, all seems sound and substantial, but silently the work of ruin is going on, until the storms of adversity or the burdens of responsibility press down. Then suddenly the beams give way, and the world is scandalized by the sudden fall. Religion is pronounced a fraud and a failure through the ruin of one who day by day, and year by year, let the things which he had heard slip out and away, until nothing but the shadow remained.

Letter from Dr. McFerrin.

Southern Methodist Publishing House,
Nashville, April, 1879.

Mr. Editor: Representing, as you do, a large and important portion of the church in the South, I judge a few lines from Nashville will not be unacceptable to your readers. Well, "from the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." A man is apt to speak and write of that that interests him most, and I believe it is well understood that unless a man becomes absorbed in what engages his mind he will not likely succeed. As you might suppose, the Publishing House is the absorbing question with me. And, moreover, I am inclined to think that it is now the question with the church. I mean, of course, the material question. The spiritual always takes precedent with the real lovers of Christ and His cause. Do you ask how we are progressing here? How about the bonds and the business of the House? Are you likely to sell the bonds? Will you save the House? Could it be successfully run if the debts were paid, or the plan completed which you propose to carry out? These are important questions, and should be answered when an answer is requested. Our people have a right to know all about the Publishing House, for it is their property.

Well, we are progressing very well in procuring subscribers for our four per cent. bonds, and I think we will succeed in this department of the work. We hope to finally carry out the purpose of her agent and the committee, and the plan endorsed by all the Conferences. Second, the business of the House is very satisfactory. Our periodicals are going well. The Christian Advocate is gaining subscribers all the time, and our Sunday-school papers are having a wider circulation every week. We are selling books more and more every month, and if God will smile upon us, and we have co-operation of the church, the whole church, the church in every part of the connection, we are obliged to succeed.

Our new publications are finding favor. The Quarterly Conference Record, the Sunday-School Record, the Church Register, two sizes, are very highly approved. Our new Sunday-school song book, "New Life," is just coming in three forms, with round notes, patent notes, and in a pamphlet form without notes. The book is said to be the best yet issued from the Publishing House. It will be offered at low rates: $30 per hundred for the book with notes, $10 per hundred for the book without the music. Surely this will be considered cheap when you come to see the size, style and matter of the book. We will send a copy of each within a few days.

Tell your readers that every person who subscribes for a bond, who takes the Christian Advocate, subscribes for our Sunday-school papers, or buys a book, gets value received, and helps his own church with contributions. Why will we send off for church literature when we have at home plenty and better than we can get elsewhere?—our grand old Hymn Book, our periodicals, commentaries, sermons, histories, catechisms, Sunday-school libraries, made up with great care; in a word, our catalogue, with its hundreds of charming books. Let the eyes of the whole church turn to our Publishing House. Sustain it, and it will sustain and help the church. We pay as we go, and create no new debts.

J. B. McFerrin, Agent.

Here and There.

—By proclamation of the Governor a rigid quarantine goes into operation from and after April 30, for the protection of New Orleans and other ports of Louisiana against yellow fever. We quote from the proclamation as follows:

I, Francis T. Nicholls, Governor of the State of Louisiana, have thought proper to issue this my proclamation, declaring that all vessels arriving from and after the thirtieth day of April, 1879, from the following locations, to-wit:

"All West India ports, all ports along the Gulf of Mexico south of Texas, including the bay islands, Ruatan, Utilla and Bonaca, all ports along the mainland bordering on the Carabian Sea, all ports along the Atlantic Coast of South America as far as the city of Buenos Ayres."

All of which shall be subject to quarantine, and that their officers, crews, passengers and cargoes arriving from the above named places, or having touched or stopped at any of them, shall be subject to a quarantine of twenty (20) days.

And I do hereby direct the proper officers at the Quarantine Station to rigidly enforce the execution of this proclamation, and any violation of the laws of this State on this subject matter to be vigorously prosecuted."

—The Louisiana Lottery Company have brought the matter before the United States Circuit Court, in the form of an application for an injunction. Thomas J. Semmes, Esq., the counsel for the company, delivered an elaborate argument, in which he made a statement wide of the truth. In vindicating the lottery from the charge of immorality he said:

Talk about morality. Talk about the morality of the lottery company or the lottery business. Who can undertake to say that it is immoral?

Suppose there was no law upon the subject, one way or the other. Can any one predicate of the fact, of the establishment of a lottery, that it is immoral or unlawful? Who will undertake to say it? Is there an institution, religious, charitable or otherwise, that has not engaged in lottery schemes to accomplish the purposes for which it was created? The purpose to which money realized from lottery schemes is to be applied does not impart character to the act. Is there any State in the Union that has not authorized lottery schemes? Has not the government of the United States authorized them? The celebrated case of Clarke against the City of Washington, 12 Wheaton, was a suit upon a lottery ticket issued by the City of Washington, under the sanction of the United States, for the purpose of raising money for improvements.

Can any man say that this charter of the lottery company is in its nature immoral? Lottery schemes are not improper upon any other principle than that they are forbidden by the public policy of a State, that policy being determined by each State for itself. The mere establishment of a lottery is not a matter of absolute right or wrong. It is not a case that theologians and jurists would pronounce malum in se, but it is or may be what is called malum prohibitum.

Therefore, the act of selling lottery tickets is an act of which no man can predicate that it is immoral in the manner that you can of an act of murder, of theft, of robbery, acts which are forbidden by the laws of nature and the laws of God.

The statement: "Is there an institution, religious, charitable or otherwise, that has not engaged in lottery schemes to accomplish the purposes for which it was created?" Mr. Semmes is known to be a zealous Roman Catholic, and we can account for his language on that ground. As applied to Roman Catholic institutions, "religious, charitable or otherwise," we presume it is true that the most of them have engaged in lottery schemes, and in other schemes quite as objectionable, but among Protestant denominations it is not common, and among some of them it is wholly unknown. The lottery among Protestants is a thing condemned. We know of no church that endorses or commends it. The question in regard to the States authorizing lotteries is sophistical. Whatever they have done in the past, the lottery is now prohibited in nearly every State in the Union. Intelligent religious convictions are everywhere against it, and the public opinion of the whole country, in all the States, is against it. The tendency of it is evil and only evil. The legality of the repeal of the Lottery Bill is a question that we do not undertake to discuss. It may be that the courts will decide against the repeal, but it will be on other grounds than the morality and beneficence of the institution.

—The Brooklyn laymen have been in council, and have given expression to their views respecting the limitation of the pastorate. It was in the Southern General Conference, of 1866, that the pastoral limitation was repealed, but after sleeping over the matter, on the next day, the present four years law was adopted. Our Bishops were understood to be strongly opposed to the measure, and it may be that the Conference reconsidered its action out of deference to their convictions. The Brooklyn meeting was addressed by John Truslow, Judge Enoch L Fancher, and by Dr. Wheeler, editor of the Methodist. The following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, The policy of the Methodist Episcopal Church, from the beginning, has been to adapt itself to the varied needs of the work; and it has accordingly modified its rules from time to time; and

Whereas In our opinion it has become manifest, by the experience of the church, that the limitation of the time during which a preacher may continue upon one circuit or station prevents in many cases the highest efficiency of the ministers and the greatest welfare of the churches; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That the itineracy of the ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church is a system which has been productive of great good, and that, because of the good heretofore realized, as well as of our conviction of its power for good in the future, we deem that it should be cherished and guarded with zealous care.

2. That the essential condition of the itineracy is that the preachers be subject to assignment by the appointing power to the work for which they shall be required, and to transfer to other work when such transfer appears to be for the best interest to the general church.

3. That a limitation of the length of service either assumes that it can never be for the interest of the general church to have any preacher remain at one work longer than for the time limited; or else that while the appointing power can be trusted to determine in what cases preachers may be reappointed to the extent of the time limited, that power cannot be trusted to reappoint beyond such limit—either of which we deny.

4. That although a preacher is never appointed for more than one year (and even then subject to change,) it has come to be recognized, in a certain sense, that the time of a preacher for a place is three years, and this often operates injuriously to church and preacher by preventing a change, which otherwise would better be made at the end of one or two years.

5. That there are other cases, not so frequent as those last referred to, in which it would be greatly for the benefit of the church to continue the preacher for more than—the three years, and we believe that there can be no evil to be apprehended from such continuance if due care be used. That a longer time than three years in the work of some of the preachers serving as editors, book agents, secretaries and otherwise is already deemed politic, is seen by the provisions of the Discipline for longer terms in those cases, and without limit of repeated renewal.

6 That the annual review of the churches and preachers and assignment of the preachers to the work for which they are severally best suited is an admirable system, and very much better than the settled ministry of other denominations; but we deem that some safeguards are desirable, not by a limitation of time, which makes a sort of arbitrary prejudgment, but rather by some disciplinary provision distinctly asserting the policy of the itinerancy, and against any presumption of a right of a preacher to reappointment.

The movement will find favor in the large cities, but elsewhere it will probably meet with such opposition as to prevent any change for a long time to come. The men capable of long pastorates are few, while the most of them can serve three years with some degree of efficiency. A limitation may be injurious to some of the wealthier churches in the cities, but this may be compensated by the greater general effectiveness. The itinerancy must be taken for better or worse. Sometimes it is worse, but better on the whole.

—The time for church fairs, socialables and other entertainments is upon us. Everybody seems to be poor, and money is needed for repairs, Sunday-schools, missions, and hence these expedients. Let our friends take care. Love-feasts, class and prayer-meetings and revivals are apt to suffer when fun and frolic invade the sanctuary. We doubt the utility of these methods, or of any methods other than direct appeals based upon the merits of the interests to be subserved. Be careful and vigilant.

—We learn by telegram that Gen. Richard Taylor died in New York on Saturday, April 12. He was the son of Gen. Zachary Taylor, and was among the most distinguished of the Confederate officers in the late war. He was a native of Baton Rouge, La., and was sixty-two years of age. The last few years he has been living in New York, and has been lately engaged in writing a book on the war. He was a vigorous and entertaining writer, a brave and capable soldier, a devoted patriot, and a public-spirited citizen. He was a worthy son of the hero of Buena Vista, and his career was scarcely less illustrious than that of his honored father.

—In a note from Rev. J. E. Newman, written from Limeria, Province Sao Paulo, Brazil, February 25, 1879, he says:

"I am to go to Pirlucaba in two months, where my daughters are to start a school. We desire to make it the beginning of missionary work in that town, and hope that the Board of Missions in May will make arrangements at once for sending us a missionary for that town. Bro. Ransom and myself will raise here in this country thirty-five per cent. of his salary, and he can come here at very little cost. Bro. Ransom has explained all this in a letter to Nashville. Pray for us, that God may guide and sustain us in all our work."

—In congressional affairs nothing of importance has happened during the past week. The Army Bill is now being debated in the Senate. In the House the committees have been announced, and general legislation seems to have been determined on. The extra session promises to be a long one. Whether the President will veto the appropriation bills, with the amendments, is the question which chiefly engages the attention of political circles at this time. We must wait to see what Mr. Hayes will do.

—Rev. J. D. Harper, presiding elder of Opelousas district, Louisiana Conference, in a note of April 9, reports his district in a hopeful condition. Bro. Picot, the French missionary, is zealously at work, and doing well. The District Conference meets at Vermilionville, June 26.

Cause for Solicitude.

We refer to the destitution which prevails among Methodists in regard to our church literature. The comparatively meager sales by our Publishing House for the past few years, and the limited circulation of our church papers, tell the story. The opportunities of observation which we have had for a good while have impressed us with the conviction that this destitution is truly alarming, and that our traveling preachers should make a united and vigorous effort to relieve it. We emphasize the circulation of our weekly religious papers, because they will help to awaken interest and promote the sale of our books. Our people will never be alive to connectional affairs until they read and inform themselves. We commend the following suggestive note from Dr. Linfield, of the Mississippi Conference:

"Dr. Linus Parker: Our preachers in working the plan suggested are coming to the knowledge that some of our most prominent men and influential families in the church do not take any church paper—are not readers of our Advocate. This accounts for so much waste of talk over church interests in which, what is taken for granted, having been discussed in the Advocate, was not read. We shall continue to suffer loss while this lack of interest endures.

"What measure of success our efforts may have in enlarging the circulation of the Advocate time will show, but our solicitude enlarges with the discovery that so many of the children of our best families are leaving out the current information of church affairs and progress from their course of education. This is not an encouraging view. I believe that one of the best aids to family government is the provision of an ample supply of good periodical literature for the children. It facilitates their education, supports authority, endorses and enforces obedience, enlightens the minds and improves the manners amazingly. How can a good conscience be preserved with the exclusion, under whatsoever pretense, of the ADVOCATE from the family. Yours truly,

W. E. M. LINFIELD."

HAZLEHURST, Miss., April 6, 1879.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate, of April 9, says:

The St. John's Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the western part of the city, having been freed from debt, repaired, improved and beautified, was last Sunday re-opened, and solemnly dedicated to the worship of Almighty God. Bishop McTyeire delivered the dedicatory sermon, judging from what we saw and heard, made a profound impression on the minds of the large audience in atteudance. This, with the attendant exercises—a sacramental service and a Sunday-school celebration—made up the public exercises of the day. Very large amounts of money have been expended on that and the new Centenary church buildings, and very imposing and elegant structures they are.

The other churches of our denomination in the city are, so far as we know, going on peacently and with more or less prosperity.

Touching the colored exodus from the South the same paper says:

Very respectable papers, such as the St. Louis Presbyterian, assert that copies of the following circular have been extensively circulated in Mississippi and Louisiana:

("Strictly Private.)

ATTENTION, COLORED MEN!

OFFICE OF

COLORED COLONIZATION SOCIETY,

"Topeka, Kansas, Feb. —, 1879.

"Your brethren and friends throughout the North have observed with painful solicitude the outrages heaped upon you by your rebel masters, and are doing all they can to alleviate your miseries and provide for your future happiness and prosperity. President Hayes, by his iniquitous Southern policy, has deserted you, while the Democrats, who now have control of congress, will seek to enslave you if you remain in the South, and, to protect you from their designs, the Colonization society has been organized by the government to provide land by each head of a family, which will be given in bodies of one hundred and sixty acres, gratuitously. This land is located in the best portion of Kansas, in close proximity to Topeka, and is very productive. Here there are no distinctions in society; all are on an equality. Leave the land of oppression and come to free Kansas.

"LYCURGUS P. JONES, President."

"Show this circular to none but colored men, and keep its contents a secret."

The Presbyterian states further:

"Many of them are wholly without means and are provided for here and forwarded to their destination. Some of them have money, but claim to be as poor as the others, until they are compelled to disgorge by their colored entertainers, who tell them to their face that they lie.

"With the propensity to lie, which is characteristic of human nature, and is particularly strong in negroes, these immigrants, both of their own motion and being tutored thereto, tell dismal stories of oppression and persecution at the hands of their recent white neighbors—which stories, arousing sympathy, are pecuniary profitable, and furnish much capital to clerical and other demagogues."

And adds:

"Of course the poor creatures are duped. Some of them have discovered this, and have written to their white friends in the South asking help to return home. All of them will be similarly enlightened when they reach their journey's end."

We have no doubt the above gives the true explanation of the movement, and it is almost certain that these deluded negroes will soon look back to these Southern homes as a heaven upon earth in comparison with what they will find in the Northwest.

A Proposition Bro. Patterson—A Watch.

BRO. PARKER: Our Bro. Patterson, who is doing such a noble work for God and the church in Mexico, has been "in peril of robbers." In making one of his important and dangerous missionary tours he was robbed on the highway. He did not lose much money, having but little with him. But he lost his watch—a father's present. Money can hardly compensate such a loss. It possesses a value beyond any ordinary monied expression. Still as approaching compensation, and as an expression of appreciation of the man and the work, I desire to unite a few friends with me in presenting him with another. I submit, therefore, the following proposition: I will be one of thirty to give $5 for the purchase of a watch, to be sent to Bro. Patterson as soon as the matter can be consummated. Please begin the roll, and let the church know when the amount is secured. Enclosed find my $5. I suggest that the money be sent to you, and, when the whole amount is in hand, to be turned over to Bishop Keener, to make and forward the purchase.

Very respectfully,

JOEL T. DAVES.

Note by the Editor.—We will gladly receive contributions to this fund, and the ADVOCATE will be one to add $5 to it. Our worthy missionary ought to have a good watch, and we hope the needful amount will be soon in hand.

Rev. J. L. Futrell, writing from Greenville, Miss., April 8, says:

"BRO. PARKER: We are in our meeting now, which grows in interest every night since Friday. The wickedness here is appalling. You have doubtless read, ere this, of the fiendish assassination last week—a man butchered in his bed. It was so horrible that business was paralyzed. A large house told me to-night: 'We have not sold twenty five cents' worth since it was known.' But this is only one outbreak of the rottenness within. For as small a place, I never heard so much as here. Then you may know how glad the Christians are to see such encouragement. We have had two professions. We look on these as an earnest of what God is preparing to do for us. We earnestly ask all your readers to pray for us. Doctor, come to our District Conference, May 16. Methodism needs the stimulus of the presence of many here. All who can, come."

Our Methodist Sunday-School Union of New Orleans held its thirty-third anniversary at four P. M., Sunday, April 13, at the St. Charles Avenue Church. The exercises were under the direction of S. K. Russ, president of the Union, and were very gratifying. The house was filled with the children, their teachers, and the people. The floral decorations about the pulpit and altar were profuse and tasteful, and the singing and Scripture readings by the several schools were adapted to Easter Sunday, and very well done. There were several recitations by the pupils, and Prof. Nicholson, of the State University, Baton Rouge, delivered a lively and appropriate address to the young people. On the whole, it was one of the most interesting anniversaries of the Union that we have witnessed for years.

Fayette, Mississippi

MR. EDITOR: Our church has lost four faithful members during the present year, all of whom have died of pneumonia—Miss Sarah Stokes died January 9; Mrs. P. M. Adair died March 1; Mrs. Eliza Folkes died March 27; Mr. John W. Scott, president of the Board of Stewards of this circuit, died April 3. The last three were sisters and brother; and all sleep within ten feet of each other. Obituaries will appear soon.

Your brother,

D. P. BRADFORD, Pastor.

APRIL 8, 1879.

An appreciative subscriber from Vernon, La., writes: "As a new subscriber of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, I am happy highly to recommend the ADVOCATE as a superior paper. I have carefully examined the ADVOCATE, and I have compared it with publications of like character, and am deeply impressed with its superiority, and I hope it will everywhere meet with the appreciation it so much deserves. I hope every reader of this paper will read it to their neighbors, and invite them to subscribe."

A flower mission entertainment will be given by the Little Girl's Mite Society, at the second mission, corner Laurel and Pleasant streets, New Orleans, on Thursday, April 17, at half-past seven o'clock P. M. We hope our young friends may have a pleasant and profitable time. Complimentary tickets duly received.

We were mistaken in saying that Rev. James E. Cobb was sick at Monroe, La. He is at the residence of Col. Standifer, in Treuton. A note from Rev. James L. Wright, April 6, informs us that Bro. Cobb was better at that time, though still quite sick. We hope soon to hear of his complete restoration to health.

Books and Periodicals.

LECTURES ON ASTRONOMY AND KINDRED SUBJECTS, based upon the electric theory, the motion of the heavenly bodies; the polarity of the earth; the inclination of the poles; all atmospheric phenomena; together with the development and growth of animals and plants accounted for upon the principle of electric attraction and repulsion. By H. T. Kavanaugh, M. D. D. D. Cincinnati: Printed by Hitchcock & Walden for the author, 1879.

This is a handsomely printed pamphlet of 95 pages, containing seven lectures on which the learned author elaborates "the electric theory." The lectures contain a great deal of curious and useful information, and the theory is sustained by a large army of scientific facts. Whether true or not, it is invested with a degree of probability, and is an ingenious speculation it is well worth study. The topics treated are seen in the following titles of the lectures: 1. Brief Sketch of the History of Astronomy. 2. Electricity and its Forces the Motor Power of the Solar System. 3. The Effects of Electricity on Men and Animals. 4. The Influence of Electricity on the Atmosphere and the Growth of Plants. 5. The Study of God and Nature. 6. The Moon and Lightnings—The Offices and Influences. 7 Animal Magnetism—The Sexes—God's Nature.

—The Theological and Homiletic Monthly for April is before us. It contains the following articles: The Dogma of Immortality; The Agnostic Lament—Christian Union; Ministerial Power—the Assurance of a Divine Call; Missionary Pastors—Missionary Review; The Text; Sermon Outline; The Mission of the Church to the Poor—a sermon by Rev. J. E. Edwards, D. D.; Exposition of Matthew xv, 24-26, by Rev. J. D. Blackwell; Editorial Miscellany. This is the second number of this publication, and every article in it is capital. We heartily wish all our preachers and laymen, too, would take it. Rev. R. N. Stedd, D. D., publisher, Richmond, Va. Price, $2 50 per annum.

—The Preacher and Homilectic Monthly for April is an excellent number of this valuable magazine.

—Le sure Hours is the title of a very entertaining monthly published by J. L. Pallen & Co., New York. Price, $1 a year. We have received the April number.

—Our Sunday-school periodicals for April have been received. Among them is the Sunday-School Quarterly, containing the lessons for the second quarter. This preparation of the lessons for three months in advance is a great convenience, and, we believe, is giving general satisfaction. The Magazine, Visitor and Little People are up to the usual standard of excellence.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To those disposed to economize this popular hotel offers an opportunity seldom found at so thoroughly a first class house, having reduced its rates to $3 and $3 50 per day.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO sell chamber sets, white stone, $3; fancy, $5; dinner sets, white stone, 12; semi-china, $16 and $18; china, 124 pieces, $25.

CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS.—Messrs. Wheeler & Pierson, 13 and 15 Camp street, are offering fine black cloth suits and business suits at very low rates. We know of no better concern to do business with.

ICE.—William Myers, Ninth St., between Magazine and Constance streets, is one of the best men in New Orleans to his line, to do business with. Families supplied at liberal rates. See advertisement.

COMPOUND OXYGEN.—This new treatment is endorsed by some of the most eminent gentlemen as wonderful in the cure of all chronic diseases. See advertisement on the sixth page.

FITS AND EPILEPSY.—One thousand dollars is offered by Dr. H. G. Root, 113 Pearl street, New York, if he cannot cure or benefit patients troubled with the above.

STATE BANK.—We direct the attention of our readers to the statement of the condition of the above reliable bank, which appears in another column of the ADVOCATE. The exhibit is one that reflects credit on the management.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ARTIST.—Our readers should bear in mind that our old friend, W. W. Washburn, is at his old place, corner Exchange Alley and Canal street. To those wanting a faithful likeness, call and see him. He employs the very best talent that this country produces.

LADY AGENTS WANTED.—If there are any of our lady readers out of employment or any who may want to add to their income, we would suggest to them to correspond with Madame Griswold, 21 East Sixteenth street, New York. By reference to the seventh page you will see the nature of her business.

CARPETS, MATTINGS, OIL CLOTHS, ETC.—Messrs. Elkin & Co., 100 Canal street, are in receipt of a very fine assortment of the above goods, all new patterns, which they are selling at greatly reduced prices. This is one of the best houses in this country to do business with. Call and get a bargain.

STOVES.—Buck's Brilliant Stoves give universal satisfaction wherever used. Country and city people should examine them before purchasing elsewhere, as the prices offered are very low. For sale by H. Haller, a gentleman we have known for years, and one of our most popular merchants.

STATIONERY, PRINTING AND LITHOGRAPHING.—Get your stationery, printing and lithographing done at J. S. Rivers', 91 Camp street.

INDIAN TURNIP PECTORAL BALM is the best remedy for coughs, colds and asthma. Depot, 23 Elysian Fields street.

DR. TUFT'S PILLS.—The best pills extant for the liver. See advertisement on last page. For sale everywhere.

TRUNKS.—If you want a bargain in trunks call on S. Baum, 551 Magazine street, the best place in the city to get them at. See advertisement on seventh page.

MR. M. H. APPLEGATE, at 146 Poydras street, will fill any orders for plumbing, and has for sale cooking ranges, boilers, etc. For work requiring careful attention and reliable workmanship, we recommend him to our readers as the best in New Orleans. Country orders, for all goods in his line, will have prompt attention.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL BOOKS.—If you wish to learn some of those beautiful songs of Moody, Sankey or Bliss if you wish a Bible of any style in binding, with notes or without notes, if you desire to study the Holy Gospel and need a concordance or Bible dictionary, if you need catechisms, hymn-books, class-books, rewards, motoes, church or Sunday-school literature of any kind go or send to G. T. Lathrop, Esq., 112 Camp street, and you will get them. This is the largest and most complete book depository in the Gulf States.

NECESSITIES AND LUXURIES.—If you want the best furniture at the most reasonable of rates go to the corner of Poydras and Camp streets and call on B. M. & B. J. M'grumery. If in the country, send your orders and they will be most strictly and fairly filled. Everything in their line, from the necessary breakfast table to the fulfillment of the most pathetic taste in house furnishings, can be found in this large and well known house. No customer will complain of inattention. Try them and see.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

POZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER is acknowledged by thousands of ladies who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not roughen the skin, chap, blister, or leave black spots in the pores. Mothers can safely use it on infants who become chafed with a surety of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot, 617 North Sixth street, St. Louis (Lindell Hotel.)

One thing on which the Doctors all agree.

Doctors disagree about a great many things but they are all of one mind regarding Cod Liver oil, as the only thing to prescribe when the enfeebled system refuses to absorb and assimilate any other kind of nourishment, whatever may be the cause of the patient's lack of vital force. Whether it is consumption, scrofula or the general debility so often following malarial fever; this peculiar form of food is the only known agent that rarely fails to invigorate the blood and solidify the tissues of the body, and speedily averts the dreaded process of decay. Yet people turn from this benefficent means of preserving life, because of its repulsive taste. Thousands will rejoice to know that all its valuable qualities are not only preserved but multiplied in a palatable mixture of Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda.

A Fact that ought to be well Known.

The liver is the pendulum of the human clock, and when it is not in healthy action the other organs of the body are more or less affected, and disease the consequence. Use Maguire's Cundurango and it will regulate the liver, cleanse the blood, open the bowels and renovate the entire system.

An Extended Popularity.—Each year finds "Brown's Bronchial Troches" in new localities, in various parts of the world. For relieving Coughs, Colds and Throat Diseases, the Troches have been proved reliable.

HONESTY is the best policy in medicine as well as in other things. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA is a genuine preparation of that unequalled spring medicine and blood purifier, decidedly superior to the poor imitations heretofore in the market. Trial proves it.

STRAWBERRIES.—It is a well-known fact that but very few of the hundreds of famous (famous in the eyes of their originators, and perhaps deservedly so) strawberries are of any value to the general cultivator.

There is no fruit or vegetable I have ever grown, that location and soil made as much difference with, as the strawberry, and there are but very few varieties out of five hundred and over that I have tested that can bring up to near the standard claimed for them by the originator of their productiveness.

Most of the new varieties are sent out on size and merit. I never yet have seen a very large berry that was very productive or very nice. The year that the Charles Downing was sent out, I secured ten new varieties and it was all that I fruited for more than two years. The next season we had twenty and did not keep any; the next thirty, and not one was up to the Downing, so they all went under; the next season I only tried ten that originated outside of our own grounds, and over one hundred of our own seedlings, and only retained our No. 10, and G. S. was the first berry that with us was as profitable as the Wilson's Albany, that we discarded when I took the Downing and it; the No. 10 is only good under favorable circumstances; it needs a heavy loam and an abundance of potash, and then it is a hard berry to beat for a late market berry.

In 1876 we tried fifty more varieties of our own and others, and only retained the Monarch of the West and the Eclipse. I think the Monarch will push the Downing hard—like it, any soil will do, and the richer, the more and the better the fruit, if the vines are kept properly thinned; being more firm and ripening its crop quicker, it will suit many who want to ship some distance better than Downing, and is a better flavored berry, though not so productive withal.

Much damage has been done to strawberry cultivation, and the old and best varieties, by not using plants for new plantations grown on new plantations.

Vines that have borne a crop of berries are in poor condition to produce good new plants. I am told that the time has been, when if a person had good plants and good land they were sure of a good crop of berries. It was before my experience. The first 1,000 strawberry plants I ever set, after nursing them all summer, and fighting several different kinds of insects, I had sixty plants left in the fall.—Massachusetts Plowman.

HOW GREAT HOGS ARE FATTENED.—Carter and Southard have reduced the business of pork-raising to a science. The former, intent upon taking the palm, started off with thirty-nine hogs. Upon twenty-seven of these he bases his hopes of success. Of the original number several have been killed. In January three of them came so very near choking to death that the farmer grew frightened and slaughtered them. They weighed 708, 817 and 738 pounds, respectively. The hogs entered for the prize have had the very best of care. There are just two events in the lives of such hogs—sleeping and eating. They are too fat even to waddle. They never wake up, except to eat, and that process over they again stretch out upon clean straw in their separate pens. These particular hogs of Mr. Carter's were too lazy even to feel themselves, and, indeed, even if they were not, they could not see their food. For weeks they had been in total blindness. Like the average hog of no particular distinction, they all had eyes, but three inches and a half of feminine fat kept them closed completely. The feeding process is one of interest to both hog and spectator. The farm hand rolls up boiled meal into round balls and forces it into their hogship's mouths. The hogs grunt and swallow, and keep it up until they are perfectly gorged. They are kept in a stuffed condition on the best of meal, and all that is asked of them is to grow fat. Southard has not killed yet. He began the year with twenty blue hogs, all Jersey reds, but his pens now contain but twenty-three. There they were, lying around, grunting, and puffing, and with snouts pointing upward in search of air. Their eyes could not be seen, and it took strong fingers to pry away the masses of fat so that the hidden organs of sight could be opened out. The blind, helpless masses were shaken by loud breathing, and occasionally would give vent to a short, but they seemed entirely unable to get upon their feet.—Burlington (New Jersey,) Letter to Philadelphia Times.

DOGS VS. SHEEP.—Hon. L. L. Polk, Commissioner of Agriculture for North Carolina, in his last annual report, states that in seventy-eight counties of that State, from which he had received reports, there were 111,039 dogs, and an average of one dog to every three sheep. The number of sheep destroyed by these dogs during the past year was 38,181, about 8,000 more than were destroyed by disease.

We have no statistics on the subject in Alabama, but we guess that we have more dogs and fewer sheep than they have in North Carolina; probably a dog for every sheep in the State. We heard an intelligent gentleman, one who had some experience in keeping dogs, estimate that a dog, properly fed, would consume as much as an able bodied field hand. This same gentleman, Hon. Lymon W. Martin, of Russell county, introduced a bill into the last legislature, requiring the owner of every dog to take out a license for keeping him. The bill, however, failed, so all dog laws will fail in Alabama, until the sheep can outvote the dog. As we have before said, the sheep-raisers must be a law unto themselves in this matter. Lead pills or arsenic are the best cures for sheep-killing dogs.—Alabama Farm Journal.

DRAINAGE.—To drain a depression in a field where a clayey or hard pan subsoil prevents the sinking of rain water, and the lay of the land is unfavorable for the ordinary modes of drainage, first dig a hole, as if for a well, through the impervious stratum, at the bottom hollow; fill it up to the brim with stone scows, remove the excavated earth so as to allow the surface water free access to the pit, and standing water will never injure the grass or grain crop in that part of the field.

FISH CAKES.—Take the fish left from the dinner, put it in your chopping tray, being careful that there are no bones in it; chop fine. Pare and boil potatoes enough to have twice the quantity of potatoes that you have fish. When cooked, turn them into the tray with the fish; mash fine and make into cakes about the size of an egg. Flour the outside lightly; have the fat boiling hot, and fry a light brown. The fat should be half lard and half side pork. Have the slices of pork a nice brown, and serve with the fish cakes.

HONEY PUDDING.—Three pints finely sliced apples, one pint honey, one pint flour, one pint cornmeal, small piece butter, one teaspoonful soda, the juice of two lemons and their grated rinds; sift the dry soda into the honey, then add the apples, melted butter and a little salt; now add the lemon rind and juice and at once stir in the flour. Bake one hour. Serve hot or cold with sauce.

CURE FOR HURTS OR COLIC IN HORSES.—From one to three tablespoonfuls of chloroform with from one-half to one pint of castor oil, and the combination will act like magic. The chloroform not only destroys or kills the hot, but relaxes the system, rendering the castor oil more powerful in the expulsion. I have never known a horse or mule to die with colic or hots with this remedy, even if colic exist independent of their presence, which I much doubt.

No plow should be put into the ground until the soil is dry. When a spadeful of earth thrown down crumbles into a loose mellow heap, the plows may be started, but not while the spade comes out of the ground smeared and soiled. A few days' delay is better than being a day too soon. The first in the field is often the last at harvest

Scientific.

—A late number of the American Naturalist has a beautifully illustrated article on "Cross-fertilization in Flowers," from the pencil and pen of Prof. J. E Todd. The plants chosen for representation are Iris, Martynia, Pentstemon and Lobelia. The behavior of the Pentstemon, as detailed here, is the most novel of the set, that of the others having been before placed on record. The weak points in the argument, as in many similar ones connected with this subject of cross fertilization, is that from the structure it is inferred that insects must do so and so, and that so and so must be the behavior and the effect on the plant. But it is on record by many competent observers that these assumed certainties do not always follow. In the case of Lobelia, for instance, where, on account of the proterandrous character in connection with structure, it is assumed that the flower cannot avail itself of its own pollen or any pollen without insect aid, it is now well known that they do seed freely without such agency. At least, they do seed freely when all the winged insects are excluded; and if any help them, it must be small thrips or such like minute insects, which, though they may aid a flower to get its own pollen, or even the pollen of its near neighbors, do nothing toward that true cross-fertilization as demanded for utility by Mr. Darwin. The whole subject is as curious as it is interesting.

—At a late meeting of the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia, Dr. Isaac Norris presented and described a new form of microphone, devised by himself, in which he employs a cylinder of wood or other light material, about three seconds in diameter and four seconds long, placed horizontally, over either end of which is stretched a membrane, forming two diaphragms. To the center of one of the diaphragms is attached a silk thread, which passes over a small pulley, and has suspended at its end a metal cone with a carbon point. This cone is made hollow, in order that its weight may be adjusted by adding small shot. Directly under the cone is placed a carbon rod, adjustable perpendicularly, so as to secure a very delicate contact. The electric circuit is completed through it, the cone and a Bell telephone. This instrument is very sensitive to sound, and, with a stethoscope connected with the cylinder by means of a flexible tube, was designed to aid in the study of the sounds of the heart and lungs.

—The idea that the cocoons of insects protect the chrysalis from frost has been combatted by M. Jousset de Bellesme, who claims that the cocoon serves to protect insects from observation—i. e., that it is a case of protective mimicry. He thinks that in no case does the cocoon serve to protect the insect from low temperature, since even in the middle of winter the air enclosed in the interior was found to be of exactly the same temperature as the surrounding air. But if the pupa resists congelation, it does it by virtue of a continuous and considerable disengagement of heat.

—Prof. Henry Morton, of the Stevens' Institute, pleasantly suggests the utilization of phosphorescence as a means of producing light. He says if we could paint our walls with such a body it would, "as it were, absorb light during the day, and then emit it during the night; and it would only be necessary to have curtains to draw over our luminous walls at night to shut out their light when necessary, just as we now draw curtains over our windows in the day-time. By painting the outside of houses with the same material all need of street lamps would be avoided."

Cathartic Pills

Combine the choicest cathartic principles in medicine, in proportions accurately adjusted to secure activity, certainty and uniformity of effect. They are the result of years of careful study and practical experiment, and are the most effectual remedy yet discovered for diseases caused by derangement of the stomach, liver, and bowels, which require prompt and effectual treatment. AYER'S PILLS are specially applicable to this class of diseases. They act directly on the digestive and assimilative processes, and restore regular healthy action. Their extensive use by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, is one of the many proofs of their value as a safe, sure, and perfectly reliable purgative medicine. Being compounded of the concentrated virtues of purely vegetable substances, they are positively free from calomel, or any injurious properties, and can be administered to children with perfect safety.

AYER'S PILLS are an effectual cure for Constipation or Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Foul Stomach and Breath, Dizziness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Numbness, Biliousness, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Gripes, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.

As a Dinner Pill they have no equal.

While gentle in their action, these PILLS are the most thorough and searching cathartic that can be employed, and never give pain unless the bowels are inflamed, and then their influence is healing. They stimulate the appetite and digestive organs; they operate to purify and enrich the blood, and impart renewed health and vigor to the whole system.

EDUCATIONAL.

Centenary Institute,

AN institution of learning, located at Summerfield Alabama, was founded by the Alabama Conference and commenced operations in 1842, and has been in successful operation ever since. The Institute has two departments, male and female.

The buildings are of brick, large and elegant, sufficient to accommodate two hundred and fifty pupils. This is to notify all concerned that the Trustees intend, at their next annual meeting, June 24, to lease the building for five years to any person or persons competent to run the Institution in the interest of a church school.

Persons desiring further information will correspond with me at Summerfield, Ala.

A. H. MITCHELL, President Board of Trustees.

Summerfield, Ala., March 14, 1879.

Woodville Female Seminary.

A NON-SECTARIAN ACADEMY, UNDER the supervision of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Mississippi Conference; Hon. E. McGehee, President of Board of Trustees. For Thoroughness of Instruction, healthfulness, cheapness, and many other advantages, is not surpassed. We invite those interested to examine our credentials, and to obtain circulars, by calling upon Mr. Philip Werlein, New Orleans, La., or address the Principal, A. J. WRIGHT, Woodville, Miss.

The Loquet-LeRoy Institute

AN INFANT KINDERGARDEN DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, 280 Camp Street.—This institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses MOISE, Cecelia W., Sallie L., and Corinne, the latter relicte of the late R. G. Raoul, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successors of Mme Loquet-LeRoy, whose good will and right to conduct the School under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No change whatever in the conduct and management of the school. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage so liberally extended to the institution, and that of their friends, and the public generally; promising strict devotion to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge. C. W. MOISE, Principal.

REFERRING TO THE ABOVE MADAME LOQUET-LEROY announces to her friends and former patrons the entire confidence she has in her successors, being in every way suited to the high trust they have assumed. She bespeaks for them a continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded her, and that she will still be actively connected with the Institution. For terms and particulars apply to the principal.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,

(Postoffice the same.)

MONROE COUNTY, EAST TENNESSEE.

PARENTS desiring to find a safe and healthy location for their sons during the summer season would do well to patronize the above-named institution under the patronage of the Holston Annual Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The spring term closes May 22, and Fall session begins

FIRST MONDAY IN AUGUST, 1879.

Students arriving before the latter date will be beyond the reach of epidemics, and will thus secure some months of profitable study before Colleges usually open in less favored localities.

Excellent board in College Boarding House by D. A. McKenzie, the well known farmer-steward, at ten dollars per month, washing included. Same in good private families at nine dollars. Tuition, College Course, twenty dollars; English Course, fifteen dollars.

A beautiful example of "force of habit" is to see a disciple of Murphy fill his glass at the hydrant, and dreamily blow the froth off the innocent water before drinking.

Though the Word and the Spirit do the main work, yet suffering so unfolds the door of the heart, that both the Word and the Spirit have easier entrances.—Baxter.

Blessed be the hand that prepares a pleasure for a child, for there is no saying when and where it may again bloom forth.

In looking over the partial list of liquor sellers, lately published by one of our dailies, the proportion of women's names is painfully startling; and yet statistics from the larger cities tell the same sad story. Of the eight thousand liquor dealers in Philadelphia, three thousand are women. And this is not all. Eminent physicians, of England and America are confronted by the fact of the rapid increase in drunkenness among women. Think of it, mothers, wives, daughters! Thousands of your own sex dealing out the poison; thousands more are slipping away from all that makes life desirable down the inclined plane of intemperance. Oh! let us pray then! Pray with a faith that takes hold of the promises. God's word is sure and abiding. We shall prevail.—Exchange.

DIME NOVELS.—James T. Fields, in a recent lecture on "Fiction," said: "I recently paid a visit to the Pomeroy boy, sentenced to be hanged for killing three children, but whose sentence was afterward commuted to imprisonment for life. I asked him if he read much. He said that he did. 'What kind of books do you read?' said I. 'Mostly dime novels.' 'What is the best book that you have read?' I asked. 'Well, I like Buffalo Bill the best,' he replied. 'It was full of murders, and pictures about murders.' 'Well,' I asked, 'how did you feel after reading such books?' 'Oh,' he said, 'I felt as if I wanted to do the same.'"

The humble man, though surrounded with the scorn and reproach of the world, is still in peace, for the stability of his peace rests not upon the world, but upon God.—Thomas a Kempis.

To individual faithfulness, and to the energy of the private conscience, God has committed the real history and progress of mankind.

TUTT'S PILLS.

SYMPTOMS OF A TORPID LIVER.

Loss of Appetite, Bowels Costive, Pain in the Head with a dull sensation in the back part, Pain under the shoulder blade, Fulness after eating with a disinclination to exertion of body or mind, Irritability of temper, Low Spirits, with a feeling of having neglected some duty, Weariness, Dizziness, Fluttering of the Heart, Dots before the Eyes, Yellow Skin, Headache over the right eye, Restlessness with disturbed dreams, Highly colored Urine.

IF THESE WARNINGS ARE UNHEEDED SERIOUS DISEASES WILL SOON BE DEVELOPED.

TUTT'S PILLS

are especially adapted to such cases, a single dose effects a change of feeling as to astonish the sufferer.

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS:

DR. TUTT—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them not with little faith; I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.

Rev. R. T. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

The first effect of TUTT'S PILLS is to Increase the Appetite, and cause the body to Take on Flesh, thus the system is nourished; and By their Tonic Action on the Digestive Organs, Regular Stools are produced.

DR. J. F. HAYWOOD OF NEW YORK, SAYS:

"Few diseases exist that cannot be relieved by restoring the liver to its normal functions; and for this purpose no remedy has ever been invented that has as happy an effect as TUTT'S PILLS."

On Noses

It is said that the most extraordinary men of every age have been distinguished by having extraordinary noses. Beginning with the ancients, Scipio Nasica derived his name from his prominent share of this feature; so did Ovid, surnamed Naso, on which account Pope represents his flatterers persuading him that he had "a nose like Ovid's." Cicero's nose was distinguished by a vetch (cicer;) Sylla's by a profusion of pimples. This latter made a great figure in those days, and the Athenians, while he was besieging them, cut a number of jokes on it. They compared it to "a mulberry dredged over with meal," as we read in Plutarch's Life of Sylla. This joke, as many other jocose things often do, cost the inventors of it very dearly when the revengeful dictator put his nose within their city gates. The nose of Cromwell was well calculated to vie with that of his Roman prototype, if we may credit Cleveland, Birkenhead, and other cotemporary writers. "Cromwell's face," says Birkenhead, "wears a natural tiffany, and his chin may furnish a rusty coat of mail. His nose is a comet in grain. Certainly it is no human feature, but the emblem of a man rake. And yet this basilisk would king it!" Napoleon the First was wont to say: "Give me a man with plenty of nose—long nose, long head." His best generals were, as a rule, remarkably well provided in this particular. His own was exquisitely chiseled, sculpturesque in mould, form and expression; though, strangely enough, not one of his brothers had a nose worth looking at. But the most prominent nose in Europe was Arthur, Duke of Wellington's; and the Iron Duke's compatriots, Anglesey, Peel, Cumbermere and Hastings, were men all noteworthy for their nose. Sir Charles Napier, the Conqueror of Scinde, was similarly favored. His nose was "like the beak of an eagle; it was curved and keen as the blade of a scythe."—Cassell's Magazine.

DISCOVERY by which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hy att's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable—because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a sustaining growth. Three bottles for $5; it to accompany the order and balance to be paid when medicine is delivered.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE PIANOS I KEEP.

Every Piano sold by me has stood the test of time—from ten to fifty years. A first-class house like mine cannot experiment at the expense of its patrons with untried or unreliable instruments. Being thoroughly familiar with the construction of a Piano, I am positive of their durability and reliability. I sell my Pianos with the understanding that if in ten or more years a defect in their construction under fair usage should show itself,

The Money Paid will be Cheerfully Refunded.

THE CHICKERING PIANOS,

Have been before the public for fifty-four years, and their reputation extends over the whole world. A six octave Piano of this make, forty-seven years old and perfect in every respect can be inspected in my store. Their superiority over all others is now universally acknowledged.

THE MATHUSHEK PIANOS,

Constructed on entirely new and patented principles which insure their retaining their original brilliance of tone for a life time, and their standing longer in tune than any other Piano. Those excellent Pianos have been sold here during the last ten years and not the least defect has ever occurred. Their new Uprights are real models of perfection.

THE HALE PIANOS

Are good, reliable and well made Pianos, of excellent tone, and with elastic touch. There are over 1000 of them in this city, and not a defective or worn out one among them.

MY PRICES are well known to be the lowest, as I prefer to sell ten pianos at a small profit than one at a large. My terms are liberal—selling new Pianos on monthly payments of $10, and second hand ones at $5. Fifty second hand Pianos in perfect order from $51 to $175. New Pianos from $225 upwards.

MASON & HAMLIN AND ESTEY ORGANS.

The best instruments of the kind made, from $50 upwards. Direct importation of

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, STRINGS AND MUSIC.

This unequaled remedy is made from the celebrated Coca leaf (erythroxylon coca,) and is recommended by the highest authorities in the medical world. The use of this leaf is almost universal among the natives of Peru and Bolivia.

APRIL.—A SONNET.

BY JOHN DENNIS.

Snow on the ground, and blossoms on the trees!
A bitter wind sweeps madly 'cross the moon;
The children shiver at the cottage door,
And old men crouch beside the fire for ease.
Yet still the happy lark disdains the breeze;
The buds swell out, the primrose makes a floor
Of sylvan beauty, though the frost be hoar,
And ships are battling with tempestuous seas.
'Tis April still, but April wrapt in cloud,—
Month of sweet promise and of nature's bliss,
A hen earth leaps up at heaven's reviving kiss,
And doubts at winter lingering in her shroud.
Haste swiftly, spring, to banish drear decay,
And welcome summer with the smile of May.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

ST. LOUIS, April 15.—The Globe-Democrat's special from Collinsville, about eleven miles from here, says a terrible cyclone from the northwest struck that town this afternoon, demolishing ten buildings, ruining about thirty others, and damaging more or less some seventy-five residences and business houses. A slight rain preceded the storm, and nearly everybody was indoors when the cyclone struck; but notwithstanding ten houses were leveled with the ground, only one person was killed, a little girl named Annie Reynolds, and one or two others badly injured.

BALTIMORE, April 15.—Bishop Ames, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has been ill at his residence in this city for several days. His death was looked for, but this morning his physician pronounced him better.

GALVESTON, April 15.—Specials from North Texas to the News report heavy hail storms, doing great damage to crops. At Lisbon, near Dallas, several houses were demolished, live stock killed and several persons severely injured.

ST. LOUIS, April 16.—After something of a lull in the tide of colored emigration from the South it has set in again this week, and some 300 or 400 people have arrived since Sunday, taxing the Refugee Relief Committee to its utmost to provide for them. They are now several hundred dollars in debt. Over 6,000 emigrants have arrived so far.

The Grand Jury, to-day indicted all owners, venders and attaches of the Missouri State Lottery.

MEMPHIS, April 16.—A tornado of the severest nature swept over Pocahontas, Tenn., last Monday night, causing the greatest destruction to that village. Several houses and churches were blown down. Great damage is reported to the surrounding country. The course of the tornado was from southwest to northwest.

WASHINGTON, April 16.—A very striking scene occurred to-day in the swearing in of Senator Hampton. The General had a good color and looked well, but when he rose to walk upon his crutches he moved with such difficulty as to excite general sympathy.

ST. LOUIS, April 17.—A Kansas City dispatch says: A large number of colored Southern refugees having been landed by steamboats at Wyandotte in an entirely destitute condition during the past few days, they occupying the churches and public halls in that place. Many are sick from exposure and dying. Mayor Shelley, of Kansas City, telegraphs the Secretary of War for an order for the issue of rations from Fort Leavenworth to feed them, and Secretary McCrary replied he had no authority to do so; that Congress was in session, and applications should be made to that body. A committee has been appointed at Wyandotte to look after the sufferers. The committee issued a call to the citizens of the United States for relief, stating 1700 entirely destitute colored refugees are already in Wyandotte, and thousands more in the same condition are on the way, and ask for immediate aid.

CHARLESTON, April 17.—Last evening a rain storm occurred here which continued throughout the night. Accounts from the interior show that the storm began with a terrific tornado which swept through the lower portions of the State, causing great destruction to life and property.

In the village of Waterford more than one hundred dwellings and all the churches were swept away. Three-fourths of the inhabitants are homeless. Fifteen persons were killed and many more wounded. At Oakley Station, on the Northeastern Railway, all houses, occupied by negroes, were leveled; one negro killed and many hurt. Similar casualties are reported from various points on the track of the tornado.

NEW YORK, April 17.—A syndicate, composed of nineteen bank and banking firms of this city and Boston, to-day made a subscription of $150,000,000 for four per cent. bonds and $40,000,000 funding certificates—making the largest single subscription ever made to a government funded loan in this or any other country.

RONDOUT N. Y., April 19.—Snow at Stamford, Delaware County, is twenty inches on the level and it is still snowing.

ST. LOUIS, April 18.—A number of prominent colored men of this city have organized a society called the Colored Emigration Aid Society, and elected J. Milton Turner President. The association has been incorporated and it is designed to make it permanent. Its object, as stated in its constitution, is to raise funds for the establishment of colored colonies and to aid emigration of colored men from the Southern States to other sections of the United States.

WASHINGTON, April 19.—Secretary Sherman announces that it is the desire of the Department to give every citizen of the United States to invest in limited sums his savings in $10 refunding certificates at par and accrued interest; at the end of sixty days the offers already made for four per cent. bonds sufficient to cover the 10 40 bonds then outstanding, if any, will be accepted.

FORT GRIFFIN, April 19.—Reliable information was received that a party of Kiowas which left Fort Sill about the seventh attacked a camp of three men at Wanderers' Creek on the eleventh, killing one named Earl, scalping him and mutilating his body, the other two escaping. A party of rangers are in pursuit.

VICKSBURG April 21.—Arrangements are being made for the accommodation of the Labor Convention of the Mississippi Valley, which meets here on the fifth of May. Half fare rates by steamboat and railroad will be secured.

NEW YORK, April 21.—Ex-Gov. Dix was alive at noon, and his physicians thought he might survive several hours.

FOREIGN.

CAPE TOWN, April 1, via St. Vincent, April 16.—The Colonial Secretary of Natal has telegraphed to the Colonial Secretary of Cape Colony, that Cetywayo has sent messengers to Lord Chelmsford with overtures for peace. It is thought, however, that this is merely a ruse to obtain information of the movements of British troops.

CITY OF MEXICO, April 7.—Congress opened on the first instant, when President Diaz delivered his message. Referring to the United States, he complained that the order of Gen. Ord for pursuit of raiders across the border is still in force, and the treaty of 1848 is thereby violated. Diaz hopes the United States, obeying the dictates of justice, and considering the interests of commerce and industry, will revoke the order, as it is contrary to international law.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 15.—The would-be assassin of the Czar is now undergoing examination. A full official account of the affair says: Towards eight o'clock this morning, as the Emperor was taking his customary walk, a respectably dressed man wearing a military cap with a cockade, advanced towards him, and as the Emperor approached nearer the man drew a revolver from the pocket of his overcoat and fired four shots at the Emperor. The assassin, before submitting to his captors fired another shot, slightly wounding in the cheek a person in the crowd.

The great throng of people which had assembled enthusiastically cheered and congratulated the Emperor, who thanked them for their proofs of fidelity on such a painful occasion. He said he knew he had the support of all respectable people; he hoped God would grant that he might complete his task, which consisted in promoting the welfare of Russia. The Emperor, after the foregoing speech, drove to the palace without escort. He has not suffered the least ill effect from the attempt upon his life. Afterwards he drove out without escort to Kazan Cathedral to return thanks for the preservation of his life. When receiving congratulations of the officials of the Empire at noon, the Czar was so much overcome by his enthusiastic reception as to be unable to speak for some minutes. On recovery from his emotion he said: This is the third time God has saved me. The Emperor's assailant took poison before his attempt, as he vomited after his arrest. Poison was also found under his finger nails. Antidotes were administered. It is thought the man was in the employ of the Ministry of Finance and as agent of the Internationals. The Sultan and all of the European sovereigns have telegraphed their congratulations.

LONDON, April 15.—The exact condition of affairs in Zululand, according to the latest advices, is this: On the south side of Tugela River there are at this moment 1200 cavalry, 14,000 infantry and thirty-five guns, all from England, and in readiness for operation, which, it is hoped, will not only relieve Col. Pierson from his now desperate situation, but make a final end of Cetawayo. The latter, however, is in excellent trim for making a fight. He has caused all the roads along which the English columns can advance to be broken up; bridges have been destroyed, ravines deepened and countless trees felled so as to lie across the roads. At many places where these obstructions are most formidable, Cetawayo has constructed earthworks on the flank, defended by abattis, and every mile of the advance of the English must have to be fought for. It is stated that, while hoping to prevent the advance of his foe to any great distance by these means, Cetawayo has prepared a post upon which to fall back, if necessary, an almost inaccessible fortress, about thirty miles north of Ulandi. The advance of the British column is expected to begin to day, but news from it cannot be expected here before the fifth or sixth of May. Among the relatives and friends of officers and soldiers in the expedition very lively anxiety exists as to the outcome.

LONDON, April 15.—Thousands of men, women and children, at the North Durham collieries, are quite destitute. More than one-third of the 8000 men employed there would willingly accept the masters' terms, but are afraid of violence.

Reuter's Constantinople dispatch says: The Porte is prepared to sanction a provisional regime in Egypt until an understanding is arrived at with European powers as to changing the order of the succession and increasing the preponderance of Ottoman power in Egypt. If England and France should demand the deposition of the Khedive the Porte would consent if allowed to revoke firman granting direct succession in the family of the Khedive.

VIENNA, April 15.—Private advices from St. Petersburg state that 1140 revolutionists have been arrested in Russia within the last fortnight.

VALPARAISO, April 15.—Chili has formally declared war against Peru.

LONDON, April 16.—The Paris correspondent of the Times reports that in a letter recently received from St. Petersburg, it is said that the heads of the secret police are about to resign, having discovered that three-fourths of the force are in league with the Nihilists. The latter are not really numerous, but profit by the apathy of the middle classes, who are discontented because of denial of their political rights.

LONDON, April 16.—The Standard's Berlin dispatch reports that Solovieff has said he was appointed by lot to shoot the Czar.

LONDON, April 18.—The Journal de St. Petersburg announces the appointment of Aleko Pasha to be Governor of Roumelia for five years, with the approval of the treaty powers.

The International commission to participate in the administration of its functions is prolonged one year. It is hoped that the serious difficulties apprehended on the departure of the Russian troops, a fortnight hence, will be thus avoided.

The Bulgarian Assembly will meet on the twenty-seventh of this month for the election of a prince.

PESTH, April 18.—The Rivers Maros and Koros have again broken their dams in several places. The village of Zerend has been destroyed, and the town of Arad endangered, the water having reached the cellars of the houses.

PANAMA, April 18.—A revolution has taken place in Panama. There was fighting in the streets which lasted fourteen hours. Many persons were killed. Quiet is now restored.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 19.—The ukase just issued, ordering the appointment of Governor Generals for six of the most populous districts in Russia, with perfectly despotic powers, begins by stating that recent events have shown that there exists in Russia a band of criminals who, though not numerous, are very determined, and aim at undermining the State.

After referring to the recent murderous attacks upon high officials and the attempted assassination of the Emperor, the ukase continues: "These crimes have necessitated the provisional adoption of exceptional measures in order to permit of exemplary punishment of the guilty persons and provide government officials, with necessary powers for maintaining order.

ROME, April 21.—There was a great Catholic demonstration and display of sacred relics yesterday, in honor of the Virgin Mary, as a protest against the alleged sacrilegeous teachings of the Protestant ministry, Dr. Ribetti, who had posted handbills announcing a discourse entitled "Glory to God only." Pilgrimages to the three great Basilicas of Santa Maria Maggiore, Saint John Lateran and Santa Croce in Gierusaiemme, in reponse to the special invitation of Cardinal Vicar Poreevery, were numerous and enthusiastic, embracing all classes of society.

Rev. Martin Ruter, D. D., and Methodism in the State of Texas.

An appointment which I visit ministerially once a month is Washington, in Washington county, on the Brazos river. This town, although now decreased by the withdrawal of many of its former population, who have moved to various points on the Central railroad, is a town of great historic notoriety. Here was formerly the capital of the republic of Texas, and here the declaration of independence was signed under circumstances of as great peril as that of the fourth of July, 1776.

In an ecclesiastical point of view, also, there is a sacredness in its history which very few other places can claim. For it was here that Dr. Ruter, the first superintendent of missions in the republic of Texas, closed a life which had long been consecrated to God as a preacher and an educator, and finally as a missionary, requiring of him a greater sacrifice of ease and earthly comfort than ever before, in order to meet the pressing demand for willing and brave souls to go over and possess for Christ this goodly land.

In my boyhood the name of Dr. Ruter was as familiar to me as a household word. I cannot describe my emotions as I sat, a few days since, after the lapse of so many years, beside his tomb, and copied the epitaph.

But a few months were left to him after his arrival in Texas in which to inaugurate a work which was to result in such permanency, and in such a vast amount of good to the souls of men, as each successive year since then has fully demonstrated. Wife and children were not with him in his last moments, but God was, and he triumphed in death. Christian sympathy and kind and affectionate offices were not lacking as he traveled through "the valley and shadow of death," and then to commit his body to its last resting-place. The mission was established, and the glorious results have followed. But very few of those early pioneers are still living. Dr. Alexander, one of three that were first appointed, still remains an effective member of the Texas Conference. Many that were later in the field, and younger than he, have been called from labor to a glorious reward.

At the time I joined the Mississippi Conference Texas was a part of it, so that by coming over here, it is true, that the special ties that bound me to my brethren are severed, but I can console myself, in part at least, by reverting to first principles, and going back in memory when my old Conference extended over all this vast area of forest and prairie. I have only come to dwell for the remainder of life in the household of one of the favored children of the dear old mother.

What mighty changes has time wrought, or rather, I should say, "What hath God wrought?" Truly, "a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." At first but three missionaries, Dr. Ruter, Dr. Alexander and Rev. L. Fowler, who breasted the storm and endured the privations of the frontier, now there are three hundred and thirty-three itinerant preachers in the field. Then a mission, weak in numerical strength, now there are five Annual Conferences, besides a part of the German Mission Conference, with a membership, including local preachers, of seventy one thousand, five hundred and fifty-five. There are five hundred and twenty-seven Sunday-schools, and twenty-four thousand, seven hundred and thirty-two scholars. These figures are taken from the printed minutes of the last Texas Conference. The mission was established in 1837, and at the end of forty-one years Methodism stands ahead of all denominations in numbers and aggressiveness. Still the watchword is Onward, and still the determined purpose is to win souls for God. Perhaps I should say here, without being esteemed censorious, that, considering the wealth of this State, the missionary collections have been far below what they should be. The aggregate for all the Texas Conferences shows a collection for foreign and domestic missions of a little over eleven cents for each member. In the Mississippi Conference it was a little over thirteen cents for each member. The collections in Mississippi last year were greatly impaired by the general prevalence of the yellow fever. Here I have heard of no cause of impediment, so far as sickness and failures in crop are concerned. It does seem to me that with proper effort there might be a better showing made in all the Conferences. No truth is more apparent than this: That we are not doing our duty in this direction. So much money is spent by church members, and even by preachers, for things that are not actually necessary, that they ought to give willingly a generous portion of spare money to advance the kingdom of our Lord in all its departments, and especially into the regions of spiritual darkness and death, and thus contribute to the hastening of that period when

"Jesus will reign where'er the sun
Does his successive journey's run."

I must thank you, doctor, for the remarks you gave us in the ADVOCATE of April 3 on the importance of taking up the collections early in the year. The preachers can by this means make a fair test of their efficiency in getting up the amounts for these various objects, and, with faithful and systematic effort in that direction, they will be so highly gratified with the result as to adopt that method thereafter.

THOMAS PRICE.

Centenary College, Summerfield, Ala.

MR EDITOR: Having recently visited Centenary College, at Summerfield, Ala., I drop you a few lines as to the status of the educational and religious interests of that place. I have never had any trouble with your paper about the insertion of communications concerning our colleges in western Alabama. The trouble with us is to get our people, both preachers and members, to patronize our own schools.

Centenary College, in both departments, is in a more prosperous condition than for several years past. The number of pupils has been greatly increased, and are of that class that appreciates and improves advantages, gives credit to an institution, and, in subsequent life, refinement of sentiment and manners to society.

I was the guest of Bro. McVoy, the principal of the female department, and had an opportunity for observing the style and deportment of his girls. From their manifestations and expressions of intelligence and culture, I estimate them to be superior to any collection of girls I have seen there or elsewhere during the last four years. I had not the same means of judging Bro. Holcombe's boys, but, from what I saw and heard, can very safely say the male department is in excellent condition.

The instruction, the discipline, the home department, and the moral tone of Centenary College, are all of the highest order. The buildings have been repaired during the year, and all the apartments and premises are neat, comfortable and healthful. My visit was in the capacity of patron and trustee, and I sought every opportunity to inform myself whether my own children, and those of my friends and neighbors, were in good hands and under good training.

The church at Summerfield is doing well. There are more pious people there than in any community of corresponding size within my knowledge. Bro. Lightfoot is highly acceptable to all, both as preacher and pastor. Dr. Mitchell was out on his work, to be gone, I was told, three weeks. What a noble old man and faithful minister is he!

Bro. Rush was holding his Quarterly Conference for Summerfield station. His sermons on Saturday and Sabbath were of that strong, thoughtful, religious style, characteristic of his efforts. On Sunday night Bro. E. S. Starr preached a very instructive sermon, much to the delight of a people who are always glad to hear him.

Bro. Holcombe and Bro. Blow were off in the country on Sabbath at their regular appointments. Bro. Strider and Bro. Liles were attending Conference. Bro. McVoy had charge of the Sabbath-school, which is large and well conducted. He and Bro. Holcombe preach somewhere every Sabbath. Is it wonderful that Summerfield, with such men and their families, and the families of many of the same class who have gone before them, is a place distinguished for intelligence and piety? In this age and country, of vice and vanity, how fortunate are we to have an institution like Centenary College, located in such an eligible place as Summerfield, Ala.! I close this letter with thanks to many friends for kind hospitality, and especially to the accomplished teacher of music, for a most delightful, complimentary entertainment of music and song.

Yours truly,

LEVI W. REEVES.

DAYTON, April 18, 1879.

From San Antonio, Texas.

MR EDITOR: I have been a constant reader of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and I am glad to state that it is conceded by those who are capable of judging that it is one of the best papers published in the interest of our church.

I write this to invite you to attend the next West Texas Conference, which meets some time this fall in Gonzales, and I promise you a good time, and will assist you in getting subscribers for your paper.

Then you can visit this city—the most remarkable on the American continent—and see what civilization and Christianity has done, and is still doing, for mankind on the very borders of civilization.

We have a very good church here, and since our Northern Methodists are attempting to "absorb," by disintegration, we find the church moving ahead, increasing in members, and the finances of the church has greatly improved. We needed a stimulous and the effort of Bishop Haven to establish a church here; has given it, and I am glad to state that Soledad Street Church will stand the storm and grow in strength and prosperity as time rolls on.

I am glad to state in this connection that our Sabbath-school is in a flourishing condition. We patronize our Publishing House, and Bro. Jim Criden, the assistant superintendent, is indefatigable in his efforts to provide literature for the Sabbath-school. Our superintendent is rather a "slow coach," but he tries to do, and the teachers and scholars render him their confidence and assistance, which makes the school a success. Rev. J. C. Rogers, our pastor, is is doing good work, and the outlook for our church interests here is good.

When my time of subscription expires, do not stop my paper, but send bill, and I will remit promptly.

Yours truly, W. L. T.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, April 14, 1879.

One of the most delightful places in all Europe to an American is "The American Chapel, in Paris," and no doubt many who look over these columns will be glad indeed to hear from it. Rev. Mr. Hitchcock reports, to the American and Foreign Christian Union, that the chapel continues to enjoy decided marks of the blessing of God. Not only is it free of debt, and meeting all its engagements with punctuality, but is also doing an excellent work in Paris and other parts of France. Twenty persons have been added to its communion during the past year. The Sunday-school and Bible classes have been well sustained, and one hundred and fifty volumes have been added to the library, the gift of a father and mother in memory of a son, now in heaven, who was once much attached to the school. The collections for missionary and benevolent work have amounted to 17,000 francs. The Chapel Association supports three mission stations in Paris alone, and employs a French Bible-woman. The Industrial School at its "Les Ternes Mission" is acknowledged to be the best of its kind in Paris. The attendance of children has been 200. A larger hall has become necessary, and the Association is constructing one to accommodate from 450 to 500.

In the same letter Mr. Hitchcock writes: "There is no limit to the opportunities for doing missionary work in France to day. And I believe that Evangelical Protestantism has not only a work to do, but has also a glorious future. Monsieur Waddington, a Protestant, a member of M. Bersier's church, born of English parents, and with an American wife, is President of the Cabinet; and the government is republican, liberal and progressive. I wish the French Protestants knew how to work and to give! I fear they will never learn until they cease to lean upon the State for their support. At the same time there are many exceptions. There are self-denying and devoted Christian men and women, who give liberally, some of them from their poverty."—Christian Intelligencer.

An editor at a dinner table, being asked if he would take some pudding, replied, in a fit of abstraction: "Owing to a crowd of other matter, we are unable to find room for it."

MOTHER'S WORK.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Dear patient woman, o'er your children bending
To leave a good-night kiss on rosy lips,
Or list the simple prayers to God ascending
Ere slumber veil them in its soft eclipse,
I wonder, do you dream that seraphs love you,
And sometimes smooth the pathway for your feet;
That oft their silvery pinions float above you,
When life is tangled and its cross roads meet?

So, wan and tired, the whole long day so busy,
To laugh or weep, at times, you hardly know,
So many trifles make the poor brain dizzy,
So many errands call you to and fro
Small garments stitching, weaving fairy stories,
And binding wounds, and bearing little cares,
Your hours pass, unheeded all the glories
Of that great world beyond your nursery stairs.

One schoolmate's pen has written words of beauty,
Her poems sing themselves into the heart.
Another's brush has magic; you have duty;
No time to spare for poetry or art.
But only time for training little fingers,
And teaching youthful spirits to be true;
You know not with what famine woman lingers,
With art alone to fill her, watching you.

And yet, I think you'd rather keep the babies,
Albeit their heads grow heavy on your arm,
Than have the poet's fair, enchanted may-bes,
The artist's visions, rich with dazzling charm.
Sweet are the troubles of the busy hours,
For even in weariness your soul is blest,
And rich contentment all your being dowers
That yours is not a hushed and empty nest.

Pensacola and District Conference.

One Monday morning early Rev. E. J. Boyd, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of this place, formerly of Monroe, Mich., and myself, took passage on the United States Mail Steamer which carries the mail from Freeport to Pensacola, Capt. McKinnon, master. Just at six A. M. the "Charles Fischer" loosed her moorings and launched out into the deep. The clever crew are all generous, Christian-hearted gentlemen.

About eight passengers were on board, some of whom were very "jolly." One of our fellow-travelers from Mobile seemed to be in bad health, ailing with all the diseases that Dr. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters proposes to cure. He had great faith in this medicine, as he drank a wine glass of it for each disease, and then drank an extra bottle for no particular disease, but general complaint—"Dypsomania."

About half-past eleven P. M. we arrived at Pensacola. Prof. Boyd and I wended our way to the Methodist parsonage, one and a half miles from the wharf. We soon aroused Bro. and Sister DuBose, and we were soon in a comfortable bed, sound asleep. Next morning we were delighted to see such an elegantly "fixed-up" and furnished parsonage. Bro. and Sister DuBose have had several hundred dollars worth of work done on the parsonage this year.

Bro. DuBose is doing a fine work in Pensacola, the Sodom of America. His people love him and his family, and they minister to their wants as "it becometh Christians to do."

At ten A. M. Tuesday Bro. Boyd and I took passage on the United States Mail Steamer "Davidson" for the Navy Yard. We called on Commander Belknap, who received us with great courtesy. On our way to his house he escorted us through the navy chapel, which he had erected himself. It is a beautiful, neat little church. But we are now in that elegant mansion, the Commodore's residence. This is one of the most beautiful places I have ever seen. The gardens are rich in the beauty of colors and of fruits—they gladden the eye and delight the taste. We spent half an hour very pleasantly, took luncheon with the family, and then paid a visit to Bro. Glenn. We found Bro. Glenn and his new wife keeping house. Bro. Glenn is doing well. Sister Glenn says her pantry is always "full"—something nice and good sent them nearly every day.

In the afternoon we went sight-seeing. As I looked at those weapons of warfare I thought of the armour of God and the sword of the Spirit, and of the conflicts we so often have in this great spiritual warfare; as I looked at the great man of war I thought of that "Old Ship" about which our glorified "Charlie Hart" used to sing so much; as I put my hand upon the huge anchor of 17 000 pounds weight I thought of Hope, the soul's great anchor; as I put my hands on that iron anchor my soul looked up and uttered these words: "We will anchor by and by." I thought, too, of my dear Dr. Brand, of Randolph, Ala., who sang this beautiful song for us at Mamre camp meeting last year, during the singing of which we all got so happy. We saw many other things of much interest, of which I cannot speak now.

Next morning Commodore Belknap honored us with a United States tug boat to convey us to Pensacola.

Thursday morning, by the dawning of day, Revs. Boland, Scott, Peavey and Morris came in. At two P. M. we left on the Steamer Davidson for Milton, to attend the Pensacola District Conference. At five P. M. we were on the wharf at Milton—a new place and new people to more than myself. Here we were met by Bro. Birch, who assigned us to our homes. At half-past seven P. M. a large audience had assembled at the Methodist Church to hear the opening sermon, which was preached by Rev. C. B. DuBose, of Pensacola station.

Friday, March 28, 1879, at half-past eight A. M., the Pensacola District Conference convened in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Milton, Fla. The Conference was opened with religious services, conducted by Rev. J. M. Boland, P. E., who took the chair, and called the Conference to order. Rev. C. B. DuBose was elected secretary. Nearly all the pastors were present, and a goodly attendance of laymen.

Upon the whole, the reports made by the pastors of their several charges were encouraging. Revs. J. M. Scott, W. I. Powers, J. S. Peavey and myself were the visiting clergymen of the occasion. Bro. Scott was present in the interest of Sabbath-schools, for which he is agent. Bro. Powers was present in the interest of the Southern University, for which he is special agent. He made a very able speech in behalf of the University during the session. He said: "As he had not enjoyed early educational advantages himself, that it was no reason why he should not urge young men to attend college now." Said "he was raised in Tarpin Valley, near the foot of Frog Mountain, not a great distance from Pool Cat Town, where his school teacher taught him to pronounce 'he-redi-ta-ry' 'heri dit a ry.'" He wished "for that teacher to have been in Africa." His speech will long be remembered. Bro. Boland presided with great dignity and ability—very satisfactory to every one.

Sunday, at nine A. M., we had a love-feast, and it was a feast of love in every sense of the word. At eleven o'clock the presiding elder preached one of his soul-stirring sermons, after which a missionary collection was lifted, and then the Lord's Supper was administered to a number of communicants; the souls of many were made very happy. At three P. M. we had a Sunday-school mass meeting, which was well attended.

The pulpits in the Presbyterian Church at Bagdad (a little town two miles from Milton,) and the Colored Methodist Church, were filled by our preachers on the Sabbath. Great prominence was given to the religious exercises of the meeting. Bro. J. W. Glenn offered a resolution resolving that the Conference spend half an hour of its morning session in a prayer-meeting, which was unanimously adopted; and the result was that we all had a deeper work of grace in our own hearts. Bro. Birch, the pastor, is doing splendidly. He protracted the religious meeting, which we heard was still progressing last Sabbath. May they have a good time!

We spent Monday in Milton very pleasantly, calling and seeing the place, etc.

Tuesday morning we left on the "Davidson" for Pensacola. But I cannot leave Milton without returning many many thanks to "mine" host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Amos, who did all in their power to entertain us, and, I assure you, that they did not fail in their efforts.

Wednesday morning I was on the "Charles Fischer," bound for Freeport, and at half past nine P. M. we were at the wharf of our city.

Yours, J. B. ANDERSON.

FREEPORT FLA., April 10, 1879.

Independence.

Right independence is a power growing out of conscious strength. It does not partake of that vanity which exalts one man above all others, but it is that valuable commodity which gives a man self-respect for his own opinions and acts.

It is not that asceticism which repels encouragement or sympathy from others, but it is that personal strength which maintains itself against opposition and discouragement.

While it may raise a man above being influenced by the mere thought or word, unweighed, of other men, it is compatible with the most conscious dependence on God; with the most childlike simplicity and docility when God speaks to the soul. It is not a stubborn resistance of unquestionable truth or fact, but a deliberate and personal choice after the truth or fact is verified. It is a holding of one's own not in the spirit of a boasted superiority, but in the dignified and courteous claim to correctness.

It is not the spirit of emphasis or dogmatism, but the calm deliverance of opinions which have been intelligently formed in the midst of the light of the present time.

It is not unnatural stiffness nor rigidity; it is manliness. What a rebuke to all fawning, simulation and pretention, and the miserable bombast of inflated egotism!

Great minds and hard workers, who have influence in their age, are characterized by their individuality and independence, and yet, withal, by their modesty and genuineness. But this grace of strength not only abounds among the great thinkers and writers of the world, but in the strong convictions of the masses. How quickly indignation rises in the man who remotely suspects another of the attempt to dictate his opinions and acts. He claims as his sovereign right the maintenance, at least for himself, of those convictions which are as dear to him as the blood which courses in his veins. And when this attempt has the support of force, insulted humanity rises up in bloody revolt against it.

Allegiance to government, civil and moral, is as plainly man's duty as his dependence on the functions of the body for physical life. And when a country is cursed by the low fires of communism, to put out those fires is no infringement of God's gift of independence to any man. Disobedience is not independence. For a man to claim independence of God is quite as stupid as for him to attempt to live without bread and water. Christ is to the soul what meat and drink are to the body. No man can claim the right to refuse duty to his God on the plea that God made him independent, for as the eye was made for light, and the body for action, the soul was made for Christian service. A wrong view of independence would result in convulsions and ruin. Independence under law, earthly and heavenly, submitting to the conditions of our creation as social and intelligent beings, is the right of every man, and, indeed, the inspiration to success. What success is there, in any sphere, without it? Each man is necessarily independent, alone, in the work of his own salvation and responsibility, and so must he be in the interpretation of his duty to God.

There is something grand in a man who thinks for himself. Action springing out of one's own methods, unhindered by cold criticism or mean indifference, may be difficult to sustain, but if continued through the years will overcome every obstacle. This is the secret of mercantile, professional and ministerial success. Let a man cut his own way through the forests, independently, determined that his only helper is God, and when his ax falls for the last time on the root of some formidable obstacle, he will find himself in the presence of his radiant Lord with the "well done, thou faithful servant," opening a grander sphere of activity before him.

It is the lack of these pioneer, independent, efforts that dwarfs so many men and reduces their influence to apparent insignificance. "The fields are white unto harvest;" so is the world crowded with the materials out of which we are to construct our usefulness. As the ore is taken rough from the mines and carried out into commerce with the imprint of the nation's currency, so we can make our own what is known, and use it by our own methods, stamping upon it our own individuality. In the most hotly contested fields there is always room for the representatives of distinct and independent claims. So a man can make a place for himself in ground which is fully occupied, if he brings with him the force of an independent effort. Let him make himself felt, use the materials which others have perhaps overlooked or cast away, and time will develop much fruit through his independent mastery of the most opposing circumstances.

Mississippi Conference.

The College of Bishops will meet in Nashville in the course of a few weeks, and will fix the times for holding the numerous Annual Conferences, putting the time for the Mississippi Conference in November or December. And when this Conference shall convene the preachers will come up with long faces, but very short reports, and many will be the excuses and explanations offered. Much will be said about "the hard times," shortness of cotton crop, etc., it apparently never having occurred to members of the Conference that the time of holding the session is one great cause of the deficits in the several collections. If the Conference were held at the end of the cotton crop, instead of in the beginning or the middle, there would, no doubt, be a marked improvement in the financial reports, and a very perceptible reduction of the constant deficits that have bothered preachers and perplexed Joint Boards of Finance.

If the Mississippi Conference were held in the latter part of February, the preachers would be freed from the embarrassment under which they now too often labor when entering upon a new field. They would not have to begin calling for money, and taking up collections before they have had time to acquaint themselves with the characters and idiosyncracies of the members of their new charge. The Conference year would end when more money is in circulation than at any other season, and people are feeling more able to contribute. As it is, the year closes before the farmers have settled with the country merchants, or the country merchants with the commission merchants of the city, and consequently it is unmitigated toil to gather the nickels and the dimes that go to make up the slender amounts which are carried up to Conference. Besides, in February the weather is more settled and pleasant, and the roads in better condition for traveling. In short, there is everything in favor of such a change in the time for holding the Mississippi Conference, and nothing of serious import against the change. By all means let the experiment be tried, and, if the result be not beneficial, a return to the old season can be made.

CHRIST'S AGONY.

DOUBLE ACROSTIC.

BY MRS. L. CRARY SADLER.

O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou will.—St. Matthew.

O! Agony indeed is mine this night, and O!
My soul is sad; exceeding sad and sorrowful. My Father, if now Thou seest me, Oh! Abba Father
If now Thou lovest me, as I love Thee; if
It could now suffice; these groans these tears, so let it
Be. If now these drops of blood be Possible, to satisfy thy wrath, (with thee all things are possible)"
Let this, my prayer, reach to thine ear. O! Father let
This thrice repeated prayer be heard, and let this
Cup of woe, this bitter, bitter cup
Pass from my lips. O! let it pass
From me, Thine only son. And O from Me, my Father; "hide not thy face" from me.
Nevertheless for this I came into the world, and nevertheless,
Not as I will. I supplicate and pray not
As I will, but let Thy holy will be done. Not as I fear to die. The spirit willing is, and only flesh is weak, and so I
Will, entreat and pray for those that Thou hast given me. Yes, pray I will,
But not for these alone but e'en for those that shall believe through them, but
As Thou art in me and I in Thee, so I would be in them, and even as Thou and I are one may they be one. And as I sanctify myself even Thou
Will sanctify all those that Thou hast given me.
My Father, I know Thou will.

The Laws Must be Executed.

MR. EDITOR: I was pleased with your article in the last ADVOCATE, upon the disposition of our people to shed human blood for personal wrongs. The fault is not in the law, but in the execution of the law. God knew when he gave the command against bloodshed that nothing except a rigid enforcement of the command would protect society against this great evil. The experience of man has caused every civilized country to incorporate this command into its criminal statutes, and yet in this country, when we boast of our high civilization, we are fast becoming a nation of murderers and drunkards. No people can advance in religion and morals by disregarding any one of the ten commandments. If we fail to enforce the law against stealing we will become a nation of thieves, and so we will become a nation of murderers if we neglect to enforce the law against murder. It is well for us to inquire into the cause of the change in public sentiment with regard to this great evil. What is the press and the pulpit doing to change the current of public opinion? The Bible is as new to us as it was to those to whom it was first published, and it is the duty of all good people to impress upon public sentiment the fact that God's laws cannot be disregarded without bringing disaster and ruin upon nations and individuals. Mr. Editor, let us hear from you again, and don't forget that the press and pulpit is largely responsible for the condition of public sentiment with regard to murder and drunkenness.

Yours truly, E. H. WILKERSON.

TROY, ALA., April 1, 1879.

In a recent temperance speech Canon Wilberforce, speaking of the large brewer devoting large sums of money to the building of cathedrals and the restoring of churches—money which had been made out of vices of the people—said it reminded him of that celebrated character upon the penny steamboat, who picked the pocket of an old lady of everything she had, and then, when he had it safe in his own pocket, went about and made a collection among the passengers to make it up to her. He did not believe in robbing a nation with one hand and giving it back with the other. He did not believe in spreading sin and misery and desolation and hell-fire among the people, and then paying God in it in that way.

An organist played in another church than his own recently, and was complimented by the organ-blower for the proficiency shown in his Voluntary. "By the way," added the man who manipulated the wind apparatus, "I've blowed that Voluntary before."

No sound ever went to the heart whose arrow was not feathered with sadness.

Obituaries.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

THE three persons whose death is recorded in this obituary, were the children of Gabriel and Abigail Scott, two very noted Primitive Methodist Christians of Jefferson county, Miss. The latter was received into the church at the close of the last century, by Rev. Tobias Gibson, the first missionary to Mississippi, and the former joined soon after in early youth. They had a family of eight children, all of whom were literally brought up in the church to man and womanhood; hence their early, consistent and life-long piety. This worthy couple, after a life of uncommon piety and usefulness, long since died in faith and entered into rest.

NELLIE M. SCOTT was born January 17, 1814; was married to William Adair, April 18, 1838, and died of pneumonia, March 1, 1879. She copied the example of her parents from childhood. If she was anything else but a Christian it did not appear in her external conduct. In her early girlhood she received the witness of her adoption into the household of faith, and publicly assumed her baptismal vows. Her discipleship to Christ was unbroken and her piety uniform, deep and fervent to the end of life. Her godly husband preceded her to the heavenly rest about two years. In her last illness she enjoyed much of the felt presence of God, and rejoiced in the prospect of speedily entering into rest. She has not only left a rich inheritance to the church in her children, but she has also left them a rich inheritance in her prayers and faith and holy example.

ELIZA SCOTT was born September 17, 1811; was married to John M. Foulkes, May 5, 1839, and died of pneumonia March 28, 1879. Eliza was very a sweet spirited girl, and from her childhood seemed to be religious. In 1821, when she was ten years old, the writer saw her voluntarily present herself in a large congregation for recognition as a member of the church, and ever after, through all her youthful as well as maturer years, her relation to God and His people was her most delightful theme. By the encouragement of her mother she early acquired the habit of extemporaneous prayer in the female prayer-meetings, in which she was gifted all through her subsequent life. Her husband was one of the patriarchs of the church, and their hospitable home was often a delightful resting place for ministers of all grades. Her whole family had crossed over to the other shore before her, and after quietly arranging all her temporalities, full of faith and hope, she calmly fell asleep in Jesus. A more beautiful and exemplary Christian life, from childhood to old age, I have never seen.

JOHN W. SCOTT, the only surviving brother of the sisters just mentioned, was born in June or July, 1829; was married in early manhood to Miss Edna Hackler who, with a family of grown children, survives him—and died of pneumonia, April 3, 1879. Like his sisters he was religiously inclined from his childhood. His father died in his infancy, but he was brought up by one of the most faithful mothers that ever blest a family of children, assisted by the good example and fervent piety of her older children. In his boyhood he assumed the vows of church membership, and ever after walked worthy of his profession as a Methodist Christian. In his turn he had become one of the patriarchs of the church, and was ready for every good word and work. In his last days on earth he expressed an assurance that he felt fully prepared to receive the crown of life.

Page after page might be filled with their triumphant utterances during their painful and fatal illness, but this need not be done. It is enough for us to know that they lived right, and, as a matter of course, died right. Being near relatives of mine I have known them intimately from their infancy, and three more consistently beautiful Christian lives I have never known. I have known many of their equals, but not their superiors, in unfeigned devotion to Christ. I ask leave, in concluding these obituaries, to emphasize one remark. If our Methodist parents generally would be as exemplary before their children as Gabriel and Abagail Scott were, and train them up in the church as perseveringly as they did, very few of them would be alienated to other churches or live and die out of the church. In their family we have an example of the fourth generation, so far as I know without an exception, adhering loyingly and obediently to the church of their Godly ancestors.

J. G. JONES.

MRS. TEMPERANCE SIMPSON, maiden name Kelly, was born June 22, 1780, and died May 18, 1874, aged eighty-four years, ten months and twenty-six days. Sister Simpson was born in North Carolina. Her parents moved from there to Tennessee, where, in her twentieth year, she was married to Nathan Simpson. With her husband she then moved to Alabama, and from there to Mississippi, where she died. About the year 1832 she and her husband, who died in 1868, were converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church at Skiffa, Simpson county, Mississippi, under the ministry of Rev. James Applewhite.

Having turned her steps toward heaven she never permitted her lamp to go out, but kept it trimmed and burning. She was truly an elect lady, and in her death the community in which she lived suffered an irreparable loss. Such was her piety and the consistency of her conduct at home and abroad that she was respected and loved by all who knew her. She adorned the doctrine of God, her Saviour, in all things, and was always actively devoted to the interests of His kingdom. Her sympathies were readily enlisted in behalf of the suffering and needy, and by her benevolence and Godly counsels many a heart has been made glad. To the wants of the preachers appointed to serve the church of which she was a member, she ministered with an unsparing hand. She considered it a privilege as well as a duty to aid in any way in the promulgation of the gospel. She was given to hospitality and many an itinerant has found here a Christian home, a pleasant retreat, as might be expected of such a Christian woman, especially when blessed with a like minded husband. She was a model manager in all her domestic affairs; neatness and order marked everything over which she had control. Her children were early trained by precept and example to serve the Lord. Five of them had died in the triumphs of faith, and the others are members of the militant church. As a token of the estimation in which she was held the Quarterly Conference of the work on which she lived passed resolutions expressive of sorrow at her decease. She had long lived as a guide to the Saviour, and though for years she had been too feeble to go and worship with the public congregation, her loss was justly deemed a cause for lamentation. Having lived till life to her became a burden she desired to depart and be with Christ. She said she wanted to go home, and just before her death she requested her son and two of her daughters who were present to sing one of the songs of Zion, which they did, and in ecstacies of joy her spirit took wings and flew away to the home of the Christian.

THOMAS J. MILLER.

MRS REBECCA HALL, eldest daughter of Samuel and Nancy Davis, was born in Dauphin county, North Carolina, in 1795; emigrated to Georgia in 1819, and the same year joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1826 she was married to Morgan Hall, and departed this life March 10, 1879, in Webster parish, La., being eighty-four years of age. She was the mother of five children, two sons and three daughters, one of the sons died twenty years ago. The other children were married, and with their children and grand children lived near the old people, giving them much comfort in their declining days.

Mother Hall was a consistent Christian, a kind and affectionate mother, a devoted wife. Her's was a life of kindness. Her hands never wearied administering to the wants of her husband, children or neighbors. She loved her bible, and by her consistent application of its truths to her children, in precept and example, she trained them up in the right way; they were all members of the Church of her choice. She was always a regular attendant upon church but for a year before her death, from age and infirmity she was deprived of that privilege, which she deeply regretted. She greatly appreciated and enjoyed the visits of her pastor at her house, and at such times often expressed her submission to Divine Providence in her afflictions, and her faith strong and unwavering, she would often say: "I am waiting the Master's call."

Her death was calm and peaceful. She has entered her rest and reward.

JOHN A. MILLER.

MATHEW NEUGENT was born in Rapides parish, Louisiana, May 19, 1808, and died near the place of his birth, February 21, 1879; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church when but a youth, and was ever true to its vows; he was an active member; his name as class-leader appears upon the minutes of the first Quarterly Conference ever held in this part of the Little River Circuit. From 1828 to 1856 his attendance at Quarterly Conference was more regular than any other member, sometimes as class leader and often as Steward, and in both of these relations he magnified his office, "not in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth."

Living upon a great route of travel, his house was always open to the weary traveler, who, without money or price, could find plenty for man and beast. Here was the home of the pioneer preacher, as it was to all who followed them, and many an embassador for Christ will pause with aching heart as he reads this sad announcement.

His last sickness was short, and he suffered greatly; but no murmur escaped his lips. Just before he left the world he called his wife, children, and neighbors around him, and took an affectionate leave of them, bidding them to meet him in heaven, and soon thereafter, as a Christian philosopher only can do, he sank into eternal repose without a struggle.

J. W. HEARN.

MRS MARY V. LIGON, daughter of Thos P. and Esther Stovall, was born August 9, 1810; was married first to Lieut. Jordan Williams, in 1864. After his death, which occurred at the battle of Harrisburg, Mississippi, she was married to William B. Ligon, November 27, 1872. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Pilgrim's Chapel, East Baton Rouge parish, La., in the fall of 1877, and died at her residence, near that church, March 8, 1879. She leaves a husband and a tender little babe to mourn her death. Being of a delicate constitution she has been intimately acquainted with suffering and trouble, but she had learned where to look for relief, and knew how to avail herself of that blessed privilege offered by her heavenly Master to all His stricken ones: "Cast all your care on Him for He careth for you."

She was an affectionate wife, and a fond, devoted mother. Leaving these dear ones seemed to be the only source of regret in her dying moments. May the Lord watch tenderly over the motherless little one, and comfort and cheer the heart of the bereaved husband in all sorrows!

C. D. ANDREWS.

BENJAMIN, son of W. A. and Catharine Costley, was born September 8, 1865, and died July 30, 1878, in Copiah county, Miss. He talked about death like a little Christian, and seemed perfectly resigned. Father, mother, your little Benny can not return to you, but you can go to him.

A MITE SONG.

Only a drop in the bucket,
But every drop will tell:
The bucket would soon be empty,
Without the drops in the well.

Only a poor little penny,
It was all I had to give;
But as pennies made the dollars,
It may help some cause to live.

A few little bits of ribbon
And some toys; they were not new,
But they made the sick child happy,
Which has made me happy, too.

Only some outgrown garments;
They were all I had to spare;
But they'll help to clothe the needy,
And the poor are everywhere.

A word now and then, of comfort,
That cost me nothing to say:
But the poor old man died happy;
And it helped him on the way.

God loveth the cheerful giver,
Though the gift be poor and small:
What doth he think of His children
When they never give at all?

The Use and Abuse of Alcohol.

BY WILLARD PARKER, M. D.

The evils of alcohol drinking do not stop with the individual; they extend to society; and this fact gives to society an undoubted right to interfere for its own protection. To license shops that beget murder and then to punish the murder that the state itself has begotten is indefensible from a moral point of view. The inconsistency is illustrated by a case that recently occurred in our own State. A had taken out a license from the State of New York, and had just opened his new saloon. A.'s friend B. was invited to the christening. He came; got too much christened on A.'s liquor, and became disorderly. A. ordered him out, and, ordering not being enough, put him out. B., who had been made crazy by the liquor which A. had given to him, under a permission obtained from the State of New York, went off and got his pistol and shot down A. Then B. was arrested and hung by the State for the murder of the man who had made him crazy, and had bought the permission of the State to do so. Where did the real guilt lie in that matter? Who was the really guilty one—the man who in a crazy fit killed his friend or the man who made him crazy, or the citizens of the State who gave the man a license to make his neighbors crazy?

But the evil does not stop with individual crime. The sins of the fathers are visited on the children.

The great starting point of our being is in the nervous system, and if that system is impaired or diseased everything which comes from it suffers in consequence. The nervous life is transmitted from the parents to the children; consequently children coming of drunken parents inherit a system always somewhat, sometimes greatly, impaired. In the family of drunken parents, if there are half a dozen children, there will almost always be some impracticable, eccentric, wayward, ungovernable, malicious or suicidal children, and frequently those that are idiotic. Fifty per cent. of all the idiots have been traced to drunken parentage. Fifty per cent. of the insane can be traced directly or indirectly to the use of alcohol. Thus, in considering the use and abuse of alcohol, we must consider not only the effect upon the individual who destroys himself by drink, but also the effect upon his progeny, to the third and fourth generation. In the second and third generations you find disease, idiocy, insanity and suicide, and with the fourth generation the family becomes extinct.

There is a use for distilled liquor in the human body. It is an essential medicine in some forms of disease. I do not know, for example, how I could treat ship fever without distilled liquor. When my poor patient lies in an utterly exhausted condition, his system without vitality sufficient to enable him to digest and assimilate his food, I give him a spoonful of alcohol with milk, and under the stimulus of the alcohol the stomach will digest and the system will assimilate the milk. Or, again, I am called to visit a person who has suffered some sudden shock by which the heart has been affected and the whole circulation depressed; the surface is cold and his system collapsed. I put the alcohol into his stomach, and in one minute and a half it rouses the exhausted system, spurs it to an unwonted activity, and thus enables it to spring the chasm into which it would otherwise have fallen. Alcohol has been called a stimulant, and in one sense it is so; it is a stimulant as the whip is to the horse. You may use it occasionally; but no man can be whipping the system all the time to unnatural exertion and not wear it out.

It is a medicine, but taking it in the form of bitters, as many do, under pretense of its medicinal effect, ruins the system. It should only be taken with food, not before it. If taken with food it may be an aid to digestion; if taken before food it prevents digestion. Among the many curious experiments that were made by Dr. Beaumont, in 1832, with Alexis St. Martin, that old soldier who had a trap door in his stomach, through which it was possible to see the operations going on within, there were some very curious ones respecting the effect of alcohol on the digestive organs, and it was found that if alcohol is put into an empty stomach it coagulates and destroys the pepsin, and with that the power of digestion. Alcoholic liquors should never be put into an empty stomach. The conclusions on the whole matter are briefly summed up as follows:

1. There is a broad, clear and natural distinction between fermented and distilled liquors. In fermented liquor alcohol is found in its natural chemical combination; in distilled liquor it is found pure and simple. In the one case it may be employed in diet and for nourishment; in the other case it is to be regarded only as a medicine, and as a dangerous one, to be used only with caution. Fermented liquors include ale, beer, cider, and the various wines; distilled liquors include rum, gin, brandy, whisky, and the like. The church, the State, the temperance reformers ought to recognize this distinction, which now they generally ignore.

2. If men would use pure fermented liquors in moderate quantities, as a condiment, and only in connection with their meals, the use need not be harmful, and, at least in the case of those past middle life, might be beneficial. The tavern is the traveler's home. If the State would license only bona fide taverns, and then only to sell fermented liquors, and would take proper precautions to guard against adulterations, there would be small occasion for a temperance campaign against such a license system.

3. The use of fermented liquors is however dangerous in that in some individuals, especially in those who inherit a tendency to inebriety, it creates or awakens an appetite for drink. To such individuals total abstinence is the only safe course. And generally persons in good health do not need them, and therefore had better abstain from them. Their use should be exceptional, not universal; occasional, not habitual.

4. Distilled liquors are a poison, dangerous and deadly, and of comparatively modern origin. Their use is productive of more disease, physical, mental and moral, than that of any other known agent, and produces an immeasurably greater number of untimely deaths. Their use affects not only the user, but his progeny, to the third and fourth generation. To license men to sell this poison as a beverage, under any pretense, is a crime against social order, humanity and God.

5. Distilled liquor is an indispensably valuable medicine; as such its sale should be confined to the drug stores, and the druggist should sell it only on the prescription of a known physician, as he would sell arsenic or prussic acid.—Christian Union.

The Two Guests.

It was once our good fortune to spend a few days in the modest home of a friend of slender means, a home that was all that its owner could afford to make it, yet lacked many things that would have made it more comfortable and convenient. During our stay two guests were entertained at tea, both of them men of means and wide acquaintance, accustomed to all the luxury that wealth can give. But were widely different in their behavior. The first dwelt upon the fact that the house was in an out of the way spot, and that there were few or no neighbors. At table he told of the delicious tea he had drank at the house of one friend; of the rich tea service he had seen upon the table of another; of the rare old China that was used in his own household; and of the dainty meals he had eaten from it. In the cramped little sitting-room, after tea, he sat by the stove, and talked of the delights of an open wood fire, of his enjoyment of rare and costly books and pictures, and of twenty other things that the host of whose hospitality he had partaken did not and could not possess. When he was gone it was clear, although nothing was said, that his visit had caused pain; that it had made the wife feel her straitened circumstances more keenly than ever, and cast a shadow over her husband's thoughts.

The next evening came the other visitor. He brought good cheer in his very face. The room, he said, felt so warm and comfortable after his walk, which, he added, was just the thing to give a man a good appetite for his supper. At table he spoke of everything that was nice, congratulated his host on having such a snug little home, apologized for eating so much, but couldn't help it, because it was "so good" and tasted "so home-like;" liked the old black tea-pot, because it was just like the one his mother had when he was a boy, and told his hostess, who was all smiles and as happy as a queen, that she ought to thank her stars that she had no gas or furnace to ruin the flowers that made her room look so beautiful.

After tea he insisted that the children should not be sent to bed "just yet;" said he wanted to tell them a story, as he did; and when he had done, and had kissed them good-night, they trudged off up stairs with beaming faces, under the guidance of a mother who felt that a ray of real sunshine had entered her home, making it better and happier for all time. And then he smoked a pipe, declaring that he preferred it, because he had that delicacy which forbade his paying out his well-filled cigar case, praised the housewife's taste in arranging the prints and chromos that adorned the walls, and declared that the home-made mat on the floor was a very marvel of needlework.

The very first book he laid his hand on proved to be his "favorite author," and furnished the theme for a half hour's chat.

When it was time for him to leave he said that he hadn't had so good a time for months, hoped they'd invite him again, and left with hearty "good-night" to everybody. And the best of it was that there was nothing studied in all this. He said pleasant things because he liked pleasant things, and he abstained from criticisms and comparisons because he disliked them. And when he had gone, husband and wife felt that their efforts to make their little home pleasant and comfortable had not been in vain, and in their hearts they blessed the kind soul who had revealed it to them.—Transcript.

Origin of the Mormon Bible.

The real author of this book of Mormon was Rev. Solomon Spaulding, a graduate of Dartmouth College in 1785. His health failing he engaged in business, and in 1809 was living at Conneaut, O., where there are numerous Indian mounds. He then wrote a romance, setting forth the not new theory that the North American Indians were representatives of the lost tribes of Israel. Mr. Spaulding took advantage of his surroundings and connected his story with the relics which were found in the mounds. In a fictitious introduction to his novel which he entitled "The Manuscript Found," he speaks of the book as one of the exhumed relics of a past age. He makes use of the Scripture style of expression. He tells of the departure from Palestine of a Jewish father, Lehi, and his four sons, Laman, Samuel, Lemuel and Nephi, of the various journeys and of their voyage to this Western Continent. Dissension and division are frequent. The descendants of the brothers develop into hostile tribes. Then came quarrels and wars and finally a decisive battle, and in short the substance of all that is found in the "Golden Bible" of Joseph Smith. Indeed the Book of Mormon seems to be only a modified but mutilated edition of Rev. Mr. Spaulding's "Manuscript Found." There is abundant internal evidence that the later is a reproduction of the earlier work. Spaulding used to read the chapters of his story to his neighbors, who were deeply interested in its progress and were greatly entertained by the ingenuity of the author. He worked upon it three years, or until 1812, when he removed to Pittsburg, Pa. There he put his manuscript into the hands of a printer by the name of Patterson. He expected to publish the book and it was announced in the papers in 1813 as forthcoming. It never was published, however, probably because Spaulding had not the money to pay the bills. Spaulding died in 1816. The original copy was returned to his widow who kept it until the Book of Mormon was published, and then she produced it in proof of her assertion that Joseph's pretended revelation was a fraud. In the Boston Journal of May 18, 1839, she told the story of the Manuscript. The evidence is complete that Smith discovered only what he and some associate had hidden in a box of their own making in a hole of their own digging. Smith came into possession of a copy of the work of Spaulding made by Sidney Rigdon, a workman in Patterson's printing office. Rigdon confessed the fact afterward when he was cut off from the Mormon Church by Brigham Young. The three witnesses also quarreled with Joseph and Rigdon and confessed to having sworn falsely. Rigdon on leaving the work of printer became a preacher of peculiar doctrines. Smith had quite a large following in certain views peculiarly his, and these two religious Ishmaelites, coming together set to work to give the world a new Bible. Smith, adding what was suited to his purpose, dictated Spaulding's story to Oliver Cowdrey from behind a screen and the work was done, "and palmed off upon a company of poor deluded fanatics as divine."

The new prophet seems to have had but vague notions of what doctrines the new church should hold. Rigdon held to some doctrines which Smith did not. But they both agreed on the question of the Second Advent, then exciting their section of country. They made that doctrine prominent in their Bible. The idea was "the end is at hand, the Indians are to be speedily converted; America is the final gathering place of the saints, who were to assemble as near the center of the continent as possible." This was a doctrine and this they preached and this chiefly at first. It may be said in brief that the religious teachings of the Book of Mormon relate to very modern questions. The discussions of 1830 and thereabouts seem to furnish the new leaders with themes. Millinarianism is the main question. Infant Baptism, however, quite an ancient institution, is denounced and wonderful to relate polygamy, a much more ancient and for this country a very modern institution, is emphatically and repeatedly condemned. Polygamy as a duty was proclaimed by a revelation, much later in the prophet's life.—Sunday Afternoon.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Presbyterian General Assembly meets this year at Saratoga Springs.

—The attendance at twenty-nine churches in Philadelphia on a recent Sunday is reported to have been 32,388 persons, of whom 21,720 are classified as Catholics.

—There are at the present time in China 13,035 Protestant converts, and the work of evangelization is being prosecuted by 26 different societies which have 305 missionaries on the ground. Of this number of missionaries 92 are American. Between 40,000 and 50,000 people have left their idol worship.

—Rev. Dr. Andrew Bonar, in an address at the Dublin Christian Convention on the "Grace of Giving," said that King David was a great giver, and that he gave as much gold alone as there was bullion at present in the bank of England.

—Henry Varley's Tabernacle at Melbourne will, if completed in accordance with the plan, have a seating capacity of 5,000. Its central hall will be an amphitheater in style, with a large coffee-house in front. The buildings around it will provide comforts for a workingman's club. It is proposed to spend £20,000.

—A movement is on foot in Germany to increase the number of German colonists in the Holy Land. An Ultramontane paper publishes an appeal for funds, to promote the interests of the scheme. There are numerous German colonies in Palestine, chiefly of Romanists.

—The Relief Fund for Disabled Ministers of the Presbyterian Church has just received two additions to its permanent endowment; one a bequest of $250 by the late Arthur M'Arthur, of Buffalo, N. Y., and the other a bequest of a little more than $6,000, by the late Rev. Ralph Bull, of Goshen, Orange County, New York.

—Rev. J. J. Wingar writes again from Arizona Territory, December 30, having been furnished by the Bible Society with Testaments in English and in Spanish. He has been circulating them by gift and by sale to the young and old, and is quite sure they are doing good. His rule is not to give Spanish copies unless he is satisfied they will be read; and they are being read.

—Syracuse University has received and expended since its formation in 1870, $662,394.85. It now holds property valued at $604,534, and owes $125,650, with special subscriptions to meet which it has $120,271. The expense of the institution for 1878-9 will be about $29,200: Income from tuition and other sources $12,000, leaving a deficiency of $17,000, which is to be raised by subscription, as it has been every year.

—The Canadian Methodist Missionary Society reports a debt of $63,093, and solemnly inquires whether there shall be a halt in missionary work or whether the debt shall be removed. Last year's income was $141,475. The Society has 3,000 French Canadian converts, and missions among the Indians and foreign populations of Canada and in Japan and the Bermuda Islands.

—A Calcutta correspondent of the Lucknow Witness writes: "Revival meetings have recently been held in the Methodist Episcopal Church with very satisfactory results. Conversions occurred at almost every meeting, the total number during the fortnight in which the meetings were held, amounting to about fifty. Many Christians were also quickened in their spiritual life, and fitted for more successful work for God."

—The editor, after toiling thirty years in India, building chapels and school-houses largely with his own hands, on returning to America finds churches in New York on which have been lavished $200,000 to $500,000, and a secretary of his own foreign board (Presbyterian) on a salary of $3,000, while the work of his church abroad is kept under such disabilities, and its oldest mission in India is really dying out for lack of men and means.—Wilder's Missionary Review.

—A London paper gives an interesting statement of the important work accomplished by Mr. Spurgeon's Church in various directions. The Pastors' College has trained and sent forth upwards of 400 young men, many of whom occupy positions of prominence in the Baptist Churches. In addition to the 100 students now in the college, nearly 300 young men receive free instruction in the evening classes; and about 2,000 children are taught in the Sunday and other schools. Eighty colporteurs are employed in circulating religious literature; the almshouses furnish a home to seventeen aged women, and the Stockwell Orphange cares for about 250 fatherless boys.

—We have seen a paragraph in some of the Catholic papers stating that Dr. Dollinger is in friendly communication with the Archbishop of Munich, and it is hoped that he may be induced to return to the Roman Catholic Church. Dr. Dollinger has not been co-operating with the Old Catholics since the Synod at Bonn adopted a rule allowing priests to marry. But it has not been very long since he declared that he could not so dishonor himself and lie to God as to return to the bosom of the church of Rome. If he should, however, forget this, and make his peace with the Vatican, it would be worth while to consider how much there is left of the Old Catholic movement. In any case, a few years will determine its destiny.

—At the last session of the St. Louis branch of the Evangelical Alliance a communication was read from Dr. S. I. Prime, Corresponding Secretary of the Evangelical Alliance in the United States, informing the St. Louis branch that its invitation to hold the next biennial convention in St. Louis had been accepted by the general executive committee. Rev. Dr. M. Rhodes, of this city, is to deliver the address of welcome. The programme of subjects is as follows: Tuesday, October 28, 1879, Address of Welcome; Wednesday, Christian Doctrine: (1) Harmony in Essential Doctrines; (2) Christian Scholarship and the Evangelical Alliance; (3) Christian Truth and the Periodical Press; Thursday, Christian Life: (1) The Churches and Social Reform; (2) Moral Obligations of Corporations; (3) Christian Morals and Public Schools; Friday, Christian Work: (1) Union Churches and Union of Church and State; (2) The Mohammedan Powers and Christian Missions; (3) City Missions and Foreign Populations.

—A correspondent of the Echo sends some very interesting facts with regard to Native Italian Protestantism. It is divided into two sections—the Waldensian Church and the Free Italian Church. The former was founded centuries ago by Peter Waldo, who left the Romish Community. It has been confined to the valleys of Piedmont, and has suffered severe persecution. Its doctrine is evangelical, and its government presbyterian. At the last yearly synod it reported 39 churches, 24 stations and 62 places of visit; 31 pastors, 15 evangelists, 52 teachers and 7 colporteurs; 2,530 communicants, 1,203 regular hearers and 15,323 occasional hearers; 57 day schools and 103 Sunday-schools, attended by 1,840 and 4,749 scholars respectively. Its funds are obtained from Protestant countries. Scotland alone contributes no less than 122,101 francs. It is greatly in need of an educated ministry. This church, though feeble and poor, has borne splendid testimony in favor of the freedom of judgment and of conscience. It is now anxious to establish missions in various parts of Italy. Under the influence of liberty it will expand its operations. It is well worthy of help.

THE CLOCK'S SERMON.

What says the clock when it strikes one?
Watch! says the clock, oh, watch little one!
What says the clock when it strikes two?
Love God, little darling, for God loves you.
And tell me, tell me softly, what it whispers at three?
Is it "Suffer little children to come unto Me?"
Then come, gentle lambs, come and wander no more,
'Tis the voice of the Shepherd that calls you at four;
And oh, let your young hearts with gladness revive,
When it echoes as sweetly, "God bless thee," at five;
And remember at six, with the fading of day,
That your life is a vapor that passeth away.
What says the clock when it strikes seven?
Of such is the kingdom, the kingdom of heaven!
And what says the clock when it strikes eight?
Strive, strive to enter in at the Beautiful Gate!
And louder, still louder, it calls us at nine,
And its song is: "My son, give me that heart of thine."
Then sweet be your voice responsive at ten,
"Hosanna in the highest! Hosanna, amen!"
Then loud let the chorus ring on till seven,
"Praise, praise to the Father, the Father in heaven!"
While the deep stroke of midnight the watchword shall bring,
"Lo! these are my jewels, these, these!" saith the King.

Tina, The Willful Cricket.

Slowly but surely Father Cricket was dying, and his children stood round his bed disconsolate. Poor little long-legged creatures, what tears they shed, their sorrow all unknown to larger mortals! They were in a cranny in the wide fire-place at Sally Day's; the firelight flashed in upon them once and again, like the moonbeams falling so gently without. There would be no cheerful singing on the hearth to-night, for death is death even among crickets.

"My children," said dying Father Cricket, "don't forget your duty when I am gone."

"No," promised the young ones, with sobbing breath; "but tell us, father, what you would like us to do?"

"Well, children, I fancy we have lived too much in a cluster; families should divide and go right and left with their mite of help to throw into the weary world."

"But, father, you have often told us to hold together," remarked one.

"Ah! yes, hold together in love; the unity of love is strength; but go out, one here, another there, and scatter your seeds of kindness."

What, then, must we do?" queried one; and all hushed their sobs to listen. Then he bade some go to a certain hollow tree on a public road, and at the foot of the downs, to cheer with their song the passers-by, especially at eventide; others were to take up their station in the churchyard wall, and sing over the graves of the dead; some here, some there, till the whole family were disposed of, save one wee mite, the tiniest of them all—in fact she was called Tina.

"And me, father, what for me?" piped her shrill voice, excitement making it quiver and shake. She had long panted for change, that restless little one.

"To you, my child, I give the noblest task of all; stay in the old home, sing the old song to the end."

The end! Father Cricket's end now was come; he gasped, drew up his long limbs, and his life and wise commands were no more. Then followed cricket grief, cricket wailing, and then a tiny funeral passed into the moonlight, nobody seeing or knowing aught of it, for the world slept. It is a true saying, "If one cricket dies ten will come to his funeral;" for a long, long train wended their way to the last resting-place of Father Cricket. It was all over, the mourners dispersed, the solemn night dreamt on, and by and by the day broke, and folk came and went, as they did yesterday, and only a few crickets were sorrowful.

It was a glad morning in May; the wind sighed and whispered among the trees, so fresh and beautiful in their new spring robe of green; and up on the downs was the golden sunshine, where the crickets' cousins, the grasshoppers, kept perpetual holiday. And at the foot of the downs stood the hollow tree, where some of the orphan crickets were to begin their new work, their life-work. They threw off their sadness as the day smiled in their eagerness for the delightful change, for it would be delightful, a perfect existence of bliss, like one long, long holiday without end; romping and singing out their joy at eventide. And then those churchyard watchers, singing over the graves of the dead, they would sing of life, beautiful, glad, throbbing, thrilling life of sunshine, summer and glowing skies. And the rest, they all went out from the cranny, with a sort of happy flutter, that very morning, out into the sunlight, among butterflies, bees, gnats and moths, the songs of birds lending them on like voices which called them.

And the poor little home-slayer was left alone, desolate and sad, in the silent cranny. How she quivered, wept and panted, she who had craved for change, for noble work! Her little heart alone in sing the old song in the old home, to one old woman, till the end.

"Hallo, Mrs. Cricket! what's the matter."

It was Mr. Spider that asked the question, peeping slyly round the corner, as was his wont.

"I'm tired of life; but I beg to say that I am not Mrs. Cricket." That was a sore point with Tina, the mistake about her age.

"Ah, well! Miss Cricket." And Mr. Spider made a courtly bow, for he aped the ways and doings of the grand of the earth, because, as he boasted, some of his family were in kings' palaces. "But why tired of life?"

"I am tired of work, at least such work as mine;" replied Tina, somewhat sulkily, for she hated his mock politeness above all things; still, she could not help telling out her troubles to some one.

"Humble work for little workers," quoth Mr. Spider.

"How do you know? Who and what are you, that you should dictate to me, you who never did a good turn for anybody in your life, nor any of your family, either?" Tina turned up her nose in disdain, as well as a cricket can turn up a nose.

"Not so fast, Miss Pert; our family has had a great deal to do with royalty in its time. Did you never hear of that great Scotch king who was encouraged by a spider to fight and win a great battle?"

"No; and don't believe it now."

"Then disbelieve it, you little drudge. 'Tis hard to make the ignorant believe anything truly grand or great." With this Mr. Spider went on his way.

"Drudge, indeed! you sly, grizzly fly-eater!"

"Fie, Miss Cricket!" said a peaceable woodlouse who chanced to be passing; "don't call names."

"When one is miserable one doesn't care what one does," was Tina's lame excuse.

"Why should you be miserable?" queried the simple insect, halting to take breath, though its pace was slow.

"You wouldn't understand me," moaned the little cricket. Oh, she was so unhappy! And now into the cottage swept the spring breezes; it seemed to her that she could hear the voices of her brothers and sisters borne in to her. They were happy, and she should never be so there, never, never be able to sing the old song if she stayed.

Up she sprang, knocked over the woodlouse in her haste; a few pounds, and she had left the post appointed her by her dying father. Out and away, she would be free, as the rest were free! Oh, the butterflies! Oh, the spring loveliness! Out, the romping breezes! She was free! On, on she went to the happy downs. She could sing at eventide to weary travelers as well as the rest, such a song as the world never heard before for joyousness. On, on and on, and the downs were reached. It was, as she had imagined, glorious up there, amid the laughter of the flowers, the hum of the bees, the flush, the radiance and the chirp of the merry rompers, her friends.

Thus Tina burst her bonds, the bonds of her dying father's commands, and chose her life-work for herself, with her nook at Sally Day's silent and deserted. And oh, how joyfully the summer passed! What if the night winds made her shiver and shake? what if her voice was hoarse as from cold, and her young heart trembled as from fear of something she knew not what?

But at length the frosts came on, the frosts of early winter, which made them all shrink and shiver. As for poor Tina, one stinging frost took away her voice, her remaining energy, the others gathered around her in the early morning, and thought her dying. But when the sun rose they carried her out into the pleasant warmth, and she revived, poor ambitious mite! who had chosen her fate and disobeyed her father. She could only pant and look into their faces.

"I shall go back to Sally Day's," she faltered, with the sunshine all around her.

The others looked at her in silence. Could she travel so far? No, they feared not; still, they did not persuade her not to go; it was the only thing which would save her, the warmth and shelter of Sally's hearth.

"Father was right. He knew I could not bear the cold." A passion of tears shook her little frame; they could but weep with her, and wonder what would be the end.

"I will go home and take up my duty." It was pitiful to hear her weak voice, to note how tottering and unsteady were her leaps.

They watched her go; they may not quit their post—nay, she waved them back herself.

"Don't be like me; obey father. I will go back; perhaps I may not be too late to begin again."

But she was too late. A cricket lay still and cold at Sally Day's door the next morning. One more night in the frost had been too much for disobedient Tina, the ambitious cricket lay dead, her duty never taken up.

Take warning children; stand by duty, though it may hold you in humble places, in obscurity, unknown crannies; but there lies your post of service, for a Wiser than you has placed you there.—Southern Churchman.

A Little Boy's Sermon.

"Eddie," said Harry, "I'll be minister, and preach you a sermon."

"Well," said Eddie, "and I'll be the people."

Harry began: "My text is a short and easy one,—'Be kind.' There are some little texts in the Bible on purpose for little children, and this is one of them. These are the heads of my sermon:—

"First: Be kind to papa, and don't make a noise when he has a headache. I don't believe you know what a headache is; I had one once, and I didn't want to hear any one speak a word.

"Second: Be kind to mamma, and don't make her tell you to do a thing more than once. It is very tiresome to say, 'It is time for you to go to bed, half a dozen times over.'

"Third: Be kind to baby—"

"You have left out, Be kind to Harry," interrupted Eddie.

"Yes," said Harry, "I didn't mean to mention my name in the sermon. I was saying: Be kind to little Minnie, and let her have your 'red soldier' to play with when she wants it.

"Fourth: Be kind to Jane, and don't scream and kick when she washes and dresses you."

Here Eddie looked a little ashamed, and said, "But she pulled my hair with the comb."

"People mustn't talk in meeting," said Harry.

"Fifth: Be kind to Kitty. Do what will make her purr, and don't do what will make her cry."

"Isn't the sermon 'most done?" asked Eddie; "I want to sing." And without waiting for Harry to finish his discourse or give out a hymn, he began to sing, and so Harry had to stop.

ORGAN OF THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

The Plea for More Liberty.

It is understood that certain amusements and recreations are prohibited by our usages and discipline. And there is a class among us who plead for larger liberty in these things. They contend that all religious people are not alike in their tastes, and that there are many among the educated and wealthy who must have more latitude, or they will seek less strict communions. Where their Methodism is too strong for this step they will frequent our churches, but never become members. Thus it is said that we are driving away from us the monied and educated families, and losing the people whose wealth and intelligence and social influence are needed. If they adhere to us they can scarcely mingle at all with those in like circumstances who are restrained by no such rules. They cannot attend the meetings of the jockey clubs, or be present on the race course. They must give up the theater and opera, and renounce the ball-room. Games of cards and billiards for social pastime may not be indulged. They must either leave the world or the church, or they must find a church that does not interfere with their pleasures.

We might reply to this by asserting that the things prohibited, in the godly judgment of Methodism, are found to be liable to such abuses, and to lead to such dissipations, that the only remedy is to let them alone. And, moreover, that where they do not end in flagrant immorality, they are inimical to the spirituality of religion. A form of godliness may be maintained, but its power is certain to be denied. The testimony of some who declare that neither dancing nor theater-going interferes with their religious condition, may be given in all sincerity. But we must know something of their religious experience before we can attach much importance to such testimony. If we were to admit that some may be spiritual, and maintain their spirituality while indulging in the prohibited pleasures and entertainments, it might still be dangerous and ever ruinous to others. Were the whole church, including its ministers, to freely patronize these worldly games and recreations, the result can be readily imagined. Here and there is a man who can drink moderately all his life, but, for the sake of the many who cannot, total abstinence becomes his duty. If theaters, gambling and dancing are injurious to the many, and lead to the shipwreck of piety and character in thousands of instances, it becomes the imperative duty of every conscientious Christian to abstain from them. We believe that every man or woman who has any spirituality to be affected by them will be damaged, but if there are some who can pass unharmed through these fires of Moloch, they are exceptions to the rule.

Our friend who expostulates with us about the enforcement of our rules is fond of fine music, and the opera is a perfect treat to him. He would not go on Sunday night, we suppose, but this is the time when the best and most elaborate pieces are rendered. It is a Sabbath breaking institution in this region, and the entire atmosphere about it is utterly godless. Can Christians consistently patronize it? It should be their study to keep themselves unspotted from the world, but can they be clean where the whole drift is against the spirit of purity and devotion? We would yield to this plea for more liberty if it were safe and right to do so. But our rules are based upon Scripture, and the experience of many generations. If we are to have a spiritual church, it must be guarded from the intrusion of carnal and worldly people. Some of the young people may be lost to us, and the rich and fashionable may be repelled, but better so than that they should come into the church without having first renounced the world.

By pulling down the fences, and by obliterating all lines of distinction between the church and the world, our numbers of a certain sort might be increased, but the glory would depart from our tabernacle. More style and wealth, and greater numbers, would be a miserable compensation for the loss of spirituality. We accept the statement that our rules and the tone of our teaching in regard to certain popular amusements is driving some of the richer and more fashionable people from us, but, on the other hand, our friend must consider the attractive power that there is in a deeply-spiritual and unworldly church. The truly earnest and awakened soul will be drawn by it, and multitudes will be arrested and saved by this power. If we lose in one way, we gain in another. A pure gospel earnestly preached, scriptural discipline, and holy living, on the whole, attract more than they repel. Should Methodism ever give way to this plea for more liberty, the Lord will doubtless raise up another people to take up the testimony and mission which we have surrendered.

The Bond of Perfectness.

"Where withal shall we be clothed?" is one of the most considerable questions which occupy the thoughts of the world. Religion is not a matter of dress any further than it teaches modesty, cleanliness, neatness and simplicity. But our clothing may illustrate spiritual things. In these there is a putting off and a putting on. The old man must be put off, and the new man must be put on. Anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communications, are to be put off. These are the costume and wraps of the old nature, repulsive, unclean, and to be cast away. Bowels of mercy, kindness, humbleness of mind, the forgiving spirit, are to be put on. The soul must be dressed in such apparel as this, but, above all these things, "put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness." As an outer garment, the purple royal, perhaps, or as the girdle that sustains and gives grace and finish to the whole.

There is no completeness of character without love. Christianly speaking, none are really dressed who have not this—the chiefest attire of the new man. People may wear the richest materials, robes of unique and costly patterns, but the set may be awkward, and the whole contour is awry. The most excellent qualities may be possessed, and yet there is defect here and there. There are virtues of shining luster, graces that demand our respect in themselves, but they are so loosely thrown about, and so incongruous in their associations, that we are rather shocked than moved to admiration. The soul possesses many fine things, but it is not well dressed. Charity is the bond that unites all graces harmoniously, that overcomes what is discordant, and that blends all virtues in the one symmetrical character. Love is the principle of true courage, of genuine patience, of humility, meekness, and of every other thing that is true and good.

It is the perfection of all the graces, besides being in itself perfect. It is the perfection of the Christian activity. The bond that ties self-denying activity to the very highest achievements of usefulness. It is the bond of perfectness in the Christian brotherhood, delivering it from unseemly rivalries and jealousies, and knitting the body of Christ together. What a jumble of ill assorted graces, weaknesses, virtues and infirmities we have in our religious companies when this bond is lacking! Zeal, bigotry, self-seeking, sectarian hate and ambition, all flourish in the absence of love. Sharp tempers, consciousness, blindness to the good that is in others, and a vaunting and arrogant spirit, form the horrible patchwork and travesty of the wedding garment, where love is not supreme. The bond of perfectness in the individual, it is the bond of perfectness in the communion of saints.

Love is perfectness, perhaps, but it is also the bond of perfectness. We can easily test the possession by its effect in this respect. Does it give grace and symmetry to the whole character? Is there a harmonious and equal development all along the line of Christian experience and attainment? As the bond, it is not all, but it unites and perfects all. Patience and meekness, humbleness of mind and long suffering, are held in its embrace, and brought to perfection through its enfolding and overshadowing influence. Strong convictions and decided principles are held in humility, and so that the mantle of charity is not violently torn asunder. The perfectness of the most beautiful soul is gone when love loses this supreme and binding power. All the harmonious army is disordered, and the glorious garments—all glorious within—have parted with their comeliness when love has been rent by self-vaunting, or by angry and fretful tempers. The garment of religion is something ugly, indeed—something repulsively frightful—where it is not manifestly toned and adorned, and under the control of love.

Love confesses itself, just as the fitting costume declares its grace and propriety to the beholder. Put it on, and, as the bond of perfectness, it cannot be hid. Its presence will be manifest in every quality of mind and heart, and in all the relations of life. It is the purple royal of God's priests and kings, the true insignia of their high calling, and of their grandeur as the heirs of all things.

Here and There.

—Rev. W. Cowell Brown, a Wesleyan minister from London, England, who recently paid us a very agreeable visit, has, we are glad to know, reached his home in health and safety. In a private note, London, March 31, he says: "The great topic of Methodist interest on this side of the water is the Thanksgiving Fund, which up to this date has reached the noble sum of £108,000." This is over a half million of dollars. The fund is to be devoted to various connectional purposes. Both the Methodist and the Watchman, of London, contain detailed statements of the collections. The Sandwich Islands, Natal, in south Africa, and other distant fields have responded, and there are contributions from nearly every district and circuit in the home work. Our British Wesleyan kindred are far ahead of us in their giving. This grace is largely developed among them, and they seem to have wise and successful methods. From the report of the Natal District Meeting, south Africa, as published in the London Methodist, we give the following interesting extract:

"The district love-feast was conducted by the venerable Ralph Stott. It was a season of blessing long to be remembered. The Holy Spirit filled the place. Ministers and laymen, and brothers and sisters, testified to Christ's power to save—to save now, to the witness of the Spirit, to the cleansing power of Christ's blood, the hope of heaven. The baptism of fire came upon all. It seemed difficult to me to realize that I was in south Africa, and not in Yorkshire, and I gave God thanks that in Natal we have the same grand old Methodism as at home.

"The district missionary meeting was presided over by the chairman of the district, and was a great success. The Rev. J. R. Cameron, from Pondo Land, told of the difficulties and trials of the past year. At one time he feared he would have to leave his station and the country, plunged in war; but the Lord kept them in peace, and the country has been taken over by the British without bloodshed. The Rev. A. P. Chaplin told a glorious story of ardnous toil crowned with abundant success. The Rev. Ralph Stott told of the twenty thousand Indians now in the colony—of their great spiritual needs, and of his labors among them. During the progress of the meeting H. E. Sir Bartle Frere, high commissioner of south Africa arrived, attended by the Hon. W. Littleton (private secretary) and the Rev. W. Stegman, the chairman, in a few well-selected words gave to his excellency a hearty welcome, and called on him to address the meeting. Sir Bartle Frere, on rising, acknowledged his kind reception, and said that, though a member of the Church of England, he felt it his duty to show his sympathy with the Wesleyan body in their great work of leading men to the Saviour. He knew something of the operations of our church in India and England, and was very glad to find us working with such vigor in south Africa. From what he had himself seen in Kaffirland and Natal, he could testify that our labors were of the greatest benefit to the country. Adverting to affairs in Zululand, he trusted that peace would soon be restored, and that a permanent door would be opened in that land for Christianity. He expressed a most earnest desire to see a Wesleyan mission established in Zululand, so that our church might share in bringing this fine race of people to the knowledge of God."

—It seems beyond a doubt that the recent exodus of a few hundred negroes from Mississippi and Louisiana to the West owes its inspiration to land and railway agents, and to the radical politicians. We have no doubt the most of the deluded people who have been lured away from their homes, would return at once if their old employers were willing to pay their passage back. The cruelty of those who have misled them cannot well be overstated. In exceptional instances these negroes may have been subjected to injustice and to harsh treatment, but such treatment was not general, and wherever it existed public opinion and the laws would have soon corrected it. As a rule, they are and have been treated as well as any laborers of the same class in the world, and their condition here is far better than it can be in any part of the North or West. The movement is not likely to amount to much in any way, except it may be to expose the tricks of speculators and politicians, and to open the eyes of the negroes to the huge swindle of which they have been the dupes. The New Orleans Picayune, referring to the investigation of the subject by the St. Louis Republican, says:

"The examination shows, however, that while the immediate stimulus to the movement was given by the agents of land companies and railways, who were influenced by no other motive than prospective profit, the origin of it dates back at least two years, and is to be referred to the machinations of Republican politicians who had formed a scheme of utilizing negro votes by importing them into the close and doubtful States of the North and West. The direction of the current of immigration toward Kansas was not contemplated at the start, and efforts, no doubt, will be made to check it by the politicians, although the speculators may continue to encourage it. One scheme, which was projected by Boston Republicans, was to colonize with negroes a large region of unoccupied territory lying between New Mexico and the Indian Territory. They calculated that they might, in a short time, plant two hundred thousand negroes in this region, which was then to be erected into a new State, to be called Lincoln. There are obvious reasons why a project so vast as this must fail, and it is even probable that it has been already abandoned. The idea of utilizing negro votes is, however, constantly present in the Republican mind. It is only as a Republican voter that the negro has any points of interest for Republicans. He was constituted a voter to help the Republican party to maintain its supremacy, and his whole duty in life is presumed to be embraced in that function. The measure proposed by Senator Windom was an exposition of this sentiment. It was introduced not with the supposition that it could be passed through Congress, but that it might be made the basis of an emigration propaganda among the Southern negroes. The idea has been taken up by politicians more practical in their notions and their methods than Senator Windom, and a project has been proposed to raise a fund for the purpose of diverting the current of negro emigration into certain Northern and Western States. It is openly avowed that they are wanted for no other purpose than to carry the next Presidential election for the Republicans."

—We have reflected somewhat on the fact that for thirty years we have seldom heard any one speak of being truly prosperous. On the other hand, in our long association with church people, we have heard little else than complaints about financial losses, dull business, poor crops and heavy taxation. A correspondent informs us that this has been his experience, and he begins to suspect that this talk is for the preacher's special benefit and edification. The remarks are not always addressed to him, but made in his hearing and for a purpose, sometimes to head off an application for a subscription, and at other times to explain the meager allowance of the pastor. Let a collection be started or announced, and it is sadly amusing to see how all begin with one accord to make excuses. It would refresh us greatly to meet a Christian man or woman longing for an opportunity to give something, and as a thank-offering to God for all His mercies. Have not some people become so used to making a poor mouth, and of pleading poverty as an extenuation of their covetousness, that they are real story-tellers? Here is a man who declares that he has no money to give. He makes this right with his own conscience by a reserved but not expressed emphasis on "to give." And it may be literally true that he has no money, none, for instance, in his pocket, but he may have some in bank or at interest, or he has property and investments which represent money. He may have no money, but for his own purposes he can get it. However this may be, we lose respect for a man whose talk to another is meant for the ear of his pastor, or whose statements are meant as apologies indirectly for his lack of liberality. It is better to be candid, straightforward and true. Give the reason of withholding, or give none, but be manly and truthful. A change of tune would be wholesome. Meet the demand cheerfully, and enlarge upon the mercies of Heaven. Form the habit of magnifying the benefits of a generous Providence, and, just for a blessed change, give expression of thankfulness, and tell how rich and happy you are.

—The Surgeon General's report for the week ending April 12 shows that New Orleans is remarkably healthy. It says: "New Orleans, week ending April 6 67 deaths; annual death-rate per 1,000 of population, 16.6. The mortality for the week reported was the lowest ever known to the Board of Health of New Orleans. The city is in a very healthy condition." This is at the rate of 16.6 per 1,000 annually. The rate in New York, for the same period, is 22.1 per thousand; St. Louis, 11; Richmond, 27; Nashville, 25. New Orleans is at this time one of the healthiest cities in the United States.

—The State Convention, for the formation of a new constitution, organized at the State-House, in New Orleans, on Monday, April 21. Lieutenant Governor Wiltz was elected president of the Convention, and W. H. Harris, of Point Coupee, was elected secretary. In Congress the Senate is debating the Army Bill, the House is receiving and referring bills, but has passed upon no important measures during the week.

—Russia is in a state of great excitement, occasioned by the recent attempt to assassinate the Emperor. Martial law has been declared, and unlimited power is given to military governors to arrest and punish. The Nihilist or Socialist movement there seems to be thoroughly organized, and is of formidable proportions.

—Nothing very definite has been heard of late from Zululand. Cetewayo has become a name of renown. The result of the Zulu war is, however, only a question of a few months. When the English shall have had time to bring their resources to bear, the south African warriors must yield. Right may be on their side, but the might of the British lion will prevail.

—The Afghan war has recently exhibited no very active or decided features. Gen. Roberts is marching on Cabul with a force sufficient to take it. Something like negotiations are going on between Yakoob Khan and the British authorities, but their results are extremely uncertain.

New York Observer.

—The last General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (South) appointed a committee to promote Sabbath observance, of which the Rev. James Stacy is the chairman. This was a good measure, and we trust it will be followed up by such appropriate action as will give a fresh impulse to the cause. "The land mourneth" because of Sabbath desecration.

We noticed last week the stoppage of railroad trains on the Ohio and Mississippi railroad at Flora, Ill., by enforcing the Sunday law. Whether that step was taken in good faith or not we are unable to say; but we do honestly believe it would be better for the country, better for travelers, better for stockholders, better for the roads and cars, if no railroad wheel turned on its axis upon the Lord's day.

The Sabbath Committee in this city is active and efficient, with wisdom and energy promoting the work. They will soon call the attention of the public to what they have done, and report progress. In the meantime we may truthfully say, in spite of all the violations of law by which Sunday is profaned, the city of New York never had more quiet Sabbaths than it now enjoys, and it is quite probable that no other city of its extent and population pays a more decent external respect to the day. Probably our Central Park takes a vast deal of Sunday holiday-making out of observation.

But the friends of law and order, South and North, may be encouraged. Public sentiment sustains judicious effort to maintain the rights of the people to one quiet day in seven.

—We hope none of our readers will overlook Bro. Sutherland's "postal" report of the work on our Border Mexican Mission district. He is preaching with one of his missionaries among a people never before visited by a "Protestant preacher, they having been brought to the knowledge of the truth by private members of the church from Corpus Christi." This is one of the peculiarities of this Mexican mission work; as soon as a man is converted he begins to tell the story to his people. The genuine missionary fire burns in their hearts, and they are anxious that the flame shall spread until all their nation shall rejoice in its light and heat. The preachers are unable to meet the wants of the field opening on every side, but the member obeys the call that comes to every truly converted soul, and is eager that others should share his joy. We need this spirit all over the church. If every member was at work telling to friends and neighbors the story of the cross, what a religious revolution would shake the land!

—Times are hard, money is scarce, business is dull, retrenchment is duty—please stop my—beer? O, no! times are not hard enough for that yet. But there is something which costs me a large amount which I wish to save. Please stop my tobacco, cigars and snuff? O, no! not these, but I want to retrench somewhere. Please stop my—ribbons, jewels, ornaments and trinkets? Not at all! pride must be fostered if times are so hard, but I believe I can see a way of saving in another direction. Please stop my—tea, coffee and needless, unhealthy luxuries? No, no, no; not these; I cannot think of such a sacrifice; I must have something else. Ah! I have it now—my paper; I must save that; I will stop my paper; that two dollars will take me through the panic easily. I believe in retrenchment and economy, especially of brains.

St. Louis Christian Advocate.

—But, after all, the chief blame rests on the parents—and such parents. At any or all hours of the day or night their children are out on the streets, or in dens of infamy, learning or practicing all the various kinds of vice their capabilities will allow, and where are the parents who owe it to themselves, to their country, to their race, and, above all, to Almighty God, that they rear their children to honesty, truthfulness, temperance, industry, frugality, and whatever else may be necessary to prepare them for useful citizenship? Where are they? What are they doing? What are they thinking about? And they are engrossed in business, intoxicated in the whirl of fashion, at the opera, or the theater, or the dance house, or the private party, or entertaining company—anything, almost everything other than the care of their children.

If it ever occurs to them that their children are being trained for vice, and for the rewards of vice—the jail, the penitentiary, the gallows and the devil—they are too much engaged to consider the matter further, perhaps, than to fly into a passion, and for some comparatively trivial fault angrily and severely chastise the child, not so much for its good as for the indulgencies of their own bad tempers—tempers made worse by an inward consciousness of their own dirrelictions.

Christians and citizens! It is high time you were fully alive to your interest and duty in this matter. Here is a wide field open before you, wide enough and foul enough to give work for all. Jews and Christians, Catholics, Protestants and citizens, all may find work in it, and important work it is. Churches may here find work in abundance, and perhaps the best thing they can do at first is to wash their own hands clean from all Sabbath breaking, all rafflings, all dancing, all fairs and festivals, all those little pleasing devices in which the devil is served in the name of the Lord; then with clean hands and a clear record they can go at the work of moral reformation without fear of the retort: "Physician, heal thyself."

London Methodist.

—It is not always that ministers are candid enough to confess when their intellectual resources are exhausted, and the more limited men's resources are the more reluctant they are to admit the fact that they are used up. A minister of the Free Church of Scotland seems, however, to be coming up to perfection in this respect. He is reported to have said a short time ago—we presume to his congregation—"Ministers, like most other men, are generally possessed more or less by one or two leading thoughts which are perpetually appearing, if not in direct statement, at least in the color which they give to all they say. I feel that I have given my people every scrap of knowledge that I have to impart; that I have harped long enough for their good on my favorite strings; and that it would be well for them to have their view-point somewhat changed, and the old truths presented in new lights." It is not very likely that this minister's congregation would be ready to accept his judgment of himself. He deserved to be kept for his courage. But his statement is certainly an argument in favor of itinerancy. Most of the March quarterly meetings will have been held before this week's issue of the Methodist reaches the hands of its readers, so that there is not much danger of the outspoken utterance above being used in any practical form against those ministers who have acquainted their congregations with their "two or three leading thoughts."

Field Notes.

SHUBUTA, MISS., April 19, 1879.

Shubuta is situated on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, thirty-eight miles south of Meridian, thirty-five miles north of the Alabama line, and has about twelve hundred inhabitants. They ship about six thousand bales of cotton, and one hundred thousand dollars worth of country produce per annum. The country is very fertile, and there are several fine marl beds near the railroad, that I hope may soon be utilized. The people are intelligent, and know how to take care of the preacher and his family. They are now building a parsonage that will be as nice as any I have seen in the Conference. I trust we shall be able to give you a good report of the spiritual work.

J. M. WEEMS.

VALDEN, Miss., April 19, 1879.

DEAR DOCTOR: On yesterday some of the ladies of Valden Church met at the residence of Rev. K. A. Jones, presiding elder of Winona district, and organized a Woman's Missionary Society, auxiliary to our Conference Society. Mrs. E. J. Sage, president, Mrs. Ida Williamson, vice president, Miss Sallie Jones, secretary, and Mrs. K. A. Jones, treasurer. These ladies mean business. Health of country good; farming interests satisfactorily progressing. I am busy in my charge, people attentive to the word, and we are hopeful of a revival of God's work.

Respectfully, A. P. SAGE.

ENTERPRISE, Miss., April 19, 1879.

Chancellor Wesley Drain, a prominent man in East Mississippi, died in this place last night. He had lived threescore and ten years, and died in blissful hope of eternal life, in the communion of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

A protracted meeting has been going on in the Methodist Church in Shubuta for a week, and promises well. The pastor, Rev. J. M. Weems, has had the assistance of some brethren from a distance.

W. T. HEARD.

MERIDIAN, Miss., April 21, 1879.

DR. PARKER: Since January we have received into the church eight persons on profession of faith, besides others by certificate.

Our Sunday-school is well conducted, and is flourishing. A Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has been organized. Our church building will soon be enlarged and improved—a work much needed. We are hopeful that good will be done.

Yours, E. H. MOUNGER,

HAZLEHURST, Miss., April, 1879.

DEAR DOCTOR: I am getting acquainted with my people here; have seen all of them that live within two or three miles of the place, two or three times. Am hopeful of success. Attention and attendance good. We are said to have larger congregations than any church in our Confer-once, and better off in a worldly way than any other. I don't know as to this. Some things here are not in keeping with our General Rules. We hope by God's grace to amend. I think the church is disposed to work with the pastor.

T. S. WEST.

ROBESON SPRINGS, ALA., April 15, 1879.

MR. EDITOR: I am now about closing up my fourth round on my work, and think this field promises a good harvest. Our first quarterly meeting was held on the fifteenth and sixteenth of March. The financial report for the quarter was tolerably good. We expect to commence a meeting at Deatesville on the fourteenth of June.

Fraternally yours,

S. H. NETTLES.

Notice

A concert, for the benefit of the Louisiana Avenue Church Building Association, is to be given at Odd Fellows' Hall, on Tuesday evening, April 29, 1879.

Some of the best professional and amateur talent of the city has been secured. To lovers of music a treat may be expected.

Refreshments will be served at moderate prices, and all are invited to invest liberally toward the success of the entertainment. Price of tickets to concert fifty cents.

The proceeds are to go toward the fund to be applied ultimately to the building of a new church, instead of our present one on Louisiana Avenue. The site is most excellent.

The Young Men's Christian Association will hold a series of meetings at their rooms, 57 Camp street, commencing Friday at 7:30 P. M., continuing Saturday at 11 A. M., and 7:30 P. M.

Mr. A. T. Hemmingway, General Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago, and Mr. Douglas, General Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association of St. Louis, are expected to deliver addresses on topics of general interest to the people of New Orleans in behalf of the young men of our city and State.

Members of the Association are expected to invite their friends, and be with us.

Note from Bishop Pierce.

To answer many letters in one, allow me, Mr. Editor, to say, through the Advocate, that, while I mean to do all I can, my condition forbids my making specific promises for special times or work. I have been out of order all winter—first with cold, then pneumonia, finally with rheumatism. Of the last I have had three distinct attacks—all violent. These things have exhausted me and left me thin and weak. The doctors and friends all say I must rest till nature recuperates. I am recovering, I think, day by day; but feel that I must be prudent. Resting with me is hard work, and I shall not unduly protract it.

G. F. PIERCE.

March 27.

We notice that the Medical Association of Mississippi at its recent meeting in Aberdeen, elected Dr E. P. Sale a member of the State Board of Health, and also president of the Association. Dr. Sale is a son of Col. J. B. Sale, who for many years, and up to the time of his death, was among the most eminent members of the legal profession in Mississippi. We congratulate our friend on the merited honors which have been conferred upon him.

Our friends of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Algiers are to have an entertainment at the Masonic Hall, Algiers, April 23-24, at half-past seven P. M. Every thing is to be done decently and in order. There is to be music and refreshments. The object is a worthy one and we hope that the entertainment will be favored by many from this side of the river.

Rev. William Hart, writing from Dixon's Cross Roads, Bossier parish, La., April 13 says:

Revs. Robert M. Stewart, local preacher of the North Bossier circuit, Louisiana Conference, died on Saturday, the eleventh instant, of typhoid pneumonia. We sorrow over the death of this good brother, but not as others which have no hope. Bro. Stewart leaves a wife and four young children.

The Rev. Jesse F. Ellis, of the North Alabama Conference, and preacher-in-charge of Newtonville Mission, died on Sunday, March 16, of typhoid pneumonia.

The postoffice of Rev. R. B. Downer is Ocean Springs, Miss., where communications should be addressed to him for the future.

Rev. William Harris, of the Southwestern Missouri Conference, died at Carthage, Mo., April 10, 1879.

Rev. T. H. Wardlaw's address is changed from Wetumpka to Eclectic, Elmore County, Alabama.

Books and Periodicals.

GREEK VIGNETTES. A Sail in the Greek Seas, Summer of 1877. By James Albert Harrison. Boston: Houghton, Osgood & Co. The Riverside Press, Cambridge, 1878.

The author is a son of our deceased friend and brother, J. P. Harrison, for many years a prominent merchant and citizen of New Orleans. He was formerly a professor in Randolph Macon College, and now fills the chair of modern languages in the Washington and Lee University. He has been an extensive traveler, and for several years has spent his summer vacations in travel in various parts of Europe. Prof. Harrison writes ornately, gracefully and piquantly. There is graphic power in his style, and he paints things vividly. The romance, poetry and humor of places, incidents and people, do not escape him. "Greek Vignettes" is, indeed, a most delightful and entertaining book. The several chapters are: Through the Ionian; Summer Days in Athens; Attic Experiences; Glimpses of Old and New Athens; Odds and Ends of Greek Life; Through the Islands of the Blest.

—The Quarterly Review of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for April, reaches us just as we are about to go to press, and, of course, we cannot now speak of the articles. The paper of this number is much heavier and better than that of the January number, and the general appearance and typography are excellent. From the following table of contents it will be seen that the topics are varied and important, and that the writers are among our ablest men: 1. Miracles and Testimony, by the editor. 2. Anglo-Catholicism—Some Radical Questions Concerning Episcopalianism in England and America, by Rev. J. J. Tigert, A. M. 3. The Study of Nature and Her Laws, Compatible With the Character and Functions of a Christian Minister, by A. Means, D. D., LL. D. 4. The Human Will, by Prof. W. G. Richardson, Ph. D. 5. Constitution of the Soul, by R. H. Rivers, D. D. 6. The Sinlessness of Christ, by T. O. Summers, D. D., LL. D. 7. Mediation, by Joseph B. Weet, D. D. 8. The Supernatural in the New Testament, by A. W. Wilson, D. D. 9. The English Language, Its Age and Origin, by A. B. Stark, LL. D. 10. The Poetry of Tennyson, by J. B. Wardlow, Jr., A. M. 11. Present State of Astronomical Science, by H. S. Thrall, D. D.; Literary Table; Views and Reviews—Editorial Comment; Magazine Notices; Editorial Notes.

—The May zine of Art for April abounds in beautiful engravings, and contains much choice literature on art subjects. Published by Cassell, Petter & Galpin, London, Paris and New York.

—A new serial story by Jean Ingelow will begin in the number of Littell's Living Age for the week ending April 26. It is published from the author's advance sheets, and opens in a very interesting way. The progress of a new story by this popular writer will be eagerly watched.

A new volume of the Living Age, by the way, began with the first number of April, affording a good time for the beginning of new subscriptions.

For fifty-two numbers of sixty-four large pages each (or more than 3,000 pages a year,) the subscription price ($8) is low; while for $10 50 the publishers offer to send any one of the American $4 monthlies or weeklies with the Living Age for a year, both postpaid. Littell & Co., Boston, publishers.

—Southern Musical Journal for April contains several pieces of choice music, besides a large variety of articles on the subject of music and kindred topics. Published by Ludden & Bates, Savannah, Ga. Price, $1 per annum, with premium of sheet music to the value of $1.

—The Louisiana Journal of Education is the title of a new monthly periodical published in New Orleans, of which Robert M. Lusher and William O. Rogers are editors and proprietors. Annual subscription, $1 in advance. Mr. Lusher is State Superintendent of Education in Louisiana and Mr. Rogers is superintendent of the public schools of this city. Both of these gentlemen are experienced educators, and they will doubtless furnish an able and useful journal. The first number, April, 1879, is a model of typographical taste, and is well filled with articles bearing upon the subject of education.

—The National Repository for May has: Spring With the Poets—selections—Illustrated; Brazil, Illustrated; Forney, As It Was and As It Is; A Notable Family of Printers; Le Afiah; The Shepherdess of the Alps; Poetry, Ancient and Modern; Lorenzo Dow; A Medical Mystery; Literary Habits of Authors; Editorial Miscellany. The National for May is one of the best numbers we have seen of this fine magazine.

MARRIED.

SMITH—WOODWARD.—At the residence of the bride's father, Capt. E. M. Woodward, of Clark county, Miss., April 16, 1879 by Rev. T. S. West, Mr. Wilber F. Smith, of South Carolina, and Miss Mollie W. Woodward.

Mr. Smith's subscription to the ADVOCATE is duly received. Truly a good beginning.—EDITOR ADVOCATE.

BRENT—KAIGLER.—At the residence of the bride's mother, near Holmesville, Miss., by Rev. H. P. Lewis, April 9, 1879, William H. Brent to Miss Julia H. Kaigler, all of Pike county, Miss.

CARR—TIGNER.—At the residence of Mr. William Crutcher, Vicksburg, Miss., by Rev. Dr. W. H. Watkins, of Jackson, Miss., February 24, 1879, Mr. J. D. Carr to Mrs Mary Eliza Tigner.

RUSHING—DEAL.—April 3, 1879, at the residence of the bride near Walnut Grove, Miss., by Rev. Irvin Miller, Mr. W. A. Rushing to Miss Sophia Deal.

CLUB RATES.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the Nashville Christian Advocate will be sent to same address for one year on receipt of $3 50.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the Texas Christian Advocate will be sent to same address for one year on receipt of $4.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine will be sent to same address for one year on receipt of $4, or to ministers for $3 50. Each paper to be mailed from its own office.

SPECIMEN COPIES

of the ADVOCATE will be mailed when desired, to facilitate agents in securing subscribers. Pastors will confer a favor by announcing this fact and forwarding names to the publisher.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To those disposed to economize this popular hotel offers an opportunity seldom found at so highly a first class house, having reduced its rates to $3 and $3 50 per day.

W. C. SHEPARD & Co. sell chamber sets, white stone, $3; fancy, $5; dinner sets, white stone, 12; semi-china, $15 and $18; china, 124 pieces, $25.

DENTIST.—Dr. E. P. Doremus, 110 Canal street, whose card will be seen elsewhere, is the successor of the late Dr. Dickey. This gentleman stands high for his profession. Call and see him. Prices in keeping with the times.

TOOTH WASH.—For the teeth, gums and breath use the aromatic "Salicyline" sent to any address on receipt of price. See advertisement on the sixth page.

PIANO OR ORGAN.—If you never dealt before with Louis Grunewald, 14 to 22 Baronne street call and see him; or if you reside in the country write him and get his figures for any kind of an instrument, and you will be so pleased you will never purchase elsewhere again.

PIONEER GENTLEMEN'S FURNISHING GOODS.—It is with pleasure we welcome the return of our genial friends, Thomas W. Moody, direct from the principal Eastern cities where he has been engaged in purchasing magnificent stock of gentlemen's furnishing goods to decorate the windows of Charles Leighton, and the persons of all who may be fortunate enough to secure bargains.

PINE ISLAND GUANO.—For sugar cane and all garden crops use the above. For cotton and all summer and fall crops, use Pine Island Ammoniated Phosphate. H. W. Montgomery, 10 Common street, the sole agent. See advertisement on the sixth page, then correspond with this gentleman. Wherever used it has given satisfaction.

ATTORNEY AT LAW.—Our friends in Texas requiring the services of a good lawyer, should consult William L. Thompson, corner Houston and Soledad streets, San Antonio, Texas. The card of this gentleman will be seen on this page.

WE saw on exhibition at the office of H. F. Bridewell, superintendent for Halliday & Co.'s safes, Moore's Patent Combination Desk; three desks in one. This desk is a great improvement over the Wooton desk. Persons interested should call and examine it.

SORGO HAND-BOOK.—The above book is very highly spoken of, and should be in the hands of every planter in the South. It will be sent free to any desiring it. Address Rivers Manufacturing Co., Cincinnati, O. See advertisement.

DR. H. G. ROOT.—This gentleman is anxious to inform the readers of the ADVOCATE on the seventh page that if they are unfortunately afflicted with fits or epilepsy they can find relief by applying to him.

COAL AND WOOD YARD.—Persons consuming either large or small quantities of wood should undoubtedly get their supply from Mr. Deal, corner Franklin and Erato streets. From our knowledge of this gentleman we think our readers will get a load there are not in the habit of getting good wood, and at the same time good ready for the stove, without the trouble of getting it cut. His advertisement is on this page.

OPELOUSAS STEAMBOAT.—Take the Vazoo, which leaves here for Washington, Opelousas and other landings on the coast every Thursday. No better boat to sail by. Our esteemed friend, Capt. Grow, 110 Gravier street, is the agent with whom it is a pleasure to do business. Call and make his acquaintance, even if you do not do business with him, and you will meet with a polished and courteous gentleman.

LUMBER, SHINGLES, CYPRESS, Etc. Sugar planters, builders and others, who may want good shingles as well as reliable sawers, we refer them to Messrs. F. Escher & Son, proprietors of the Pelayose saw Mill at the head of Canal street avenue. This firm, so honorable and straightforward in dealing, has succeeded in building up a good business. We commend them to our readers feeling confident that they will give entire satisfaction as to price and quality of the material. See advertisement.

SAVE YOUR CARPETS.—H. L. Jones, Jr., at 170 Camp street, is the proprietor of the Boston Patent Steam Carpet Beating and Renovating Co." The advertisement elsewhere ought to be read carefully by those owning carpets. The proprietor claims by his renovating process all grease, soil and stains of every kind are taken from the carpets. This process has been in existence now in this city only a few months, but during that time has succeeded in building up a profitable business and the letters now in the hands of the people in New Orleans, we would suppose to the best as carpets renovated or stained. A call on him and he will give you all the information on the subject.

MOURNING AND OTHER GOODS.—Ladies in mourning are specially invited to call this week at that popular store of E. H. Adams & Bro., where they will secure bargains at hard-times prices. Their other goods are equally low in prices. We wish to call the attention of our readers to a special point of interest, that all purchases made at this store are paid or in cash, hence they are enabled to fix at the lowest figures at which goods can possibly be secured. This course permits them to sell at very low prices. With the personal knowledge of their reliability, we take pleasure in recommending the store to the consideration and patronage of those who desire to deal with a reliable establishment, where the best of goods are sold at low prices.

ROAD WAGONS, BRAKE WAGONS, CARRIAGES, Etc. Anderson, Harris & Co., corner Liberty and Baymiller streets, Cincinnati, are among the largest dealers in the above lines in the West. The representative of the ADVOCATE, on his visit last fall to that city, made the acquaintance of these gentlemen, and was taken through their extensive buildings. They are practical carriage makers and carefully inspect every vehicle before it is shipped. With their large facilities, Messrs. Anderson, Harris & Co. are enabled to turn out from 150 to 200 carriages per month. The first floor of their main building are used for office, wareroom packing, shipping and stock rooms; second floor are the paint and wood shops; on the second floor are upper gearing and finishing rooms; third floor for trimming, painting and varnishing shops. This firm does a large trade with the South and West and is rapidly increasing. Messrs. Anderson, Harris & Co. fill all orders promptly, and ship with dispatch, which they do at the best possible rates, either by car loads or by single vehicle. To any of our readers, we would say, who contemplate buying a vehicle of any kind, and at the same time desire a first-class job and save money, to put themselves in correspondence with this honorable dealing house, and they will give entire satisfaction both in good work and low prices.

A Word with Practical People.

The climate of some parts of the South seems to peculiarly foster three special scourges of the general health: these are yellow fever, periodically; malarial fever and consumption or premature decline always. The result of all of them, when not rapidly fatal, is complete prostration of the whole system, and in most cases, utter inability to derive restoration from the nourishment of ordinary food. Then the Doctors all say, the only thing the stomach and pancreas, and liver, can accept and turn into vitalizing blood and solid flesh is cod Liver Oil, or rather Scott's Emulsion of the Oil with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda. This is rather sweeter than the Oil alone, and is besides a splendid tonic, and then it has not the least disagreeable taste or odor, and is acceptable to the most sensitive stomach.

A Favorable Notoriety.—The good reputation of "Brown's Bronchial Troches" for the relief of Coughs, Colds and Throat Diseases, has given them a favorable notoriety. Twenty-five cents a box.

POZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER is acknowledged by thousands of ladies, who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not roughen the skin, chap, blister, or leave black spots in the pores. Mothers can apply it to infants who become chafed with a scrofy of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot, 607 North Sixth street, St. Louis (Lindell Hotel.)

The undersigned is the sole proprietor of the Hollows Patent Reliable Wire Carpet-Beating machine for cleaning Carpets and Matting for Dwellings, Churches, Public Buildings, Hotels, Steamboats, etc.

This, the Boston Patent Beater, has been in successful operation for the past fifteen years in all the principal cities in the United States, and has a world-renowned reputation as a safe-to-handle machine.

This machine consists of a shed of rudder traps, over which the carpets pass, and are beaten by a number of endless collapsible whips, restoring the color and removing all dust, dirt, vermin and moths, without the slightest injury to the finest fabric.

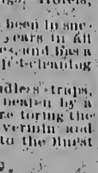
RENOVATING.

By the renovating process all grease, Ink, Coal Smoke, coal, and stains of every description, are extracted from the carpets, restoring their original brightness of color. The quality of the restorative is not injurious to the most delicate tint or fabric, and is an actual preventive against moth. Send a specimen of velvet rug, which will be cleaned gratis as a sample.

Plush and Mohair Furniture, Plush and Damask Lambrequins, Wax Cloth Shades, Damask Curtains, Blankets, Drugget, Piano and Table Covers, renovated to look like new.

Carpets taken up and relaid by first-class workmen. No charge for taking up, packing or storing of Carpets.

Our rooms being easy of access, all, and especially ladies are respectfully invited to call and see the machinery in operation and be convinced that this is the only way to have your Carpets thoroughly renovated from the dust, vermin and moths, for it cannot be done by hand beating. Every Carpet is receipted under the personal supervision of the proprietors, and satisfaction in every respect guaranteed.



On receipt of orders we will send one of our covered wagons for and return your Carpets free of charge to any part of the city. All orders by mail or left at the office or works will be promptly attended to.

Farm, Garden and Household.

A BRUSH FOR WASHING DISHES.—A housewife in Coleman's Rural gives her mode of washing dishes with a broom-corn brush:

"This brush is of easy construction. Take from four to a dozen stalks. I usually keep three or more sizes, as they constantly extend their sphere of usefulness. Tie firmly with wire and twine, and sew the brush after the fashion of a broom, leaving but a few inches of brush. Leave the smallest brush round, as they drop into cups and cans more readily. The largest I use for scrubbing benches, washing out tubs, etc.

"Now for my mode of dish-washing. First, I place the dish-pan on the table, then a small pan, usually a frying-pan, with very hot water; first gather all the spoons and wash with the brush, and if no rubbing is needed, wipe and put away at once. Treat the knives and forks in the same manner. Then bring each dish successively over the pan, and wash with all the crumbs and mess adhering; placing them in the large dish-pan. The contents of the frying-pan will be very acceptable to the poultry-yard. Now pour over the dish water. I keep a piece of soap on a fork and with the use of the brush, render it a fine sudsy. I can now proceed with the brush, or return to the dish-cloth if the water is not too hot. But first remove the table cloth, and spread a towel, made from a coffee-sack, to receive the drippings. Wipe while hot, no murky dew rises on their shining surface. I do not rinse my dishes."

THE "EVAPORATION" OF FRUITS AND VEGETABLES.—The preservation of apples, potatoes and the like by evaporating their juices rapidly, is becoming an important industry in Ohio and Michigan. A correspondent of a Detroit paper describes the operation of a factory in Lenawee county having a capacity of four hundred bushels a day. The apples are pared, cored and sliced at once by hand machinery. The slices are then spread on Galvanized screens and placed in the evaporator, a chamber running from the top of a large furnace in the basement upward, out through the roof of a three story building. The current of heated air is kept as nearly as possible at two hundred and forty degrees. The screens of trailers on endless chains that move upward at intervals of three to five minutes, when a fresh screen is put in below and one is taken off at the third story completed. The dried or evaporated product is then packed in pasteboard boxes holding from one to five pounds, and these in turn are packed in cases of two hundred pounds each.

A bushel of apples make about five pounds of dried fruit; and the process of evaporation is so rapid that the fruit loses none of its freshness and flavor. In some of the factories the cores and peelings are converted into vinegar; in others into apple jelly, out of which every variety of fruit fruit jelly is made by the addition of flavoring extracts.

Sweet corn, potatoes and other vegetables have been successfully preserved by this process. The chief markets for these products is the mining regions of the West. Doubtless a large export trade will ultimately result from it.—Exchange.

STRAWBERRY CULTURE.—The strawberry is very easily raised on any land that will raise good crops of corn or potatoes. The plants should be put on in April. One-fourth of an acre is all that is needed for one family. Set one half of this one spring and the other half the next spring, and from that on, as soon as the fruit is picked, plow the first half, turning everything under, and the next spring set this again. The land should be well broken, and harrowed level. Don't throw up ridges; but set on the level land three feet and six inches between the rows, and the same in the rows, and, as the plants make runners, lay them to fill the space between plants. Cultivate and keep clean, and by fall you will have a united row. As soon as the ground is frozen, mulch or cover with straw that is clean of weed seed. If the plants are only partially covered, it is better than to be covered too deep. I have been growing strawberries for market for the last fifteen years and know of no mode of culture as good and cheap as the above. In 1877 I shipped 27,000 quarts of strawberries of my own growing for family use. I prefer the Cumberland. Trimmed for home use, Captain Jack and Wilson's Albany are best for shipping.—Indiana Farmer.

CHICKEN CHOLERA.—In the spring of the year, diarrhœa, or cholera is often produced by too little rain, and too much fresh green food. Dampness and impure water increase the tendency. Avoid these effects, and give the animal pure water only to drink. It is easily made in a barrel or tub, pouring off after settling. Charcoal mixed with water has a correcting tendency. Prepared chalk may be mixed with the meal. Bement recommends a mixture of five parts of chalk, five of rhubarb and three of cayenne pepper; and in severe cases would add one part alum. Each fowl should have more of this daily than will lay on a nickle cent.—American Stock Journal.

APPLE CHARLOTTE.—Butter a brown earthen dish, and place around the sides slices of bread which have been cut an inch thick, soaked in cold water, and buttered; fill the dish with sliced apples and grate over them one nutmeg; strew on one cup of sugar, and then pour on one cup of water; this will carry the sugar through the apple. Cover the apple with slices of soaked and buttered bread, then cover the whole with a large plate, and bake in a very moderate oven four hours. Remove from the oven half an hour before time to dish, and set where it will be cooling. When ready to dish, loosen gently round the edges with a knife, lay the dish in which you intend serving it on the one in which it was baked, turn the dishes over, and lift the pudding dish off. This is a very handsome dish. Serve with sugar and cream or plain.—Christian Union.

BAKED COD OR SALMON.—Take a fish weighing eight or nine pounds, wash and dry it; then lay it in the pan, and skewer to keep the head and tail together. Stuff the body and eyes with a stuffing made of chopped pork, pounded biscuit, sweet herbs, pepper, salt, onions and butter. Sew up the body and bake two hours. Flour well and baste often. Make the gravy in the following manner: Stir into one pint of boiling water two spoonfuls of flour wet with cold water, one spoonful catsup, a pinch of ground mace, half a tea-spoonful of ground parsley. Let this boil, and when the fish is dished, stir the gravy that is in the pan into the gravy. Garnish the fish with sliced lemon and the yolks of hard boiled eggs.—Cultivator.

FRUIT AND NUT CAKE.—Four cups of flour, two cups of sugar, one cup of butter, six eggs—whites and yolks separated, one cup cold water, one coffee-cup of hickory nut kernels, free from shells and very sweet and dry, one half pound raisins, seeded, chopped and dredged with flour, one teaspoonful soda, dissolved in hot water, two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar, sifted in the flour, one teaspoonful mixed nutmeg and cinnamon. Rub butter and sugar together to a smooth cream, put in the yolks, then the water, spice, soda, next the whites and flour. The fruit and nuts, stirred together and dredged, should go in last. Mix thoroughly and bake in two loaves.

MINISTER'S PUDDING.—Three eggs, an equal weight of sugar and butter, and the weight of two eggs in flour. Melt the butter, and beat it to a cream; beat the eggs well, mix them with the butter and sugar, beating the whole to a froth; then add the flour by degrees, and the rind of a lemon chopped very finely. Beat it all together, and pour into a mold; boil gently for an hour. This pudding requires as much beating as a sponge cake. When properly made it is delicious.

Scientific.

—Since August, 1875, when Mr. Hall, of Washington, announced the discovery of the moons of Mars, these two new acquaintances have been subjected to the most accurate inspection, and M. Flammarion, an eminent French astronomer, has just published some very interesting information relative to those minutest of heavenly bodies. They revolve round Mars very nearly in the plane of the equator; their orbits are almost circular; the most distant satellite makes its revolutions in 30 hours 18 minutes; the nearer one in 7 hours 39 minute; the distance of the farther one from Mars is 32.5 seconds; that of the inner one, 13 seconds; the diameter of Mars is 19 328 seconds. Translating those three dimensions into figures, we obtain: The diameter of Mars, 6 760 kilometers (five-eighths of a mile each); distance of the exterior satellite, 20,116 kilometers; that of the interior one, 6,051. Those distances are calculated from the exterior surface of the planet. Thus from the soil of the orb to the nearest moon there is only 6,051 kilometers, or 1,500 leagues, and 5 000 leagues to go to the second, while from the earth to the moon the distance is 96 000 leagues. From Mars to its first satellite there is not room to put another body of the planet's bulk, while 30 terrestrial globes would be required to bridge over the distance between us and the moon. Mars turns on its axis in 24 hours, 37 minutes, 23 seconds, having an average day and night of 12 hours, or a trifle more, according to the seasons. But during that day and night it has several months. The inner satellite goes round it three times in the day, and the exterior one makes its revolution in a day and a quarter. Very curiously, the neuter moon appears to be the larger, and has a diameter of 12 kilometers, while the exterior one is 10 kilometers.

The Smallest of Steamboats. Sharp-eyed frequenters of New York harbor and its adjacent waters have now and then had a glimpse of a miniature steamer dancing over the waves made by passing ferry-boats, and looking absurdly diminutive beside the great sea-going vessels around her. Of this craft the Scientific American of March 8 gives an illustrated description. She is fourteen feet long over all, twenty eight inches wide, and draws, when loaded, six inches forward and eight inches aft. She has a copper boiler twenty inches long, and capable of bearing a pressure of fifty pounds. With this she steams four and a half miles per hour. She is to have a steel boiler which will bear 100 pounds pressure, and give her a higher rate of speed. She is, in effect, a canoe of the "Nautilus" type, with water-tight bulkheads to keep her from sinking in case of an upset. As a toy for an amateur engineer who can afford such an expensive luxury, she is a very fascinating plaything, but not half so much pleasure can be had from her as from a canoe propelled by sails and muscles.

—The dangerous character of lead compounds is shown by the fact that in the years from 1838 to 1847 no fewer than 3,142 patients suffering from lead colic were admitted into the hospitals of Paris, although there were, during that period, only two white lead and red lead works in the city. Of these patients 112 died. When lead pipes become incrusted with sulphide of lead they may be cleaned in this way: Allow a hot concentrated solution of sulphide of sodium to flow through the pipes for ten or fifteen minutes. The inside of the pipes will then appear as if coated with a gray glaze, and water may then be passed through them free of any lead.

THE BEST REMEDY

FOR

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

AYER'S

CHERRY

PECTORAL.

Diseases of the pulmonary organs are so prevalent and fatal, that a safe and reliable remedy for their is invaluable to every community. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results, which enables physicians as well as invalids to use it with confidence. It is the most reliable remedy for diseases of the throat and lungs that science has produced. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt and certain relief, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it without difficulty. In the treatment of ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household, for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

The marvellous cures which Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has effected all over the world are a sufficient guaranty that it will continue to produce the best results. An impartial trial will convince the most sceptical of its wonderful curative powers, as well as of its superiority over all other preparations for pulmonary complaints.

Eminent physicians in all parts of the country, knowing its composition, recommend Ayer's Cherry Pectoral to invalids, and prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proved its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

EDUCATIONAL.

Centenary Institute,

An institution of learning, located at Summerfield, Alabama, was founded by the Alabama Conference and commenced operations in 1842, and has been in successful operation ever since. The Institute has two departments, male and female.

The buildings are of brick, large and elegant, sufficient to accommodate two hundred and fifty pupils. This is to notify all concerned that the Trustees intend, at their next annual meeting, June 23, to lease the building for five years to any person or persons competent to run the Institution in the interest of a church school.

Persons desiring further information will correspond with me at Summerfield, Ala.

Woodville Female Seminary.

A non-sectarian academy, under the supervision of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Mississippi Conference; Hon. E. McGehee, President of Board of Trustees. For Thoroughness of Instruction, healthfulness, cheapness, and many other advantages, is not surpassed. We invite those interested to examine our credentials, and to obtain circulars, by calling upon Mr. Philip Werlein, New Orleans, La., or address the Principal,

A. J. WRIGHT,
Woodville, Miss.

The Loquet-LeRoy Institute

And Kindergarden Day and Boarding School for Young Ladies, 280 Camp Street.—This institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses Moise, Cecelia W., Sallie L., and Corinne, the latter relicte of the late R. G. Raoul, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successors of Mme Loquet LeRoy, whose good will and right to conduct the School under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No change whatever in the conduct and management of the School. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to the institution, and that of their friends, and the public generally, promising strict devotion to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge.

C. W. MOISE, Principal.

Referring to the above Madame Loquet-LeRoy announces to her friends and former patrons the entire confidence she has in her successors, being in every way suited to the high trust they have assumed. She bespeaks for them a continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded her, and that she will still be actively connected with the Institution. For terms and particulars apply to the principal.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,

(Postoffice the same)

MONROE COUNTY, EAST TENNESSEE.

Parents desiring to find a safe and healthy location for their sons during the summer season would do well to patronize the above-named institution under the patronage of the Holston Annual Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The spring term closes May 22, and Fall session begins

FIRST MONDAY IN AUGUST, 1879.

Students arriving before the latter date will be beyond the reach of epidemics, and will thus secure some months of profitable study before Colleges usually open in less favored localities.

Excellent board in College Boarding House by D. A. McKenzie, the well known farmer-steward, at ten dollars per month, washing included. Same in good private families at nine dollars. Tuition College Course, twenty dollars; English Course, fifteen dollars.

Editors and printers' readers should indeed be careful; lynx-eyed men are always on the alert. By dropping out a single letter the Book of Common Prayer once went to press with the sentence, "We shall all be changed in the twinkling of an eye," transformed into, "We shall all be hanged in the twinkling of an eye." A poet who wrote, "See the pale martyr in a sheet of fl e," was startled to see his line changed into, 'See the pale martyr with his shirt on fire." Perhaps such transgressions are as pardonable as the blunders sometimes made in other professions, as the story of a minister, who was asked to read the following notice, will show: "A man having gone to sea, his wife desires the prayers of the church," and by the misplacing of a comma in reading it, gravely told the congregation that "a man having gone to see his wife, desired the prayers of the church."—London Methodist.

Heat is Life; Cold is Death.

In our climate it would probably be difficult to find a more frequent cause of serious ailments than taking cold. Whatever weak place we have, whatever constitutional disorder we be subject to, cold will surely discover. We take cold because our vitality is too low to ward off the effects of the reduced temperature around us. As a matter of first importance, then, to resist cold and various derangements of the system consequent, it is necessary by proper nutrition to maintain our natural animal heat; second, to retain this heat by a sufficient quantity of clothing; third, to regulate with care the temperature of the air we breathe.

Contrary to the opinion current among lovers of cold weather, a fire in a bed room in winter is cheaper than a doctor's bill; for owing to our inactive condition during sleep, the circulation of the vitalizing blood is both slow and imperfect, and hence the danger of taking cold by breathing cold air is greatly increased. A cold is the beginning of everything that is bad. If any one conscious of having caught one feels cold chills creeping up the back, let him apply a mustard plaster to the bottom of the spine and lower parts of the back at once; and by so doing he may avert a dangerous illness before it is too late and medical advice can be procured. It should never be forgotten that "heat is life, cold is death."—Scientific American.

There is a cow-tree in Venezuela, the milk of which is very much like cow's milk or cream. The natives go each morning to the forest, make some deep cuts in the trees, and in less than two hours their vessels are full. They use it to drink, and to mix with tapioca and maize. The tree is from forty five to sixty feet in height, and has long alternate leaves. The government of Venezuela sent to the Paris Exposition several bottles of this milk, which have been analyzed by prominent scientific men. It contains sugar, caseine and other things found in cow's milk, but is richer and much more nutritious.

There is an eloquence in Memory, because it is the nurse of Hope.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TUTT'S PILLS.

SYMPTOMS OF A TORPID LIVER.

Loss of Appetite, Bowels Costive, Pain in the Head with a dull sensation in the back part, Pain under the shoulder-blade, Fulness after eating with a disinclination to exertion of body or mind, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, with a feeling of having neglected some duty, Weariness, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the Eyes, Yellow Skin, Headache generally, Restlessness, with disturbed dreams, highly colored Urine.

IF THESE WARNINGS ARE UNHEEDED SERIOUS DISEASES WILL SOON BE DEVELOPED.

TUTT'S PILLS

are especially adapted to such cases, a single dose of this often effects a change of feeling as to astonish the sufferer.

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS:

DR. TUTT:—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last spring your Pills were recommended to me. I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.

REV. R. L. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

The first effect of TUTT'S PILLS is to increase the Appetite, and cause the body to Take on Flesh, thus the system is nourished; and by the true Tonic Action on the Digestive Organs, Regular Stools are produced.

DR. J. F. HAYWOOD OF NEW YORK, SAYS:

"Few diseases exist that cannot be relieved by restoring the liver to its normal functions and for this purpose no remedy has ever been invented that has as happy an effect as TUTT'S PILLS."

Sold Everywhere, 25 Cents.

OFFICE, 35 MURRAY ST., NEW YORK.

TUTT'S HAIR DYE.

Religious Notices.

THE Annual Camp-meeting at William's Camp Ground will commence on Thursday night before the fifth Sunday in June. This Camp Ground is situated on the Pensacola Railroad, thirty-four miles from Pensacola.

Ample arrangements are made for visitors, especially ministers. All are cordially invited.

The meeting will be conducted on the self-sustaining plan.

W. L. WILLIAMS, President.
W. W. RICHARDS, Secretary. 17

THE Delhi District Sunday-School Convention will be held at Delhi, on Wednesday after the second Sunday in May.

The members of the convention are the pastors of the various works in the district, together with the superintendents and teachers of each Sunday-school.

If any Sunday-school finds it cannot be represented by superintendent or others, it will please send in reports of its numbers and condition.

The District Conference will meet immediately after the adjournment of the convention, at the same place.

Recording stewards will see that the Quarterly Conference records are brought up to the District Conference.

The District Steward's Meeting will be held on Saturday at four o'clock P. M.

J. E. CONN, P. E.

A close-fisted man invited a friend to dinner and provided only two mutton chops. Upon removing the cover he said: "My friend, we have a Lenten entertainment; you see your dinner before you." Taking the two chops upon his own plate, his friend replied: "Yes, but where is your dinner?"

No one will dare maintain that it is better to do injustice than to bear it.

THE PIANOS I KEEP.

Every Piano sold by me has stood the test of time—from ten to fifty years. A first-class house like mine cannot experiment at the expense of its patrons with untried or unreliable instruments. Being thoroughly familiar with the construction of a Piano, I am positive of their durability and reliability. I sell my Pianos with the understanding that if in ten or more years a defect in their construction, under fair usage should show itself,

The Money Paid will be Cheerfully Refunded.

THE CHICKERING PIANOS,

Have been before the public for fifty-four years, and their reputation extends over the whole world. A six octave Piano of this make, forty-seven years old and perfect in every respect can be inspected in my store. Their superiority over all others is now universally acknowledged.

THE MATHUSHEK PIANOS,

Constructed on entirely new and patented principles which insure their retaining their original brilliancy of tone for a life time, and their standing longer in tune than any other Piano. Those excellent Pianos have been sold here during the last ten years and not the least defect has ever occurred. Their new Uprights are real models of perfection.

THE HALE PIANOS

Are good, reliable and well made Pianos, of excellent tone, and with elastic touch. There are over 1000 of them in this city, and not a defective or worn out one among them.

MY PRICES are well known to be the lowest; as I prefer to sell ten pianos at a small profit than one at a large. My terms are liberal: selling new Pianos on monthly payments of $10, and second hand ones at $5. Fifty second hand Pianos in perfect order from $50 to $175. New Pianos from $225 upwards.

MASON & HAMLIN AND ESTEY ORGANS,

The best instruments of the kind made, from $50 upwards. Direct importation of

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, STRINGS AND MUSIC.

The trade and profession supplied at lowest prices.

I request the patronage of the public. No trouble to answer your letters, and I will be pleased to hear from all.

TRUST AND REST.

Fret not, poor soul: while doubt and fear
Disturb thy breast,
The plotting angel-wing is not at rest.
How calm thy wild regret must be,
say: "Trust and Rest."

Plan not, nor scheme, but calmly wait;
His choice is best.
While blind and dark, ring the night,
His wakeful eyes and kind are bright;
So Trust and Rest.

Strive not, nor struggle: thy poor might
Can never wrest
The meanest things to serve thy will;
All power is His, be still,
And Trust and Rest.

Desire not: self-love is strong
Within thy breast;
And yet He loves the better still;
So let Him do His loving will,
And Trust and Rest.

What dost thou fear? It's wisdom reigns
Supreme confessed;
His power infinite; His love
Thy deepest, fondest dreams above,
So Trust and Rest.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 19.—A fire at Eureka, Nev., last evening and this morning, destroyed half the town; including the heaviest business houses, hotels, newspaper offices, telegraph office, Masonic building and a great number of dwellings. Three hundred families are destitute and two thousand people without shelter. A relief committee has been organized. Loss roughly estimated at $1 000 000.

NEW YORK April 21.—Gen. Dix died to-night at half past eleven o'clock.

ALBANY, April 21.—The Assembly to-day adopted a resolution for the appointment of a joint committee to tender the hospitalities of the State to Gen. Grant on his return to this country.

INDIANAPOLIS, April 23.—A special dispatch to the Daily News from South Bend, Ind., says: The college building at Notre Dame is on fire. The flames are making rapid progress and there is but little chance of saving the college.

LATER—The Notre Dame Catholic University, near South Bend, was destroyed by fire to day. The College Building, Infirmary, Old Men's Home, Music Hall and Minim's Hall were all entirely destroyed. The loss is estimated at $200 000. Insurance $60 000. Archives were lost. A student named P. J. Dougherty was seriously injured by jumping from the second floor.

CHICAGO, April 23.—While Edwin Booth was giving the soliloquy in the last act of "Richard III" at McVicker's Theater to-night, a shot was fired at him by a man sitting in the left hand upper gallery. Booth sat still until after about three seconds when a second shot was fired, when he rose and started toward the left wing of the stage, pointing out, as he went, the would-be assassin.

The latter was at once seized, and but for the intervention of officers, would have been roughly handled. He states his name is Master Gray that he is twenty-three years old, and a dry goods clerk of St. Louis; that he has been three years preparing to do this deed, and is surprised that he failed; that his failure to kill Booth is only part of the attempt, which he regrets. He refuses to state the cause of his action, but says his reasons will be regarded as sufficient.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The April returns to the Department of Agriculture show that the average of winter wheat is about nine and one-half per cent. greater than last year, and not twelve per cent. greater, as erroneously stated last night.

BALTIMORE, April 25.—Bishop Ames died this morning, in the seventy-fourth year of his age.

WASHINGTON, April 25.—Soon after meeting the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution relative to appointments to office by the Secretary and Sergeant-at-arms of the Senate. The amendments declaring that no Union soldier shall be removed, (except for cause) and also that no Confederate soldier shall take the place of any dismissed Union soldier, was defeated by strict party votes.

A resolution giving the Secretary and Sergeant-at-arms absolute power over removals and appolutments in their respective departments, was agreed to.

The Senate passed the army appropriation bill as it came from the House without amendment.

GALVESTON, April 25.—A special to the Galveston News from Austin says: The Legislature adjourned sine die at noon yesterday. A called session is probable to pass the appropriation bills.

News specials throughout the State report extraordinary heavy rains, causing the rivers and other streams to overflow, railroads washed in many places and traffic almost entirely suspended. At Houston the water rose eighteen feet in three hours and carried away all the railroad bridges and many warehouses along the banks of the bayou. The damage is great.

COLUMBUS, GA., April 25.—The Confederate monument was unveiled this afternoon, in the presence of 10 000 people from different sections of Georgia and Alabama. Gov. Colquitt delivered an address, which contained nothing of a political nature. State and national flags were displayed.

NEW YORK, April 26.—Latest Panama advices contain news from Valparaiso to the first of April. It is asserted that Chili has declared war against Peru, on account of the alleged sympathy and friendliness of the latter country for Bolivia, and that formidable warlike preparations are now being made by Peru.

CHICAGO, April 26.—A dispatch to the Times from Houston, Texas, says: A flood occurred in that city yesterday, which has been the most destructive of any in the history of that city. The water rose twelve inches from two A. M., to eight A. M., and continued rising all day. The old cemetery was almost entirely inundated and many railings around the graves were torn away and carried down stream.

Many dwellings were submerged and residents driven out. On Texas Avenue the water rose from four to ten feet in the dwellings. Many houses floated away and others were in danger. The long bridge across the bayou on Preston street is momentarily expected to succumb to the pressure of accumulated drift. Warehouses, foundries, stores, etc., are flooded. All the buildings on the south side from the corner of Main and Commerce streets to Travis street have their rear ends and cellars filled.

NEW YORK, April 27.—The New Testament sub committee of the American Revision Committee at its meeting on Friday and Saturday last made a second revision of the "Acts" and sent the final suggestions on the Gospels to the British committee.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 28.—The legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill was received from the house, and referred to the committee on appropriations.

The Senate took up and passed the house joint resolution to repeal certain clauses in the snudry civil appropriation act, of March 3, 1879.

It makes appropriations for the extension of military telegraph lines to Montana and Texas, and repeals the authority heretofore given to the secretary of war, to lease the water power at Moline to the Moline Power Company.

LITTLE ROCK April 28.—The Iron Mountain railroad bridge across Red river, at Fulton, was washed away this morning. Trains from the South did not cross to-day. Red river rose nearly twenty-two feet.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—The house passed the legislative bill on Saturday by a vote of 140 to 119.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, April 18.—La Libertad, a leading liberal paper, announces that for the first time since Maximilian's usurpation the chiefs of church and state are in accord. While this accord lasts, no attempt at revolution can become important.

President Diaz is daily growing more popular with the church party, but, as a consequence, is losing some of his Radical partisans.

Congress is discussing a bill abolishing duties on the exportation of the produce of the country, including gold and silver. There is considerable opposition to the proposed removal of the duties from tobacco.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 21.—Gen. Gurkan, Governor General of St. Petersburg, has ordered all gunmakers to send lists of their stock to the City Commandant and to sell only to persons presenting special authorization, under penalty of confiscation of stock and prohibition of trade. Private persons possessing arms can only retain them by special permission. Porters must be kept at the doors of all houses day and night to prevent the posting of placards and scattering of explosives in the streets.

LONDON, April 22.—Advices from Cape Town, dated April 6, via St. Vincents, says:

Lord Chelmsford's camp, at Girgillona, on the road to Ekowe, was attacked at day-break on the third of April, by 11 000 Zulus, who made frequent and desperate attacks on all sides, but were repulsed and persued with great loss.

Four hundred and seventy-one Zulus were found dead round the trenches.

The final attack was led by Dabulmanzo, who commanded at Isandula. Lieut. Johnson, of the ninety-ninth Regiment, and four privates were killed. Col. Northey, of the sixtieth Regiment, surgeon, and fifteen men were severely wounded. Col. Crealock, Major Barrow and ten men were slightly wounded.

LONDON, April 22.—Intelligence has just reached this city from South Africa that Ekowe was relieved on the fourth instant, after severe fighting.

ST. PETERSBURG April 23.—A High Court of Criminal Justice, under the Presidency of the Grand Duke Constantine, brother of the Czar, has already been appointed for the trial of Solovieff.

BELGRADE, April 23.—The Albanians have occupied the heights of Saunakoff and the redoubts erected by the Turks during the war, and have with one and a half battalions successfully withstood the attack of three Servian divisions.

There has been three days' of severe fighting. The Servian attempts to dislodge the Albanians had been unsuccessful up to Monday. Another Servian division has been ordered to the front. The Servian loss is estimated at seven hundred men.

LONDON, April 26.—A Paris dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company confirms the report that England and France have sent a joint note to the Khedive.

The Paris correspondent of the Daily Telegram says: The note sent to the Khedive demands the appointment of an English Minister and a French Minister to take the place of Mr. Rivers Wilson and M. Blignieres, and that they shall not be removed except with the consent of England and France. If the Khedive refuses this demand, strong measures will be adopted.

ROME, April 27.—Gen. Garibaldi has started for Alhano. He has published a manifesto, dated to-day, and addressed to the Italian people, and enthusiastically congratulating them on the formation of a Democratic league for the attainment of universal suffrage.

The manifesto concludes as follows: "The league has decided to work by pacific means. Whoever governs Italy must take note that if by impeding the work of the league he compels it to resort to other means, he will be held accountable by history and the nation."

LONDON April 27.—Edison's patent for electric light was registered in the London Patent Office Wednesday. The Times says: The invention may broadly be said to contain nothing new in principle, nor is it calculated to alarm the proprietors of gas shares.

LONDON, April 28.—A dispatch from Berlin to the Standard says: Porters to guard the doors of houses and prevent the posting of placards in St. Petersburg, as required by Gen. Gourko's regulations, cannot be obtained, because the Nihilists threaten all who undertake the service with death.

Gen. Gourko has apparently been removed from the dictatorship of St. Petersburg, on account of the impracticable nature of his orders.

A peasant has been arrested with a letter in his possession containing a detailed plan of an attack upon the winter palace, and the prison in which Solovieff is confined. Although the letter was probably a hoax, the entire garrison was called out. The czarwitch has received anonymous letters warning him to go abroad. Murders continue to be reported.

Quarterly Conference Records.

MR EDITOR: By action of the last General Conference it is made the duty of the District Conference to inquire," as to the manner in which the records of the Quarterly Conferences have been kept." This is a wise provision, and meets a long-felt necessity. If faithfully carried out it will secure neatly kept and carefully preserved records of the church. On many circuits there is no such thing as a Quarterly Conference record-book. Rough minutes of the Conference proceedings have been taken, signed by the presiding officer, and then lost, never to go to permanent record or be seen again.

Now, in order that the District Conference shall inquire intelligently and satisfactorily into this matter, the recording stewards must send their books to the seat of Conference. The minutes of each Annual Conference are carefully examined and passed upon quadrennially by a committee of the General Conference. Errors are noted, and corrections suggested. So the District Conference should have a committee on Quarterly Conference records, and demand that the books from all the charges shall be present. The following will result from such action:

1. The purchase in each pastoral charge of a record-book.

2. The election of competent secretaries and recording stewards. When the fact is known that their books are to undergo critical inspection it will compel greater carefulness and accuracy.

3 The preservation of a correct roll of church officers. In some charges we wot of the names of trustees especially have been handed by tradition, but no record is found of the time and manner of their election.

4 A connected history of the whole church. The reports of pastors as to Sunday-schools and the state of the church—the accessions, baptisms, removals and deaths; of stewards and trustees as to fiscal plans and operations, and other business common to a Quarterly Conference; if preserved, give us a detailed and perfect history of the church's progress and achievements.

Optimism and Pessimism.

Two boys went to hunt grapes. One was happy because they found grapes. The other was unhappy because the grapes had seeds in them.

Two men, being convalescent, were asked how they were. One said: "I am better to day." The other said: "I was worse yesteray."

When it rains, one man says: "This will make mud." Another: "This will lay the dust."

Two boys got an oyster. One looked at it, and declared it nasty. The other tasted it, and declared it good.

Two boys examining a bush, one observed that it had a thorn. The other that it had a rose.

Two children looking through colored glasses, one said: "The world is blue." And the other said: "It is bright."

Two boys eating their dinner, one said: "I would rather have something better than this." The other said: "This is better than nothing."

Two men went to see New York. One visited the saloons, and thought New York wicked. The other visited the homes, and thought New York good.

Two boys looking at some skaters, one said: "See how they fall." The other: "See how they glide."

Two strangers to our world were offered refreshments. One took beer, and the other bread. The first said the world is bitter. The other that it is sweet.

A servant thinks a man's house is principally kitchen. A guest that it is principally parlor.

Two boys having a bee, one got honey, and the other got stung. The first called it a honey-bee; and the other a stinging-bee.

Two boys got each an apple. One was thankful for the apple. The other was dissatisfied because it was not two.

"I am glad that I live," says one man. "I am sorry I must die," says another.

"I am glad," says one, "that it is no worse." "I am sorry," says another, "that it is no better."

In drinking lemonade, you may detect only the sweet or only the sour.

One man is thankful for his blessings. Another is morose for his misfortunes.

One man thinks he is entitled to a better world and is dissatisfied because he hasn't got it. Another thinks he is not justly entitled to any, and is satisfied with this.

One man enjoys what he has. Another suffers what he has not.

One man makes up his account from his wants. Another from his assets.

One man complains that there is evil in the world. Another rejoices that there is good in the world.

One says: "Our good is mixed with evil." Another says: "Our evil is mixed with good."—Independent.

THE INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION.—The next International Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of the United States and British Provinces will meet at Baltimore, Md., May 21–25.

During the two years which have elapsed since the last convention, the associations have been more abundantly blessed in their work than at any previous time, and the aid of every one is asked in making such a full report at Baltimore as will honor Him in whose name our associations are organized, and to whom they are seeking to bring young men.

The place and time chosen for the convention are in every sense auspicious. The city of Baltimore is at present experiencing the influence of such a revival of religion as has seldom occurred in the history of revivals in this country. This fact will necessarily impart a deep spiritual character to the proceedings of the convention.

Field Notes.

BASTROP, LA., April 19, 1879.

We had quite a destructive hail and rain storm last Tuesday night. In many places much damage has been done in the blowing down of houses, unroofing gin-houses and destruction of fencing. Planting interests are rather behind for the time of year.

Our congregations on Sabbaths and on Wednesday evenings are steadily increasing in numbers and interest, and the gospel message seems to be freshening. We have just heard of the appointment of our new presiding elder.

C. W. CARTER.

FRANKLIN, LA., April 21, 1879.

BRO. PARKER: The railroad track is laid to this place to-day. Paul cane is promising; stubble poor in many places; health good; slight frost on the nineteenth instant; congregations large; collections good; five accessions; one death—Sister Mary Wilcoxon, aged seventy eight years. She rests in peace. Sunday school twice as large as last year; well supplied with Sunday school literature; selling some good books. Yours,

H. E. WHITE.

SARDIS, MISS., April 21, 1879.

This is one of the best towns in north Mississippi, on the Tennessee and Mississippi railroad fifty miles south of Memphis, in a fine farming section, noted for health and morality. Our church leads, and has a good working force. Ladies' Aid Society make $200 to $300 a year for church purposes without compromising piety. Strict quarantine kept off the yellow fever last fall. The people suffer from the common financial depression. The cholera fever has not yet reached us. Industries are moving healthfully.

W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

ROLLING FORK CIRCUIT.

MCKINNEY'S LIKE, MISS., April 21, 1879.

MR. EDITOR: About two hundred miles, per rail and river, intervene between this and my last charge. A trip of about two days, however, brought us safely to the parsonage, where we found a warm room, warm supper, and warm hearts awaiting our arrival. Our wants have been abundantly supplied to date, and we have no apprehensions as to the future. Parsonage partly furnished, and I am to-day commissioned, with $157 in hand, to supply deficiencies. Good congregations, some accessions, and religious feeling evidently on the increase. We are expecting good times. Pray for us.

Yours, T. C. BRADFORD.

WATER VALLEY, MISS., April 22, 1879.

The District Conference of Grenada district has just closed its session in this place. Bishop McTyeire presided, and his presence among us, we believe, will be productive of much good. Reports from the different charges are very encouraging, with few exceptions. Every interest was carefully inquired into, and we look for improvement in several respects. This is a new field to me, and I am well pleased with the outlook. The Conference resolved to purchase a parsonage for the presiding elder in this place—a very judicious location. Wish you and the dear old ADVOCATE well.

Yours, THOS. Y. RAMSEY.

WESSON, MISS., April 22, 1879.

The Methodist ladies here gave a festival last night, the twenty-first instant, to raise money to complete their new church. No selling or dancing; proceeds, $116 30. The wood-work of this church is about complete. It is yet to be painted. It also needs blinds, a bell, pew-seats and chandeliers. The congregation is large; Sunday school flourishing; about two hundred. Church members, most of whom are connected with the factory. A more interesting missionary field I never knew. It is "white unto the harvest," and who is sufficient for these things?

DECATUR, ALA., April 22, 1879.

On the Register of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at this place, there are one hundred and thirty-nine names. Of these forty-nine are males, and ninety are females. One Sunday-school, with an average attendance of ninety pupils; a prayer meeting—Wednesday evening—moderate attendance; stated worship every Sunday at eleven A. M. and half-past seven P. M.; congregations variable in the forenoon, full and large at night. There are twelve copies of the Nashville Advocate taken, and four or five others. Besides the Methodist, there are five other churches, i. e., Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Roman Catholic, and one each of colored Methodist and Baptist. A decline in dram-drinking and Sabbath breaking; farming operations backward; health good.

WOODVILLE, MISS., April 22, 1879.

Vegetation and crops well advanced for the season. Since February 1 weather remarkably propitious; some hail recently, with high winds; no serious damage; fruit crop very light.

Woodville Female Seminary is in very successful operation. Prof. A. J. Wright, at its head, is unexcelled as an instructor. Board and tuition very cheap. Attendance at church improving; eight accessions lately.

J. P. DRAKE.

ATHENS, ALA., April 22, 1879.

Dr. Rivers closed a meeting to-night—protracted from his second quarterly meeting, the fifth Sabbath in March. The meeting was good from beginning to end. The doctor is full of zeal and abundant in labor. Dr. Tichnor and Rev. Mr. Maxon, of the A. M. C., and Rev. H. Urquhart president of the Auburn Female College, rendered faithful and efficient assistance. The religious outlook in east Alabama is good.

VICKSBURG, MISS., April 24, 1879.

Rev. J. W. Lambuth, of Shanghai, China writes me March 12 1879: "It is with great joy I write you of the success of Marvin chapel, in the city of Kwangsi. Bro. Su writes me: 'We are greatly encouraged in our work here. The people are very kind, and a great many attend preaching. Three or four are on probation and many come to talk about the Christian doctrine. Pray for us, that God may bless the word here.' This combination from Bro. Su gives us great joy. These are the kind of churches we want in the interior. Tell the brethren we want such houses all over this part of Kwangsi province where there are fifteen millions who have never heard the gospel plan of salvation. Let us have a hundred such churches as Hungkuit, Marvin and Taylor chapels. Your bill of exchange for £[illegible] brought us in the market $181 50. We have never had a better time to sell bills of exchange."

MEADVILLE, MISS., April 24, 1879.

MR EDITOR: We have been blessed with a fine spring. Cotton is now being planted. Prospects on my circuit encouraging; prayer meetings and Sunday schools are doing well; congregations large. We are agitated on the parsonage question, and collectors are appointed. We need funds. Will the friends of this pastor and the circuit send us a contribution? Direct to the undersigned. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has thirty-nine new subscribers from this work.

SHUBUTA, April 25, 1879.

The court house and all the records therein were burned on the morning of the twenty-first, at Waynesborough in Wayne county, Miss. Mr. W. G. Davis, the accomplished clerk, had the books of his office in perfect order, and kept in beautiful style.

The meeting at Shubuta continues.

BATON ROUGE, LA., April 23, 1879.

MR EDITOR: Last night Rev. John Hannon lectured to a fine audience; his subject being: "The Philosophy of Diogenes." Since we began to raise funds for repairs, we have had lectures from Dr. Walker, Dr. Markham, Prof. J. W. Nicholson, and Revs. John Mathews and J. B. Hannon. In addition we have been raising money by subscription, one brother in New Orleans giving us $200. The brethren here have subscribed liberally. We need only a few hundreds more to make up the $2 000 we started to raise. We give thanks to God.

A new church, tasteful and commodious, all finished except the plastering, is at Aberfoil Prairie circuit; one at Center, on Newton circuit; one in progress on Pea River circuit; a splendid furnace in the church at Enfaula with plans in progress for other improvements; extensive repairs on church and parsonage at Glennville; Anthony's chapel, on Union circuit, is repaired; new roof and other repairs to church at Midway; substantial improvement to parsonage at Clayton; the parsonage on Beulah circuit is being put in thorough condition, and measures taken to purchase parsonages on Newton and Henry circuits is about all your postal allows me room to report at this time, but we have other things, and some that are better in reserve. The rosiate hue is not in everything.

AUBURN, ALA., April 25, 1879.

The Methodists of Ojeelka will soon commence building a new church. They have secured a lot in an eligible position. They intend to build this time. Dr. A. S. Andrews, their pastor has, by his industry as a pastor, elegant and faithful preaching, overawed the old church. They are compelled, by that law that seems to know no other expedient, necessity to swarm. The Lord speed them.

Yours truly,

DELAWARE, LA., April 25, 1879.

MR EDITOR: I have just returned from Floyd circuit, and want to report something that should encourage us all in the way of parsonages. Bro. McClendon has since Conference built a parsonage in the town of Floyd, and done the work with his own hands, except about three or four days. The house has four rooms of good dimensions, with a hall and front portico, and is situated conveniently to church and school. Bro. McClendon was just about finishing the fence around the yard. He deserves much credit.

THE CONTEST AND THE MINISTER.

BY J. B.

A convert who had just begun
The self-denying race to run
Complained to a gray-haired divine,
Although sweet peace within is mine,
Faith's morning dream, so richly prized,
I have not fully realized.
I pass my leisure time," said he,
"With students of theology;
With Uncle John and Brother Ben,—
Two most consistent clergymen."
Then answered that gray-haired divine,
"Young friend, a common fault is mine:
You talk too much with servants here,
And draw to holy men too near;
Go oft to Pisgah's mount sublime,
And with your Master spend more time."

THE APPLICATION.

If thou would'st have the dews of Hermon
Descend upon thee from a sermon,
Go near the loved instructor, wait,
But never be too intimate.
No pastor's wife in any section
Has ever believed in man's perfection.
But he who draweth near to God,
In nearness gets the richest reward.
What hidden beauties charm his eye,
Whose prayer brings the Beloved nigh,
Distinguishing in glorious feature
The perfect Maker from the creature.

—Watchman and Reflector.

Rev. Theophilus Moody.

LATE OF THE SIXTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE, DECEASED.

MR. EDITOR: Will you allow me again to crowd the columns of the ADVOCATE with another biographical sketch of one of our aged, faithful, laborious and useful ministers of the gospel, whose name heads this article. When I sent you the sketch of our esteemed and venerable Bro Pilley, little did I think then that I would be called upon to write again on so sad a subject, and thereby convey to the church the sad news that another aged servant of God was no more; but such is life, in the midst of which we are in death.

By the strong solicitation of his family I now proceed to give you a few facts and incidents connected with the ministerial history of this god brother. And first permit me to state that there probably is no preacher in this or the Alabama Conference who has known him longer or been more intimately associated with him than myself—our acquaintance and friendship during the last forty-seven or forty-eight years have been pleasant and agreeable, growing with our growth and strengthening with our strength. A few of those years we were severed, serving the church in our different spheres, in parts somewhat remote from each other, but even then a kind Christian correspondence was kept up between us. Hence the reason why I have been so strongly solicited to give you this sketch. And in doing so I am truly thankful to our Heavenly Father that I have been mercifully preserved and permitted to give this as an offering to his memory.

Bro. Moody was born in Marion district, S. C., April 26, 1805, and died in Gadsden, Ala., March 13 1879, being near seventy-two years old. His father, Jesse Moody, moved to Mississippi when he was a small boy, and settled on Pearl river, in that portion of the State that is now included in Hancock county. The country being sparsely settled, people rough and uncultivated, and, of course, educational advantages very limited, so that his opportunities for mental, and, it may be presumed, moral culture, also, were meager and unpromising, yet he obtained, what was then considered, a fair English education, such as was common in those days, and taught in the old field schools, as they are now called. The buildings for such purposes being put up of pine logs, a large chimney at one end, sufficiently capacious to seat in front of a large pine knot fire, in cold weather, the entire school on the side of which one log was removed to admit the light, and before which a long shelf or plank was attached for a writing desk. Here, generally, was found Webster's Spellers, Emerson's or Pike's Arithmetic, Murray's Grammar, etc., as text books. Penmanship was considered in those times an important branch and accomplishment in an education emanating from those pine log institutions, which was taught and acquired by daily practice. In such schools as these Bro. Moody obtained what education he had; at least I presume this, as I write from experience and personal knowledge, being near his own age, brought up and reared in the same region of country, and subjected to the same privations, and want of more advanced educational facilities.

Church privileges were at this time likewise few and far between. In 1830 Rev. James Applewhite, of the Mississippi Conference, came among them, who was the first circuit preacher Bro. Moody recollected to have seen in that country. He organized a society, took the Moodys into the church, among whom was Theophilus. A gracious revival followed the labors of this good man. Some forty or fifty professed conversion, and united with the church. Here I give an extract from a short history Bro. Moody left of this revival: "During this year I humbly trust I experienced pardon and peace through Jesus Christ," and the spirit of adoption, crying: "Abba, Father." I united myself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and have been borne with, in the church up to this date, May 15, 1875.

In the course of this year Bro. Moody obtained license from the church as an exhorter, and forthwith commenced his ministerial labors, exercising in class meetings, prayer meetings, and at private appointments of his own in the country. In 1831 Bro. Applewhite was appointed to the Leaf River circuit, which then embraced a large territory in eastern Mississippi. This good man did not only work himself, but called into the service with him the young men on the circuit who were preparing for the regular work of the ministry. Among the first he took with him around his large circuit was Bro. Moody, who continued with him most of the year. He, also, in company with Bro. Moody, had Bros. Charles J. Carney and Absalom Gavin, all traveling together, preaching day and night, riding from house to house, or making their long rides from one appointment to another, stopping at every place where it was at all practicable, and praying with the families, and, as might be expected, a general outpouring of the spirit of revival power was the result. Here during this year, and his former and subsequent associations with Bro Applewhite, Bro. Moody imbibed to a considerable extent the spirit of revivals, and manner of conducting them, which was a very prominent trait in the character of his ministry through life.

Here during this year was my first intimate acquaintance with Bro. Moody and the crowd of preachers he was with. Never shall I forget the fervor, zeal and untiring energy of these devoted men of God in labors abundant, in self denial, models to many who have succeeded them, and the fruits of whose labors will only be known in the great future. They are all gone, crossed over the stream, Bro. Moody the last. Their works follow them. I am only left alone to tell others of those happy times.

In 1832 Bro Applewhite was appointed to White Sand circuit. Bro. Moody traveled with him that year on that circuit. In the fall of that year he and the writer of this article were recommended to the Alabama Conference, which had been that year set off from the Mississippi Conference by the General Conference, and which met in Tuscaloosa, Bishop Andrew, presiding. We were both admitted, and Bro. Moody appointed junior preacher under Bro. Anthony S. Dickinson, preacher in charge, to the Blount circuit in North Alabama. This Conference was then small compared with the numbers that have since been admitted into it. In looking over the minutes of that Conference I count forty-nine who received appointments for the year 1833, among them R. L. Kennon, E. Hearn, J. H. Mellard, R. L. Walker, J. G. Christopher and others. Where are they now? Almost extinct, a few still live, but only three on the list of that Conference now that were members at its first organization—"Zecheus Dowling, A. S. Dickinson and Thomas S. Abernathy." Well may we exclaim: "Our Fathers, where are they?—and the prophets, do they live forever?"

Such, Mr. Editor, was the commencement of a long, eventful, laborious, and, I may add, efficient career of ministerial work and privations upon which Bro. Moody now entered. Going out under embarrassments caused by a consciousness of the absence of such culture and preparation as the world demanded, not knowing what would befall him, and, while he knew that bonds and imprisonments might not await him, yet temptations, trials and afflictions would be his lot, discouragements, of course, would often cause him to exclaim: "Who is sufficient for these things?" But feeling that a woe would be pronounced against him if he failed or faltered, he took courage, went forward in the fear of God, and spent his life in the itinerant work, and has left his impress upon thousands of hearts, who will long remember him as an earnest, faithful, practical and forcible preacher of the gospel, his pathetic appeals to sinners, his fervent and able prayers he so often offered up for the people, and, no doubt, many in the day of judgment "will rise up and call him blessed."

Bro. Moody remained in the Alabama Conference until the Conference was divided, when, being on a work which fell into this (the North Alabama Conference,) he continued in it, doing active work until the year 1875 (I think it was,) when he took a superannuated relation in consequence of failing health, but continued to preach as much as his strength would allow, and wished to do more; indeed, he loved to preach.

There are but few places in Alabama south of this point, and in eastern Mississippi, and in some parts of Florida, where, as Bishop McTyeire says, "you would not cross his path." He filled districts, stations and circuits, from St. Joseph, in Florida, to the Tennessee river in Alabama, and many in Mississippi. I could note down each appointment during the many years he was on the work, but this is unnecessary. Bro. Moody was a good man, of deep and fervent piety—a man whose heart and soul were enlisted in the great work of saving souls, a kind, loving, and affectionate husband and father, one who loved God and his neighbor.

As a preacher, plain, forcible and practical, he preached to the heart, and not so much to the head. Revivals generally followed him wherever he went. I heard one of his presiding elders once say: "Bro. Moody could do more in building up the church than any one he knew." Having a good voice, and being a good singer, his services were generally supplemented by some of the sweet songs of Zion, so that often under those beautiful strains of song shouts and praises to God would be heard in the congregation.

But that voice is now silent; that form that once moved about among us, and which so often was seen in the pulpits of this country and elsewhere, now sleeps near this place in Forest Cemetery, awaiting the sound of the trumpet of the last day: "Come forth."

He was twice married, and has left an affectionate widow, four children by his first wife, and twelve grandchildren to battle through this world without him. The disease that terminated his life was long and protracted. In his sufferings, which toward the last were great, he murmured not at Divine Providence, but endeavored at all times to regard them as a just chastening from the hand of God, and often expressed himself as willing to live or die, frequently would burst forth in shouts of praise to God. His end was peace. Thus lived, and thus died, Theophilus Moody, the companion of my younger days, my long-life friend, my associate and fellow-laborer in the cause of Christ for many long successive years. Who will be next? Probably the writer, who was his senior in age, and who is hereby admonished that his end draweth nigh. O that he and the host of friends that are left behind "may be also ready," and may peace, happiness and prosperity rest upon and abide with his afflicted and bereaved wife and children, and may they ever follow him as he followed Christ!

Contention for Superiority.

This can be done either in a good sense or in a bad sense. It is perfectly legitimate when it is done with a good intention, and with the proper feelings, but a desire to excel others, just simply to gain the applause of men and not to glorify God, is always to be condemned. Certainly nothing but the religion of Christ can regulate a person in this matter.

A desire to be great, of course, is not incompatible with a religious profession. This certainly has ever been one of the chief incentives of all earth's benefactors. Every one should seek a full development of his mental and moral capacities, for if he come short of this he fails to have that influence for good that it is reasonable for him to have. All the faculties of the mind, and all the susceptibilities of the heart, so far as it is practicable, should be called forth into the freest and most advantageous exercise.

No one should ever measure himself with others, so to speak, but he should "prove his own work," and then, if he should excel or be superior to all others, he is not, for this, culpable, and he is in a condition to rejoice in himself alone and not in another. If a person take this course in life he possesses the elements of true manhood, and honor is never unduly conferred upon him. There are no glaring irregularities in such a life, and "men see it, and fear and trust in the Lord." But a contention for superiority, in a bad sense, never fails to bring trouble, and much of which "our eyes have seen, our ears have heard, and our hearts have known." There is scarcely a society of any kind ever organized but that it has in it more or less trouble, and it can generally be traced to unlawful contentions for superiority. This trouble is found in the family, in the community and in the church. In consequence of this families are sometimes divided, and in such a sense that their association with each other is no more desirable. It is often the case that neighbors are at variance with each other, and it commonly arises from this source. It is one great obstacle in the way of the spread of the gospel. It impedes the progress of the church everywhere almost. Should the business of an Annual Conference be unpleasant, and should the making of the appointments of the preachers by the Bishops be attended with difficulties that render them unsatisfactory, by a close scrutiny it will be found that all this trouble arises principally from this very thing—an illigitimate contention for superiority by some members of that Conference. When this feeling is exercised there is always confusion. It is ever the case that some men are continually seeking positions that they are unqualified to fill. When this is the case in the church every true lover of Christ and His cause is made to mourn, for they see plainly that such men are only endeavoring to magnify themselves, having no disposition to enlarge men's conception of Christ. Through the influence of such men narrow views of Christianity are produced, and the church becomes desolate.

The Saviour positively condemned this spirit in his disciples, and it was evidently manifested by some of them. This was done by James and John when they came to the Saviour and made the request that one of them might sit on the right, and the other on His left, in His kingdom. But the Saviour affirmed that their request was the result of ignorance, for he said: "You know not what you ask." They wished to occupy a higher position than their brethren, and the effect upon "the ten," or the other brethren, was that they were moved with indignation. "The ten" regarded it an unreasonable thing for the two brethren to be exalted above them. So it is when ministers of the present day evince a desire to be exalted above their brethren—a feeling of indignation is produced in the heart.

TIONTS, ALA., April 8, 1879.

Duty.

In a letter written by Gen. Robert E. Lee to his son occurs this short but significant passage: "Duty is the noblest word in our language." From the depths of my heart I echo that sentiment. She leads us over thorny paths. "Our feet, all torn and bleeding, mark the way," but her paths are best, for they lead at last to God. Yea,

"The path of duty is the way to glory:
He that walks it, only thirsting
For the right, and learns to deaden
Love of self, before his journey closes,
He shall find the stubborn thistle bursting
Into glossy purples, which outredden
All volumnious garden roses."

Ah! this learning to deaden love of self, how hard it is. The most renowned conqueror who ever wielded the scepter of supreme authority over millions, and failed to subdue self, was never in his proudest moment of glory so much a hero as he who wages a successful contest against the selfish principles of his own bosom.

In the performance of duty the good man may sometimes be called to pass through a furnace heated seven times hot. Enemies may whisper, friends may fail, he may bear on his own shoulders the weight of crosses which other shoulders should rightfully bear, yet, knowing that truth and justice must triumph either here or hereafter, he can safely commit his cause to the God who gives him courage and faith to labor and to wait.

All honor to the man who, single-handed and alone, if need be, who without moral support, if it must be so, fights the fight of duty! The Christian hero is the grandest of all heroes, and duty, first to God and then to man, is his best and safest watchword.

V.

ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.—A venerable minister, with compassionate earnestness, once preached a sermon upon eternal punishment. On the next day some thoughtless men agreed that one of their number should go to him, and, if possible, draw him into a discussion. He went accordingly, and began the conversation, saying, "I believe there is a small dispute between you and me, and I thought that I would call this morning and try to settle it." "Ah!" said the good man, "what is it?" "Why," he replied, "you say that the wife of the finally impenitent will be eternal, and I do not think it will." "Oh, if that is all," he answered, "there is no dispute between you and me. If you turn to Matthew xxv. 26, you will find that the dispute is between you and the Lord Jesus Christ, and I advise you to go immediately and settle it with him."

A little bootblack of Detroit, in imitation of other financial institutions, has made his annual report as follows: "Paid-up capital, 34 cents; surplus, 6 cents; number of "blacks" during 1878, 1,461; cash lost on street, $1.20; number of fights, 28; number of victories, 27; present liabilities, 2 cents; dividends to stockholders, 000.

Obituaries.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

REV. WILLIAM FINN was born in Simpson county, Kentucky, December 13, 1806. He was reared by a very pious mother, and converted in early manhood; but his father being much opposed to religion, he met with many discouragements after he joined the church, but remained faithful in spite of them. He was licensed to preach in the year 1832, and labored for ten years as a local preacher in the state of Kentucky. In 1837 he moved to Illinois, and in '42 was received on trial in the Illinois Conference, and appointed to the McLeansborough circuit. This year there were over one thousand converts, and he received thirteen hundred into the church. In 1844 he was received into full connection in the Illinois Conference, and was ordained both Deacon and Elder by Bishop Roberts. Upon the division of the church he, in company with three others, transferred to the Kentucky Conference, and was sent in the same year to Arkansas, by Bishop Andrew. From that time he labored in the Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences. In the early years of his ministry he was noted for his zeal and revival power. Nearly every circuit he traveled was blessed with a glorious revival of religion. Seven years ago he was compelled to ask for a superannuated relation, owing to feeble health and growing infirmities. From that time until his death he lived in Wilkinson county with his step-daughter, wife of the Rev. J. S. Parker, of the Mississippi Conference. He was married three times. His last wife, who still survives him, intelligent, accomplished, pious and devoted to her husband's calling, has been indeed a true and helpful companion to him through life.

He was a great sufferer for many years, but his last illness was brief. He died of congestion of the lungs, owing to the great difficulty of breathing he talked but little, but a short time before the watery vapors stood still he said to his beloved wife: "All is well. I have no preparations to make. I have been ready for the change a long time." He passed away, without a struggle on the 20th of February, in the seventy-three years of natural life, and forty-seven of these devoted to the ministry of the Son of God, a record with which but few may care to be honored.

What an awful thought for good, from one such life, opening before the mental vision, when it is considered that each one of the hundreds and thousands converted through his instrumentality becomes himself a worker in the great vineyard. As the dispensation of the water seven to the outmost verge of the lake shall extend back its concentric circles, ever narrowing until they all meet in one common point, where the force was first employed, so in the great day of final reckoning, when the books shall be opened, and men shall know even as they are known, will it be seen that the salvation of nations, of states of communities, of families, of individuals can be traced back to one faithful breast, the pleading tongue, as the inspiring cause. No wonder, then, that the unwrapt seer, contemplating the glorious results of the great resurrection, should have employed the glowing words: "They that be wise shall shine with the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."

T. O. ANDREWS.

REV. BARNABAS PIPKIN was born in North Carolina, February 27, 1795. He entered the South Carolina Conference in the beginning of the year 1818, and was received, admitted to deacon's orders and transferred to the Mississippi Conference in 1821. After a ministerial life of nearly sixty years, he died, presiding elder, and superannuated preacher, this venerable servant of God fell at peace at his residence in St. Helena parish, United States of Louisiana, on the eleventh day of May, 1878, aged eighty-two years. He was twice married: first to Miss Elizabeth Hearn, and secondly to Mrs. R. A. Bickford. The pious, frugal and generous habits of his domestic life was one of great comfort and helpfulness amid the wearing and wearying toil and suffering place under his pastoral rule. He was a man of labor and self-sacrifice for his Master's sake. Strong in his convictions of duty, what his hands found to do he did with all his might. His death was sublime. I conclude that he had approached the end of his journey, he only looked back to see the good he had done, his household, and send greeting to all, waiting, his and in advance, he passed through the gate and entered the city. The tenderest link that bound us to the fathers is broken and the open portal on high beckons us to those fields of rest.

His was the eloquence of pathos, the weight of faith, the gushings of a great heart, great because Christ was formed within him, the hope of glory.

W. H. WATKINS.

WILLIAM HENDRIX was born in Lexington District, South Carolina, on the twenty-eighth day of November, 1796, and died suddenly of heart disease at his house in Leake county, Mississippi, on the evening of the fifth of April, 1879. Our venerable father long ante the subject of God's converting grace in Bullitt county, Alabama, in the year 1826, and soon thereafter joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, near Mount Pleasant, Alabama, in which community he married and lived until his removal to Leake county, Mississippi, in 1847. Soon as convenient after his arrival at his new home he and the members of his family who were connected with the Church presented their certificate and were regularly admitted at Goshen, Carthage circuit. In the year 1854 he lost his loved companion, the mother of his children, three sons and eight daughters; she was a helpmate indeed, a true and devoted Christian. His life was one of varied cares, and responsibilities, but he moved on calmly and effectively and industriously, ever trusting, never despairing, believing that he in whom he trusted would do right.

He was a man of unquestionable honesty and integrity, a lover of the truth, and followed fully the injunction of the Apostle, "owe no man." He always was a man of peace, never heard to speak ill of any. Was a dear lover of his Bible, had read it through many times; he read it prayerfully and understandingly; was a man of prayer, a regular attendant at church, as long as able to walk there. He freely and conscientiously gave of his means to the support of the gospel as long as he lived, and said, after I am dead I want the church to live." He lived to see all his children members of the church, married and settled, and all but one still survive him. The writer knew him well and intimately, and can exclaim: "Let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like his."

O. H. P. DAVIS.

JULIA ANN MITCHELL, daughter of Rev. E. F. and A. E. Presley, and wife of Jas. H. Mitchell, of the parish of Sabine, Louisiana, was born June 2, 1850, and died after a short illness of two days, of heart disease, March 7, 1879. She was not thought to be in any danger until the cold hand of death was felt on her mortal frame, when the heart, the seat of life, came suddenly to a halt.

Julia was an affectionate wife, an obedient child and a young and tender mother. Her parents gave her to the Lord in baptism in infancy, and being brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, she did not depart from it, but took upon her the obligations of the church and lived a consistent Christian, honoring God in all her acts and words. We have no dying words to record, but her beautiful life of humility and Christian fortitude gives us a strong hope in her death. It was the writer's privilege to be intimately acquainted with the subject of this notice, and we can say of a truth a brighter or more cheerful, humble Christian I never knew. She leaves a husband, an infant child, father, mother, brothers and sisters and many friends to mourn her loss.

CHARLIE M. HACKETT, aged nine years, two months and fifteen days, was shot by some unknown one or party, in the Baton Rouge garrison, March 28, 1879.

He was a regular attendant at the Methodist Sunday-school, and helped to nurse the sick during the epidemic last summer. He possessed a kind and affectionate heart, and it seems hard to think that one so young should be killed in the bloom of his health, bereaving a tender mother and a kind father, brothers and sisters, of their youngest child and brother.

He was by nature endowed with a bright and genial disposition, and his social qualities won for him a host of warm friends, many of whom will long hold the recollections of his amiable virtues, mingled with sad regrets, regarding the way in which he was taken from his family, the social circle and the world.

BRO. JOHN THOMAS MASON, son of the late Charles R. and Martha F. Mason, and eldest brother of the Rev. J. M. Mason, of the Alabama Conference, was born in Sussex county, Va., January 20, 1837, and died at Comanche, Texas, February 5, 1879 just one year after the decease of his mother. He was raised at Spring Hill, Greene county, Ala.; was the eldest child, save one, a married sister. Feeling that the death of his father devolved upon him greater responsibility for the welfare of the family, he never married, and in the winter of 1875 he left his loved ones and dear association of friends, and went to Texas, that he might become better able to render comfortable the life of an aged and feeble mother and a delicate and affectionate sister. On the death of his mother he resolved to return as soon as practicable to his fascinating unmarried sister. When ready to return the yellow fever broke out and prevented. After the fever subsided, and all at home were joyfully anticipating his return, without any previous notice of his sickness, a letter brought the shocking intelligence of his death.

The above indicates sufficiently what kind of a son and brother he was. In all the relations of life he was unselfish, self-denying, and ever ready to sacrifice his own pleasure upon the altar of duty.

He was a prominent member of the Masonic Fraternity for many years, and was ever forward in carrying its benevolent designs. The Masonic widow and orphans will be among the many that will rise up at the last day and call him blessed. He was also a loyal Good Templar. This became not so much for his own good as for the good of others, for he had determined upon total abstinence long before he took the pledge. He was one of four sons that bravely fought in the late civil war for constitutional liberty. He served under Gen. Bragg, in the "Army of Tennessee," and was wounded at the battle of Bean's Station in April, 1864. He was a regular and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South; was recording steward of Spring Hill circuit, and Sabbath school superintendent at Spring Hill, when he left for Texas. For several years previous to this time the writer was intimately associated with him, and under all circumstances he found him the same upright, unselfish and genial Christian. He was a natty gentleman, and besides, his mind was cultivated and adorned with the elegant literature to which few known only to his intimate friends. We can never forget his ready wit, by which we were often entertained and delighted. He was stricken a short time before his death, and during his illness he said that he would prefer to live longer if it was the will of God that he had more work to do in the future. He died in the triumphs of the Christian faith. He passed away in the presence of the one of the three most noble women made mother by grace.

MRS. FLORA ARSELIA MCCANN, consort of A. Craig, Martha Ann Stewart, was born in the State of Alabama (Butler county) in June, 1853. She was converted to God at a camp meeting held in Covington county, Miss., by the labors of the preaching of Charles Mc Gaughey, of the Alabama Conference, at the time of the writer's connection of the Mississippi Conference, and was married to John W. McCann December 18, 1872, and died March 16, 1879, in the 26th year of her age, leaving both in Christ Jesus, sleeping in the dust of God in all the crucified Jesus, which was only a few minutes before she breathed her last breath, and then passed all as calm as an infant going to sleep in its mother's breast. She leaves a widowed husband and infant son to mourn her loss. As soon as I discovered that her symptoms became a fatal nature I asked her if she felt herself prepared to die. She turned her face toward me, looked me straight in the face, and, very calmly said: "Pa, do you think I am going to die?" I said to her: "Daughter, I think the symptoms are all against you." "Well, pa, I am ready, glory be to God." After she had undressed, prayed for and with those she commenced parting with her relatives and friends to meet her in heaven, praying that the unconverted might be converted speedily, and that several of her friends present to join the church etc. They were astonished that the love of God should have such a powerful effect on a person in the act of dying. One of those present burst into tears and lamented to see her go to the world to leave as she felt, and he at the very time was dying. Several of those present at the time have since been soundly converted to God. After praising God for some time she became calm and commenced giving directions in regard to the arrangement of her earthly matters, and especially her infant sons, that he should be raised for God and dedicated to him entirely.

About eight hours before she died I informed her that it was impossible for her to survive long. On receiving this information her countenance lit up with a halo of heavenly glory, that told the state of her mind before she spoke a word. When she did speak after a few moments, tells him her words were: "Bless God, I am ready." From that time until her death she shouted and praised God continually, when able was not engaged in exhorting some relative or friend to meet her in heaven. Not content with admonishing her friends present she extended the admonition to relatives and friends at a distance through her father and mother.

ISAIH P. BLOCKER was born in Leake county, Mississippi, January 2, 1854, died near Tyrrill, Texas, February 26, 1879. Brother Blocker was a stranger among us, having moved from Louisiana to the place at which he died but a short time before his death. His piety was of that spiritual and influential yet quiet and unobtrusive character which impressed all who knew him with its genuineness. I have rarely known a stranger, simply by the strength of his character, more readily and completely to secure the confidence of those with whom he came in contact. He was a man of faith and true devotion. Faithful in the use of the means of grace, he speedily grew in grace and in the knowledge of Christ. Knowing that the painful surgical operation, which was deemed necessary by his physicians, would probably end in death, he assured his family to advance that he was ready to die and feared no evil. We miss him at our prayer-meetings, which he regularly attended at great inconvenience, but we doubt not that our loss is his gain.

A SONG OF THANKS.

BY MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Thank God for the dear ones safe to-day,
Safe at home on the happy shore,
Where the smile of the Father beams for aye,
And the shadow of pain shall fall no more
Thank God for the hearts that have done with sin,
For the eyes that shall never be blind with tears,
Thank God for the beautiful, entered in
To the perfect rest of the deathless years.

Thank God to-day for the pilgrim feet,
Which have trodden the last of the toilsome way,
For the strong, for the frail, for the babes so sweet
Who have left forever this crumbling clay,
Who have changed earth's trial and loss, and moan,
For the victor's palm, and the voice of praise,
Which dwell in the sight of the great white throne,
And join in the songs which the ransomed raise.

Thank God to-day for the hope sublime
Which fills our souls in the darkest hours,
Thank God that the transient cares of time,
Are wreathed in the glory of fadeless flowers.
Thank God for the rift in the desolate grave,
'Tis the soldier's couch, not the captive's prison;
He hallowed its portal, who died to save,
And we write o'er its arch: "The Lord is risen!"

In the Land of the Lotus.

A VISIT TO THE SACRED ISLAND OF PHILÆ.—THE TEMPLE OF OSIRIS SEEN BY TORCHLIGHT.

Toward sunset we pulled to shore. The barge sat upon the water like a huge gourd. A dozen dusky Nubians, with ribs of steel and muscles of iron, pulled the long oars that rose and fell upon the river in rhythmical cadence, while they chanted in deep guttural some melodious though monotonous legend of the Nile. The island was bathed in radiance. We approached a crumbling terrace, from which the fine grass fell in fringes and all of the wide stairs that led from the river to the rock above were broken and overgrown with mosses and trailing creepers. A floating vine served for a cable to draw us to the land. The crew, clad briefly in a girdle of flaming colors, leaped overboard, and a moment later we lay safely moored under the tall palms of Philæ the sacred isle. Michael, with his well-trained retinue, at once proceeded to lay dinner in a superb pavilion overhanging the eastern branch of the river, and, while our appetites were sharpening, we scattered in pairs among the temples, corridors and tomb that cover the island from shore to shore. You know Philæ? The tropical oasis in the Nile, a few miles above the first cataract, a garden in the desert, walled about by huge cliffs as black as night, as smooth as glass, as hard as adamant. These are the iron gates of Nubia, and many a king, whose glorious day is almost forgotten in history, has left his deed indelibly engraven on the rock. We had reviewed hastily the antiquities of the island when we were summoned to our repast. Seated on fallen columns, among pillars and obelisks that have survived the siege of time, we feasted. There were Catholics, Protestants, Mohammedans and Infidels grouped on the eastern terrace, awaiting moonrise. The shadows deepened among the hills; the last flush of sunset fold like a rose, and the delicate afterglow seemed to be spirited away by the deep, strong current that swept noiselessly about our island, flowing forever, through the desert into the green and fertile Northland, the land of Goshen. I wonder if any one of us realized at that moment that we were sitting among the ruins of a race once more advanced, more poetic, more artistic than our own; that it had its revelations, its religious development, its triumphs and its decay; that the god of that people, Osiris, was so adored that even his name was not uttered by profane lips; and in those days the most terrible of oaths was this: "By him who sleeps in Philæ!" We divided the cold turkey and champagne within reach of that undiscovered tomb, at our backs loomed one of the most splendid and perfect temples of the East. True, it is but two thousand years old—the paint was hardly dry when King Herod decreed the slaughter of the innocents—but it was sacred to Osiris.

At this moment there was a flush in the East. A wave of delicate color swept over the sky, the black walls beyond the river drew nearer to us, a silver thread of light ran along their rough and rugged tops, a flake of cloud—just one flake in a sky that is forever cloudless—caught fire, and then the great, glimmering, golden shield—the moon—rolled slowly and serenely into space. Our temples were transfigured; the delicate reliefs were magnified; even the imperishable tints that have withstood the wind and the sun these twenty centuries were distinguishable; colonnades of pallid columns stretched down the island, and every tomb gathered its melancholy and funeral shadows on its sides, where they lying like trailing palls. We were all silent now. A little gust of wind swept down the valley like a sigh; the palms of one accord bowed their plumed heads to the East. It was thus the full moon crowned a Nubian solitude that supreme and unmemorable night. No sooner was the moon well up than there was a stir in Philæ. Michael mustered his forces and bore the properties of the camp to the barge that was still moored under the terrace. The caravan was about to depart. Whatever was to be done in opposition to this predestined plan had to be done at once. I stood apart from the busy groups, musing and moody. A form approached me—a friend whose love of travel, whose knowledge of the world, and whose deep appreciation of all that is pathetic and poetic in the decadence of that superb East, had won my sympathy and esteem. "Do you return?" said the voice, scarcely above a whisper. "Not willingly," I replied. "Why may we not remain? The island is not half explored. How are weapons and provisions? We may hail the barge at sunrise, and rejoin our friends without discommoding them in the least. I choose to remain. Will you join me? Is it a bargain?" It was a bargain struck on the instant. Without delay I secured a rifle from Yusef, the pearl of dragomans. A double portion of cold meats and wine was hidden in a convenient corner; we had our torches, and surplus garments ample enough to protect us from the chilly air of the night. The caravan repaired to the terrace. How the palms glistened in the moonlight. How the barge rose and fell on the dark surface of the river. "All aboard," cried the caravan in lusty chorus. "All aboard," said I, "for two of us remain on Philæ until sunrise, but the barge returns for us at that hour; bon voyage." There was no objection raised; there was no exclamation of surprise; we were of age, of one religion and of one mind. It was our affair, and no one was authorized to oppose us. With deft hands the Nubians cast off the vines that bound them to the island, and swung slowly into the current; they fell upon their oars and sang while the barge swam onward and faded like a phantom in the shadow under the Nubian shore. A last farewell floated over the water to us. It was then that we realized that we were truly alone on an island in the Nile, with no hope of escape before sunrise. Again we heard voices—a song wafted on the tranquil air, growing fainter and fainter at every moment as our friends retreated down the narrow valley. We lighted our torches and began a thorough survey of the great temple. From the top of the lofty Pylon to the obscure recesses of the Hypogeum we scoured the sculptured stones with flame, and read vaguely but with awe the secret history of Osiris. There it was, page after page, from the advent to the transfiguration—a very sacred and mysterious revelation which in many instances seemed to foreshadow the advent of our Lord. Doubtless the night, and the awful sense of solitude from which it was impossible for us to escape, heightened our singular enthusiasm; the place seemed thronged with spirits; you know it is written: "Statues sleep in the day-time, in the night they wake and become ghosts." What faces and forms started into life under the glare of our torches! They seemed actually to move in the quivering light. Isis, with extended arms, fringed with feathers, a winged goddess; the mitered Athos, with an evil eye set in the clean-cut profile; rows of sharks, giants with coiled beards; deities crowned with serpents, and sphynxes half human, half beast. We lost our reckoning more than once, and threaded gloomy halls, where clouds of bats poured down upon us; mildewed creatures, with fetid breath, that fastened upon us like vampires, and were with difficulty beaten off. They drove us from their solitudes, centuries old, and when we had fled into the halls above them we could still hear the low thunder of a myriad slimy wings flapping in that whirlwind of desperation and despair. How sweet, how delicious the night air on the terrace! We sat there till the moon had sailed half across the heavens, and then we climbed to the topmost balcony of the temple and sought repose. Night-birds darted by us, now and again sweeping down within our reach, and screaming with affright; strange echoes wandered to and fro among the deserted chambers. Yusef's rifle lay by my side; I slept the half sleep that is like drunkenness; I seemed conscious of my surroundings, and yet I dreamed incessantly; once I sprang to my feet with a shriek of horror that was scarcely calculated to cheer my opinion. In my dream I seemed to be hanging upon the very edge of the temple terrace, and then I slid off into hideous space, and was dashing headlong down to death when I awoke. There was little sleep after that. We sat in the moonlight and chatted, and smoked the consoling and soothing cigarette, and looked down upon the river that slide noiselessly by, two hundred feet below us. While we watched the mysterious current, whose source is hidden in some fabulous land, we saw, at the same moment, a dark object stemming the current and slowly approaching the island. My first thought was of the crocodile, that has been frightened out of Egypt, but still clings to the Nubian shore with reckless persistence. We descended to a balcony overhanging the water, at a point within range of our unwelcome visitor. On it came; we saw dark limbs indolently propelling the creature; we heard quick, hard breathing, and then the object swam into the white wake of the moon, and we saw a human head and part of a human form buoyed up by a log; it was the Nubian raft, and we were about to be inspected by a native of the soil. A challenge brought no response from the amphibious rascal. The challenge was repeated, and then, after a reasonable pause, I discharged Yusef's rifle into the air. With a grunt that blackamoor went on the other tack and disappeared. It was an unexpected and impromptu rehearsal of the fourth act of "Aida." We were on the very spot—Philæ the sacred Isle. Here was the temple, a portion of which is represented, more or less accurately, in the picturesque fourth act, the moon, the palms, the river, the fragrant jungle, and from time to time strange chants that floated in the air—thrilling, plaintive notes, droned monotonously, bee-like, at welcome intervals, till sunrise. How we listened and brooded over the water, and saw in a tideless nook the ivory petals of a great flower, that blossomed and unveiled its golden glories until it seemed another moon. It lived, it breathed, it palpitated upon the crystal surface of the tranquil tide, it flooded the air with fragrance; all the passion of Egypt, all the poetry of the Nile, all the magnificence and the mystery of the Orient bloomed again in that queenly flower. She was a necromancer; she held me with her conjuration; I saw beyond mountains and deserts, tropical jungles astir with crouching tigers, troops of elephants, droves of gaunt giraffes before the storm, and the hippopotami wallowing in tall river reeds. Abyssinia, Sennaar, Kardafan, Darfour, sent embassies to me, and I had for my slaves legions of Berbers girdled with gold, shining with oil, murkey and shapely fellows! The sun was up when I woke again; the barge awaited us; our boat was on shore; we had nothing to do but to return to our friends and resume the voyage—but for me that night the lotus bloomed and withered.—C. W. Stoddard, in San Francisco Chronicle.

Repeating Sermons.

For our own part we should be glad to have our sermons printed in advance, and carefully read and studied by all who were to hear them on the next Sunday. It would prepare them to receive the preaching of the gospel; for reading is one thing and preaching is another. When a minister of the gospel preaches he masters the line of his argument and arrays his illustrations, and then throws himself into the discussion of the subject, looking his people straight in the eye and firing up under the interchange of electric, physical and superphysical currents. Why, even an actor, a mere play actor, we should think would prefer to have his audience familiar with the text of the Shakespeare play which he is going to perform. For a still stronger reason, the preacher of the gospel who, under powerful convictions of the tremendous import of the truths he is going to utter, ascends the pulpit to arouse the consciences of his hearers, should be glad to have all intellectual preparation which preliminary study could give them.

That is one good result of repeating sermons. The hearer knows the logic of the sermon, having heard it once; he is now more open for an attack upon his conscience. Moreover, the preacher himself has no longer to think of the argument, having become familiar with it, and can pour the whole tide of his soul into the appeal to the conscience. George Whitfield never came to the largest measure of his success with a sermon until he had preached it thirty-six times. After that it became like a hammer, falling with tremendous blows upon his audience.—Rev. Dr. Deems, in Sunday Magazine.

MAKE FRIENDS.—Life is very critical. Any word may be our last. Any farewell, even amid glee and merriment, may be forever. If this truth were but burned into our consciousness, and if it ruled as a deep conviction and real power in our lives, would it not give a new meaning to all our human relationships? Would it not make us far more tender than we sometimes are? Would it not oftentimes put a reign upon our rash and impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the miserable suspicions and jealousies that now so often embitter the fountains of our love? Would we be so impatient of the faults of others? Would you allow trivial misunderstandings to build up strong walls between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels, year after year, which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass neighbors or old friends on the street, without recognition, because of some real or fancied slight, some wounding of pride, or some ancient grudge? Or would be so chary of our kind words, our commendations, our sympathy, our comfort, when weary hearts all about us are breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have it in our power to give?—Rev. J. R. Miller, in Sunday School Times.

Religious Intelligence.

—Friedrich Luther, a descendant of Martin Luther, is a student of theology at the University of Strasbourg.

—The Presbyterians and Episcopalians are said to number 12,000 in Georgia. White Methodist and Baptist number 300,000.

—The King of Siam has richly endowed a college for the education of the children of his court and of the princess, and called upon Rev. S. G. McFarland, a missionary, to manage it. It is to be a Christian college.

—The Sabbath Morning Free Breakfast Mission in Liverpool feeds the poor, and conducts morning meetings, a Bible class for adults, classes and services for children and a Sunday evening service. It gave 17,589 breakfasts last year.

—A new Free Church, erected by the congregation of the Rev. Dr. Andrew Bonar at the West End Park Glasgow, was opened on December 1 for public worship. The building cost £12,000.

—By the "greater London" is understood the compact part of the metropolis excluding the suburbs. It has a population of 3,577,301, and church accommodation for 1,519,776 persons. The Church of England provides 51.96 per cent. of the sittings, the Congregationalists supply 12.28 per cent., the Methodists 10.23 per cent. and the Baptists 10.18 per cent., after which come the Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, etc.

—The American Board have received the glorious news that, in what is called the Madura district, India, converts to Christianity had been made numbering 40,000! It was stated that those persons had not only thrown away their idols, but had actually been converted.

—The Primitive Methodist Mission Schools in the Island of Fernando Po, west coast of Africa, have been closed by order of the Spanish Government. This is another step in addition to many before, taken of the government of King Alfonso in restriction of the religious liberty which has gained under the republic and King Amadeus. One of the missionaries was served with an order to leave the island within twenty-four hours, and a similar notice was expected for the other.

—The English Presbyterians are faithful in observing centenaries. In 1843 they had the bicentenary of the Westminster Assembly, in 1860 the tercentenary of the Scotish Reformation, in 1862 the bicentenary of the ejections of 1662, in 1872 the tercentenary of the death of John Knox and the formation of the first Presbytery at Wandsworth, now they have before them the Chalmers Centenary.

—The first Protestant Church in Constantinople was founded in 1846; there are now seventy-six in the Turkish Empire, about a third of which are self-supporting, and all self-governing. Four "Evangelical Unions" have been formed for mutual counsel and aid; one at Harpoot, in Mesopotamia, of twenty-six churches; another in Southern Asia Minor of twenty-three churches; another in Central Asia Minor of eight churches; another of Bithynia of eleven churches. Connected with these churches are 3,303 members, and congregations numbering 13,000, with a population of over 18,000 native Protestants.

—A remarkable revival has taken place in Edinboro, Penn., the seat of one of the state normal schools, under the labors of the Rev. E. P. Hammond. In the first week there were more than 200 conversions. The meetings were held in Normal Hall; and, notwithstanding the snow and the extreme severity of the weather, the hall was crowded every day. Mr. Hammond addressed the students by themselves for half an hour every day. All the 190 students, except ten, either profess conversion or have risen publicly to express their desire to be converted. All the churches and ministers have united heartily in the work. A choir of over a hundred singers was assisted by a fine orchestra of instrumental music. Mr. Hammond went from Edinboro to Pittsburg.

—The American and English Baptists, it is reported, are about to establish a theological school in Paris for the training of such of their young French members as desire to enter the ministry. The Rev. Dr. E. C. Mitchell of Chicago has been chosen president of the enterprise, and among the councillors are Dr. M. B. Anderson of Rochester, N. Y., and Charles H. Spurgeon of London. A building is already in possession of the Baptists suitable for the school, which can be conducted at an expense of $3,000 a year.

—The American Home Missionary Society is able to present the following splendid record as given in its magazine for March: "It is matter of sincere gratitude to God that in the dark and troublous times through which the country has been passing, the receipts of this society, in its latest five full years, exceed by nearly $151,000 those of the five most prosperous years that the society had previously known. By way of contrast, it is humiliating to report that the receipts of the American Board, in its latest five years, are less than those of the five most prosperous previous years to the amount of $245,338. As the result of this sad decline our missionaries have been obliged to retrench below the necessities of the work to the amount of an annual average of nearly $50,000. How long shall foreign missions be obliged to 'live at this poor, dying rate?'"

—SCOTLAND.—Mr. Spiers, the children's evangelist, has concluded a series of successful services in Leith. His facility for attracting and interesting the little people is described as something remarkable. One who took part in the work writes about it as follows:

"A novel and attractive sight was presented to the eye as one passed along Charlotte street, Tolbooth Wynd, or Kirkgate, on those evenings, from a quarter to seven and onwards. Children of various ages were hurrying forward in groups, or singly, the hasty walk often passing into a run lest they should be too late. Then the sea of upturned faces, girls on the right and boys on the left, with teachers scattered among them, was a sight never to be forgotten. The galleries also were thronged with an eager audience, adults largely mingling with the children there. After the first few nights the attention was all that could be desired. The prevalent expression on these young faces was pleasure; it was evident they enjoyed the meeting. In many cases this pleasure deepened into tearful interest." The inquiry meetings following the preaching service were a prominent feature. Many of the little ones confessed a new-found faith, and in frequent cases the same inquirers came night after night to the same worker, and so got continued instruction and guidance.

—The Journal des Missions Evangeliques has a report from the heart of Africa of one of the most remarkable incidents in the history of missions. A year or more ago Mr. Coillard, one of the French missionaries who had been laboring among the Bassutos, set off with a small party of native Christians to begin labor at some point further to the north not yet occupied. Thwarted in one plan after another, often in great peril, and driven on further and further to the north, he has at last come to a people on the upper waters of the Zambesi, in the heart of Central Africa, nearly a thousand miles away from his starting point, who speak the Bassuto language! The missionaries have met with a cordial reception, and are already engaged in preaching the Gospel and teaching them Christian hymns. "Man proposes, but God disposes." These Bassutos, called Makololo in their present location, emigrated some fifty years ago from their old home in South Africa. Thus marvelously has the way been prepared for the establishment of a Christian mission nearly four hundred miles to the west of the Scotch missions on Lake Nyassa, and as far to the southwest of Ujiji as Lake Tanganyika. The readers of Stanley's volumes will remember his allusion (vol. I., p. 502) to a tribe of Bassutos on the Zambesi, the same now found by Mr. Coillard and party.

THE BEES THAT WENT TO THE SKY.

BY JOEL STACY.

Buzzy Buzz, Wuzzy Fuzz, Dippetty Flop,
All flew up to the cherry-tree top.
"Pooh!" said Buzzy Buzz, "this is n't high Let's keep on till we get to the sky."

Upward they went, and they never would stop—
Buzzy Buzz, Wuzzy Fuzz, Dippetty Flop;
"Ah, how jolly!" they started to say—
When ev'ry one of them fainted away.

The next they knew they were down on the ground,
Three dizzy bumble bees, frightened but sound.
Never a mortal had heard them "Prop
Buzzy Buzz, Wuzzy Fuzz, Dippetty Flop.

Humbled and tumbled, and dusty and hamed,
Wouldn't you think they'd have been quite ashamed?
But "No, sir," they buzzed "it was n't a fall;
We only came down from the sky, that is all."

And now, whenever you see three bees
Buzzing and playing about by your knees,
You'll know, by their never once venturing high,
They're the very same bees that flew up to the sky.

A Ghost Story.

BY "SPEED SCOTCH."

We were never so happy as when gathered around Aunt De Forest. She had been everywhere and knew everything, to our child-mind, and the pleasant part of all was, her readiness to talk to us.

One night the wind howled about us, the air was filled with large flakes of falling snow, which gathered on the roof, every now and then slid in solemn thuds to the ground like the feet of an invisible presence, whose fingers tugged at the window-shutters, or toyed with some stray branch of the old elm that in quiet times never thought of striking the house. We didn't care much in our warm, bright sitting-room, made cheerful by the firelight upon the broad hearth. There were queer noises going on in the old chimney, but we had been brought up with them and only laughed at the frantic notes the wind made in its great throat.

"What shall we talk about to-night?" inquired Aunt De Forest in her usual pleasant manner.

"Give us a short ghost story," said one. "Oh! a ghost story, it's just the night," said another.

"Well then, a ghost story it shall be," replied auntie.

"I suppose you saw one when you were abroad, didn't you?" I asked.

"Yes, I did, boo-oo-oh," said aunt, shivering. It made us all get closer together.

"Well," began auntie, "when I was in Rome we went early one morning to those grand old ruins of the Coliseum; there we wandered and wondered nearly all day. The building was oval in shape and so immensely large that it is no wonder it never had a roof; it would have been impossible to cover it. Standing in the great arena everything was so vast that thousands used to gather there to watch the contests of men or beasts, and hear the thundering shouts that went up for the victors. What a reign of ruin it was; tall columns broken and decayed, with masses of clinging vines swaying from the tops; arch upon arch of massive masonry with patches of grass here and there underneath. All the inside finish of finest marble has been carried away; the thousands of seats that rose tier upon tier have disappeared as well as the multitude that occupied them. Many of the modern palaces of Rome are built of material stolen from those old ruins. There were partial remains of galleries, chapels, corridors and vaulted passage-ways all more or less covered with vigorous vegetation. A botanist once made a collection of four hundred and twenty different plants growing in these ruins; some of the mosses and lichens are very beautiful. A weird sort of feeling took possession of me, as I walked now along the margin of the arena, then stumbling up some rough stairway or clambering down into a dark, damp vault until I felt I was a creature of the past, and my identity was so mingled with the strange surroundings that it seemed I had once lived there—that I was visiting old scenes. We passed from here into a church, not the great St. Peter's or the Pantheon—they were in store for another time—but a comparatively small one, named for one of the saints I've forgotten now. Although smaller than St. Peter's, it seemed immense, and was very old. There were dreary tombs underneath where the bones of the dead had been moldering for ages, and in my state of mind and seen by the light of flickering torches, they seemed gasping to swallow us. We were glad to ascend the stairs to one of the beautiful chapels, whose fine pictures in exquisite mosaic had attracted us to the place. There were copies of some of the most celebrated paintings in the world. One has to examine very closely to detect the demarkations between the little stones. We ascended to the galleries—lined with statues and paintings. I have a mania for sketching, as you know. I became fascinated with a picture of Jephthah's daughter. I took out my sketchbook and was absorbed at once. In vain my friends warned me of the lateness of the hour. I would not heed them, so the burly janitor tossed a key in my lap and bade me go out at the front door and leave the key at his house. I consented in being alone. I drew the sweet face and carefully shaded to catch the expression. She seemed to smile upon me until I felt I was the successful Jephthah and she was leaving the canvas to meet me. I could hear the welcome from her lips and the songs of joy. My pencil moved rapidly, and the lovely form was fast dawning on my paper, when a door opened near me—a door I knew led directly to those dismal vaults—a face peered out, then another, then such a laugh; long and loud! would it never cease echoing? When it had almost stopped, some other corner seemed to catch it and whirl it back to me. The door closed with a bang, and I distinctly heard flying footsteps. I sat paralyzed. My book and pencil fell to my feet. I realized for the first time that I was alone. The Gheaditish mahlen had retreated and seemed mocking me now; the timbrel in her hands rang in my ears. Before the first shock was past I heard a low thud, thud upon the stairs. I know it was approaching feet. My blood chilled, my teeth chattered. The door opened and again that awful laugh. It seemed to me there were faces staring at me from every foot of that old church, and they caught the horrid echo, adding to its volume as it leaped from one to the other. I summoned all my strength and sprang to the door. There was no mistaking what I saw: two flying spectres, their long white grave-clothes trailing behind them, their arms spread like wings and their hair streaming in the chill air. I no longer disbelieved in ghosts. It was too real. I caught my shawl, which was white, and fled down the opposite stairs to the main chapel. My comb fell out, and my hair, which you know is very long, fell about my shoulders. I nervously applied the key to what I thought was the front door; it would not go into the lock. In my terror I dashed to the nearest window and tapped loudly, hoping to attract some passer-by. Two men approached and peered cautiously in. The last rays of the setting sun shone on spire and tower, reflecting upon the transparent glass, against which my face was pressed. What they saw I know not, but only that they took to their heels, crying, "A ghost! a ghost!" I suppose they must have seen something back of me, and already felt myself in the icy grasp of the inhabitants beneath the church, where I thought I was being dragged of the hair of my head."

Aunt De Forest paused.

"O, do go on!" I exclaimed; "what happened next?"

"It's a good place to end a chapter," said auntie, teasingly, "but I suppose you want the sequel. Well, I heard and knew no more until a stir about the bed where I lay, and my sister Maude calling my name. After a few minutes it all came back to me, those dreadful moments; then I wanted to know the rest. It seems my white shawl, streaming hair and wild look had so terrified the men who saw me that they ran to the janitor and told him. Remembering about my being left there, he listened to the church to find me fainting on the floor. He carried me to his house and sent for a physician. As I did not return to our hotel, and it was getting quite dark, my friends became alarmed and came in search of me. Finding the church locked they hastened to the janitor's to inquire. When I recovered sufficient to tell my story, the janitor and his wife laughed heartily, explained the ghost on the stairs as their two little girls, who knew nothing about ghosts, and were not afraid to play around the tombs of the dead. They were wholly unconscious of my presence, and often laughed in the gallery door, and then ran swiftly down to hear the echo of their own voices below. That afternoon they were dressed as grown ladies; little girls are quite fond of imitating their elders sometimes." Aunt De Forest looked at my sister and me significantly, "and they had some old lace curtains for trails, giving them such a weird appearance," dragging far behind them as they ran down the stairs. I persuaded Maude to return with me, after a few days, to finish the sketch of Jephthah's daughter. You have seen the painting in the parlor, and you may be sure I never see it without being vividly reminded of my ghosts in Rome; but, children," said my aunt, impressively, "the point of the story is this, and I wish you to carry it all your lives, it may save you much annoyance and trouble, there are no more real ghosts than those two little girls, and you may always be assured, when you hear of haunted houses and wandering ghosts, that there is some natural cause for the strange noises or sights. A SPIDER CRADLE. A certain spider found in the southern part of Europe—makes a curious cradle to preserve her babies through the cold winter, so that the spider family shall not be exterminated. She makes a silk case somewhat the shape of a balloon upside down, not quite half an inch long, and fitted with a door, or cover, which may be opened, though she leaves it carefully closed. In this are placed the eggs, from which little spiders will come in the spring. To protect them from enemies and from cold, the anxious mamma makes an outer case of exactly the same shape, only about an inch long and of course larger all around, also fitted with a closed door. Between the two cases the space is stuffed with a golden-brown colored silk, which she spins herself, and makes it warm and comfortable inside. The whole thing is hung to a bush, and left through the winter.

A menagerie of ants is kept by Sir John Lubbock, of England. About forty kinds are in separate nests under glass, and surrounded by water to prevent their running over the house. Among these ants a kind of blind beetle lives, which is taken as much care of as if it were their own young. All ants are mid great workers. The large red ones found in Central Europe, the females, are lazy fighters, and go out against other kinds of ants, and bring them home as slaves. They never build houses, or take care of the baby-ants, nor prepare their own food. They have become so helpless by being aristocrats for so long, that if deprived of their slaves they soon die.

Birth-Days.

To every one these days come with incentives to serious thought and meditation. The birth-day of another may awaken a degree of interest, but there is something more serious and intensely personal in our own. It has been the occasion of feasting and rejoicing, especially among the great and royal in all times, and it is among humbler folk, an occasion of friendly congratulation. Why our friends should notice the day is perhaps to be thus explained: They mean not to say we are glad you are growing old, and that you have left another mile-stone behind you on the road to the grave. If this should sometimes be the secret feeling, none would care to express it. What then? This perhaps: We are glad that you were born, and that you have lived so long. It is well for us, and for the world that you are still alive. The door is open also for that kind and well meant flattery that tells how gently time is dealing with us, how young for our years, and for the expression of wishes that many and happy years may be added to the earthly term.

The day is all one's own, as other anniversary days are not. In them all the world seems to be growing old together, and the things commemorated belong to the joy, sorrow and instruction of multitudes. Other people may have been born on the same day, as many were, and other events happened, as great and decisive battles, important discoveries and inventions, revolutions for freedom, earthquakes. These coincidences do not invade our domain, nor interfere with our proprietorship. To him who was born it was a very momentous day; even to the most obscure it was a more important day than that which dates the rise of empires or the crumbling of thrones. To be or not to be, or rather, To have been or not to have been, that is the question. He might not have been, but he was born, and with the birth have come all of life, all of time, and the eternity beyond. The most are glad to be. They are thankful that they were born, to look out upon the universe, to see the light of the sun, and to be as a part of the life and the intelligence that throbs and glows in the creation. And with the devout this sense of gratitude swells unutterably, since to be born opens to the soul the blessed consciousness of God, and the boundlessness of the everlasting. Not to have been born is the next most fearful thought to annihilation. The one is what might have been, the other, to the doubting mind, is what may be. Our life given, we cling to it, grateful to have escaped from nothingness, and more grateful that we live forevermore.

It is perhaps a little humiliating to consider that the world did very well without us when as yet we were not. Nearly all history was made before we came into the world, and creation itself, with all its beauties and wonders, was already old. The light, the flowers, the spangled frame of the skies, the Bible and redemption all were perfected without us. Laws were framed, freedom fought for, society organized printing, gunpowder, the mariner's compass invented, and the Copernican system accepted, and we were not here to help. It would have made but little difference if there had been this one name less. Now and then is one born whose not being would seemingly have been an irreparable loss. How could the world have done without Paul, Luther, Calvin, Wesley, Kepler, Newton, Shakespeare, Washington? But it is only a few stars of the first magnitude that we should miss from the multitudinous host of dungeon sentinels of light and beauty in the sky. What the birth-day is to him who is born may not be much in the scheme of the great universe into which he comes, and if he were to go out of it, only the smallest neighborhood would know that anything had happened. But there is a mission even in this momentary flitting across the horizon of time. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be." We are born to an inheritance in nature, and with the possibilities of a heavenly throne. Of him who is born we may say: All things are his; he is heir, if he will be, of all things, even of God himself. Even humble, let down out of heaven, for the capacity of being best marks the dignity of the being and the worth of it.

Probably the birth-days remembered in heaven are coincident with the dying days of earth. The years, as numbered here, are not counted there. The emergence from the mortal into the immortal is the epoch from which the personal history dates in the eternal world. There must be a celestial calendar of some sort, a dial-plate upon whose golden face no shadow-tree is to fall, or the revolutions of some mighty sphere by which the eras and cycles of heaven are noted. In the long hereafter the few fleeting years of earth must fall away as mere specks or atoms in the retrospect. In the depths of eternity they would not be worth counting in answering the question: "How old art thou?" We must start from a new point, and have simpler measures of duration.

The last birth day comes to all. Friends and kindred may prolong the remembrance after we are gone, but in time the memory of it fades out, and the passing generations sweep on removing every trace. As between the great and famous, and the little and obscure, it is only a measure of time. Pharaoh's birth-day was notable and grandly celebrated thousands of years ago, but when he was born is a mere conjecture now. As far as this world is concerned, the difference is almost nothing.

And, as to length of days, the difference between youth and old age becomes a point invisible at last. The birth-day with the young is brightened with health and worldly hope, and with the consciousness of increasing strength and wisdom; that of the aged is sometimes clouded with the infirmities of years, and with the feeling of regret that life has been spent to so little purpose; but we cannot tell which is nearer the last. It would seem to be an incongruous combination which the preacher has framed for our learning, but the lesson applies in all its parts, to the birth-day—to the birth-day of the good: "A good name is better than precious ointment, and the day of death than the day of one's birth."

"In Heaven."

BY DORCAS P.

The observations of our Lord have made so familiar to our thoughts the image of the unseen place that not unfrequently we find ourselves in the exercise of adjustment toward an emigration there. Awaking suddenly to this addiction in one of its most absorbed moods, the idea occurred to look and see what He has said about it. Among the many explicit allusions to it He said: Our Father is in heaven. There was to Him in his humanity not a more precious idea in the prospect of thought than this one: "Our Father is in heaven;" and it sounds so reverently from his lips that one grows charmed by repeating it, and so naturally, too, for him to say: "Our Father in heaven;" and so lovingly does the sense conveyed enter into our own thoughts and feelings that we dwell upon it as an actual comfort that "our Father is in heaven." One of the disciples opened his inmost mind to the Lord when he said: "Shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us." How many less bold, but not less ambitious, would fall into the line he heads, and over his shoulder repeat: "Shew us the Father." How could it be otherwise. Did not He himself set every one's soul aglow with the transports of awakened desire to see the Father of whom He never ceased to speak, and of whose mindfulness of man in his probation He gave so many interesting and instructive incidents? Could there be a greater attraction to creature sense than the "Father who art in heaven?" It is a delightful secret to cherish, that while we give to the good and pleasant in life, a passing and even a joyous entertainment a permitted vision of the Father awaits us, and if we see Him, it will be in heaven. He also said the angels were in heaven. Of this order of beings, between whom and us a close affinity is indicated in the suggested petition: That men on earth, as angels in heaven, may do the will of God. It is an instinct of kinship that induces the wish so often dismiss from the multitudinous hosts of dungeon sentinels of light and beauty in the sky. What the birth-day is to him who is born may not be much in the scheme of the great universe into which he comes, and if he were to go out of it, only the smallest neighborhood would know that anything had happened. ough, both in books and in practical life. He entered the Illinois Conference of his church in 1830; that Conference then included Indiana, Illinois, and the whole Northwest, so that he learned by experience much of the hardships of the itinerant ministry on the frontier.

He attained his first prominence in the church as pastor and presiding elder in Indiana during the first ten years of his ministry. In 1840 he was made Missionary Secretary for the West. In 1852 he was elected Bishop, bringing to this great office a stalwart manhood, great intellect, good judgment, a heart thoroughly devoted to the church, and rare executive ability. For more than a quarter of a century he had done his episcopal work, and the record of that work and of his blameless life was left as a priceless treasure to the church.

The last hours of the Bishop were peaceful and triumphant. Dr. Hartzell then read a telegram received by him on Saturday evening, which stated that the Bishop had really been dying for months, but had lived through his indomitable will. On the tenth instant he closed a Conference in Baltimore, when he said: "This is my last Conference; my work is done." His last words were: "It's all right; bless the Lord."

Henry Comstock, who is engaged in suppressing vice in some of its most hideous aspects, delivered an address not long since in Rochester, N. Y., and Our Church Work thus refers to it:

Certainly the cause is one which must commend itself to every lover of peace and morality among us. The most vigorous efforts on the part of infidels, free-thinkers and free-lovers have been made to thwart the aims of the society. But the United States Supreme Court, as well as all the State and municipal courts, have defended and promoted the objects of the society. Mr. Comstock says in the prosecution of his work his life is in constant danger. Once he was assaulted and struck down with a club while crossing City Hall Park, New York. At another time he marched a villain out of his office with his revolver pointed at his breast. Threatening letters come to him daily, and traveling as he does at all hours, day and night, he feels that it is God's protecting care alone which keeps him in safety. Concerning the work for the year past, he said that forty-eight arrests had been made, one of the most important of which was that of the manufacturer of Hop Bitters in New York, from whose premises seven and a half truck loads of obscene pamphlets had been taken. Besides many such like captures in other cities, he has taken lists of over 300,000 names and addresses for circulars, mainly drawn from catalogues of seminaries and boarding schools. The society has sent out 3,000 circular letters to the principals of institutions all over the country, cautioning them against printing the names of their pupils in the annual catalogues. Many have complied with the suggestion.

Egyptian Lotus.

MR. EDITOR: Seeing in your paper some remarks (slip enclosed) in regard to the various points at which the lotus has been found growing in America, I am led to say that this plant grows, or did grow, some years since, near Tuscaloosa, Ala., in a marshy pond, on a plantation formerly owned by the late Hopson Owen, several miles southwest of the town. It was known as "Nelumbium Luteum," or "Water Chinquapin." I remember wading out in mud and water, waist deep, to gather the flowers, as large as a hat-crown (about.) CASUAL READER.

COLUMBIANA, Ala.

Rev. R. B. Downer, in a note from Ocean Springs, Miss., April 29, informs us of the death of his father. Capt. Downer was over eighty years of age. Many years ago he was a member of the Methodist Church, but for years past had fallen under a cloud of skepticism. His wife, a woman of deep and exemplary piety, died several years ago. Bro. Downer says:

My father, Capt. J. C. Downer, died last night at our home here, and, I am rejoiced to tell you, assured us he fell asleep in Jesus. Thus our many prayers are answered. We rejoice amidst tears. Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Dr. F. M. Kennedy, the former genial and able editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, is in Charleston, and improving in health. The Southern Christian Advocate of April 26 says:

Dr. Kennedy is still in Charleston. He feels much improved by the experience of the past fortnight, owing in a degree to the exhilarating influences of his social surroundings. He has not given the peculiar treatment for which he came to Charleston sufficient trial to pronounce on its probable influence on his general health. His daily visits to our office are a source of genuine satisfaction.

The Louisiana State Constitutional Convention, now in session, last week passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That there is no intention whatever entertained by this body of impairing or restricting the political, civil or religious rights of any class of citizens of this State on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude, but, on the contrary, the intention is to defend and maintain the rights of the colored citizens as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States and of this State, under the new constitution about to be formed.

Rev. Juan S. Valencia reached New Orleans last week from Vanderbilt University, Nashville, and sailed for Vera Cruz, Wednesday, April 23. He is to enter at once upon the mission work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Mexico, under Superintendent Rev. W. M. Patterson. Bro. Valencia, we believe, is of the native Indian race, and returns to his country prepared to preach the gospel to his people.

Rev. T. J. Hough, pastor of our church at Natchitoches, La., writing April 15, says: "Our new church is nearing completion. We hope to finish it in thirty days. It will be the handsomest public building on Red River. Our District Conference will be held near here at Coushatta, on the twenty-third of July."

The temperance people of Ohio are sending miles of petitions to the Legislature asking the passage of the Quinby Local Option Bill. It provides for township option, and that in cases where the vote shows a majority in favor of sale it shall still rest under all the present legal restrictions, or any others which may be imposed in future. The Ohio Liquor Dealers' Association asks the Legislature to defeat the bill.

The Western Protestant is the title of a new weekly paper published at Haynesville, La. It is devoted to the interests of the Methodist Protestant Church, and is edited by J. M. P. Hickerson, D. D., LL. D., editor; J. W. Harper, associate editor.

Bishop Keener returned last week from holding the Alexandria District Conference, at Alexandria, La. He left Tuesday, April 29, for Tuscaloosa, Ala., where he holds a District Conference, and from thence he goes to Nashville to attend the annual meeting of the Bishops, May 8.

Rev. A. B. Earle, D. D., has just closed a union revival meeting at Glen Falls, N. Y. Four congregations united, and perfect harmony seemed to prevail. Deep conviction for sin pervaded the community. Old experiences were renewed, and many professed to have been converted—among the number the president of the village, and several prominent business men.

We are pained to learn, says the Pacific Methodist of April 18, that Rev. C. Chamberlin, of Santa Rosa, is in ill health. He is now taking a vacation to recuperate.

On a recent Sabbath all the saloons and rum-shops in Richmond, Va., were closed for the first time in the history of the city.

NEW LIFE; or Songs and Tunes for Sunday-Schools, Prayer Meetings and Revival Occasions. By R. M. McIntosh and W. H. E. Cunningham. Nashville, Tenn.: Southern Methodist Publishing House, 1879.

We must candidly disclaim any competence to review the music of the work before us. When we hear the tunes that are strange to us we can tell whether they please us or not. Many of the tunes and hymns of this collection are old, familiar, and such as we highly prize. We like the New Life better than any of its predecessors from our Publishing House. For our own enjoyment and profit we would prefer our hymn-book, but, as people will have something else, we shall be glad to see the Gospel Hymns, Winnowed Hymns, and the other multitudinous collections, generally substituted by this work. The edition, without notes, will meet the needs and convenience of many. Not one in ten of our children or grown people know one note from another, and this cheaper form without notes will enable all to obtain a copy, and make it practicable to supply our schools and congregations fully.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY, an Illustrated Magazine for the people. Conducted by J. G. Holland. Vol. 17, November 1878, to April, 1879, inclusive. New York: Scribner & Co., 1879.

Scribner's Monthly is about the most successful enterprise of its kind of our day. It is now eight and a half years old, and the regular monthly edition is over 50,000. The editor and publishers have met the popular taste, at the same time that they have furnished a magazine remarkable for its general purity and freedom from anything tending to lower the standard of religion and morals. We cannot always agree with Dr. Holland in his views, but he is a writer of force, and generally on the right side of the living and practical questions with which he deals. Scribner is richly laden with contributions from the most gifted writers of the day, and its engravings are numerous, and carried to the highest degree of artistic perfection. The bound volume is an ornament, as well as a most substantial and valuable addition to the library. As a picture of the literature, thought, events, and manners and opinions of the times, it possesses a permanent value, and will afford entertainment and instruction to the readers of another generation. This volume is an improvement on the preceding one, and the publishers promise that the next will be still better. Price of the bound volume, and a six months' subscription, $4.

—Appleton's Journal for May has: A Seat in the Chair of Destiny; The Golden Mesh; The Pnnilon and Influence of Women in Ancient Athens; A Commedy of Superstition; On the Choice of Books; The Seamy Side—A Novel; Apples—A Commedy; A Night With the Sardines; Editor's Table; Books of the Day. New York: D. Appleton & Co., publishers. Yearly subscription, $3.

—Sunday Afternoon for May has: The Room's Width; The Kingdom of Heaven; Six Stories in One; The King's Advent; The Humanity of Positivism; The Mormons, 2; Women's Experience in Economy; The Present Standing of Political Economy; An Excellent Mathematician; Scholar and Doctor; A Curious Phenomenon of the Plains; A Night on the Bitter Lake; and other articles.

—The Sunday School Magazine, Visitor and Little People for May are fresh and fragrant as a spring morning. The Magazine, besides the expository notes on the lessons, and other valuable editorial matter has the following contributed articles: The Suffering Saviour, by Prof. A. M. Shipp, D. D.; Office of the Holy Spirit, by Thomas O. Summers, D. D., LL. D.; The Family Nursery, by J. H. Brunner, D. D.

—We have missed the visits of Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine for several months past. We are obliged to the publisher for back numbers, and for the number for May, which have just come to hand. Each number is a volume, and filled with reading matter which is calculated to entertain and instruct. For family reading, and such as is calculated to interest young and old, we know of no better publication. The contents are largely religious and in every respect pure and wholesome. There is a sermon by Dr. Deems in every number, which adds greatly to the value of the Magazine. Edited by Dr. Deems. Frank Leslie's Publishing House, New York. Price, $3 per annum.

—Welcome Songs, for Sabbath-Schools, No. 1, edited by R. S. Thain, is a small book of thirty-two pages, containing selections of songs with music. The selections are generally good. Published by the Advocate Publishing House, St. Louis, Logan D. Dameron, manager. Price, seventy-five cents per dozen, or $5 per one hundred.

—Wide Awake for May is as sweet and fresh as the most blooming and sunny May day. Among the many good things, we mention: Boston Whittling School; A Spring Ocelli; Mexican Water Carriers; The Lazy Pink Hen; Seeing the World; Our American Artists; Master Tony's Experiments; The Dancing Cow; The Story of English Literature for Young People, II.; Dr. Johnson and His Times.

—Lippincott's Magazine for May has: Why Do We Like Paris? Illustrated; From Norway to York, Illustrated; Through Winding Ways; The Trampin Four Centuries; Beach Birds, Illustrated; Cardinal Richelieu as a Dramatist and Stage Manager, and other articles.

—The North American Review for May has: 1. Our Free Ice Laws—Secretary George W. McCrary. 2. Campaign Notes in Turkey, 1877-78—Lieut. F. V. Greene. 3. Original Sin—Calvinism in America, part 2. 4. Absent Friends—Rev. O. B. Frothingham. 5. A Peace Speech—Lloyd S. Bryce. 6. Notes on Recent Progress in Applied Science—President Morton. 7. Law and Design in Nature—Prof. Simon Newcomb. Present Noah Porter, Rev. Joseph Cook, James Freeman Clarke, D. D., President James McCosh.

—St. Nicholas for May is splendidly illustrated. Here are the titles of some of the articles: The King of May and Queen; The Arithmetic of Ginger Bread; The Land of the Powder Players; The Boy Astronomer at the Observatory; Tribulations and Adventures of Cyclopes and the Mosstail; The Big Bear of Wallowtola; Rudolph Dan Patch Living Stone; A Jolly Fellowship.

—Scribner's Monthly for May has: Portraits of Oliver Wendell Holmes; The New Museum in Rome, illustrated; The Pastoral Bees, illustrated; A Odds With Life; A Story of the Latin Quarter; A Day on the Docks, Illustrated; Village Lawns; Planting Illustrated; Brazil I.; The Metropolis of the Amazon, Illustrated; A Pilgrimage to Vallombrosa; The Frozen Fields; Round Henry Dons; Oliver Wendell Holmes, Illustrated; Three Days in Sidney, and other articles.

—The Way of Holiness for April is a very instructive and profitable number. Published by Rev. William Baker, Chattanooga, Tenn. Price, $1 25 per year.

—Boston University Year Book, vol. 6, has been received.

THE AIR of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To those disposed to economize this popular hotel offers an opportunity seldom found at so thoroughly a first class house, having reduced its rates to $3 and $3 50 per day.

W. C. SHEPARD & Co. sell chamber sets, white stone, $4; fancy, $5; dinner sets white stone, 124 semi-china, $15 and $18; china, 124 pieces, $25.

SAFES.—Diebold Safes give perfect satisfaction. A. Roy, 27 Canal street, is the agent.

SPRING STYLES.—It will pay the ladies to read the advertisement of D. P. Perry, 58 Canal street. Madame Demorest's patterns on exhibition.

DRY GOODS.—The indomitable energy, enterprise and liberal prices of E. H. Adams & Bro. have attracted a large amount of custom, and their establishment does steadily crowd to spite of depression in business. See advertisement.

ERRORS OF ROMANISM.—J. H. Chambers, St. Louis, Mo., whose card will be seen elsewhere, wants a few more first-class men to act as agents for the above.

PERSONS troubled with Bright's disease, liver and bladder disease drop your eye on Dr. S. H. P. Lee's advertisement, which appears on the seventh page, and see what he says.

FURNITURE FOR LODGES AND CHURCHES.—Call in receipt of a beautifully illustrated catalogue and price list of office chairs and settees from Messrs. Gardner & Co., 1-3 Canal street, New York. This firm stands high in the city as honorable merchants. Lodges and churches should communicate with this house before purchasing elsewhere.

TO TRAVELERS.—Travelers contemplating leaving the city for the summer will save money by purchasing their railroad tickets from F. E. Guedry, 31 St. Charles street. Look at his figures. This gentleman is thoroughly reliable.

EXCURSION ROUTE OF STEAMERS. The Anchor Line is composed of the finest and fastest boats upon the Mississippi river, and offers superior accommodations to travelers. Steamers leave regularly for St. Louis, connecting there with the principal railroads running North, East and West. Baggage and passengers are transferred from the boat free of charge. We recommend this line to our readers who may be thinking of traveling, as it is the most comfortable and pleasant route, and the leaving for the Mound City. Call at the office of Capt. Wood, 1 Common street, and make his acquaintance, and you will meet with a pleasant and agreeable gentleman, who will impart any information on the subject.

A GOOD ACCOUNT.—To sum it up, six long years of bed ridden sickness and suffering, costing $200 per year, total, $1,200—all of which was supplied by three bottles of Hop Bitters taken by my wife, who has done her own housework for a year since without the loss of a day, and I want everybody to know it, for their benefit.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

A FACT BEYOND DISPUTE.

A torpid liver lowers vitality and makes the system an easy prey to chills, fevers, dyspepsia and all forms of bilious disease. Malaria's deadly influence is counteracted by the use of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which is a medicine of the highest value in all cases of debility, dyspepsia, constipation, kidney complaints, nervousness, rheumatism, and general debility. Before exposure to malarious influences, or the first symptoms of disease appear, it should be taken. For sale by druggists and dealers generally.

Farm, Garden and Household.

GARDEN FERTILIZERS.—If I had the choice of one fertilizer only I should select genuine guano; and if my garden soil were heavy I should require nothing to mix with it; but if light and hot in its nature I should covet some common salt. Guano alone, or mixed with one-third of salt for dry soils, and spread over the surface during damp weather at the rate of, say, two ounces per square yard, will increase the value of any crop to which it is applied. To destroy slugs, half the quantity or less in dry weather, will be found highly beneficial. Superphosphate of lime is a safe and valuable fertilizer, and is suitable for sprinkling among small seedling crops of flowers and vegetables which guano might injure. These two mixed together are excellent for potatoes, being quick in the action and lasting in their effects. But the most prompt of all the fertilizers is nitrate of soda. It will, if spread at the rate of two hundred pounds per acre, change the appearance of a grass or a wheat crop in a few days, as it will that of any garden crop, especially of the brassica family. It is a valuable stimulant for early cabbages and cauliflower, also for celery, lettuce, etc.; half an ounce, or less to the square yard is sufficient for these crops. Soot is a real gardener's friend, if he is not afraid of using it. It consists of finely divided charcoal, and carrying salts of ammonia. It must not be mixed with quick lime, or those salts will be decomposed, but it may be mixed with a small quantity of salt with advantage for dry soils. I know of no crops to which a liberal dressing is applied, that are not benefited thereby. It is excellent for onions. Salt alone is very useful for dry soils on account of its great affinity for moisture. The soil of asparagus beds, where it has been used freely, are often cool and moist in summer when the surrounding ground is hot and dry even dusty. If a gardener has at his command any or all of the fertilizers named, and uses them judiciously, he will not only be able to increase the productiveness of the garden in his charge, but will not require such large supplies of stable manure as would otherwise be necessary to sustain the fertility of heavily-cropped ground. An important advantage in the use of guano and soot is their value for making liquid manure of the best quality.—Exchange.

HOUSEKEEPING HINTS.—Soaking salt fish in sour milk will freshen them speedily. Salt curdles new milk; hence, in preparing milk porridge, gravies, etc., the salt should not be added until the dish is prepared. Clear, boiling water will remove tea stains and many fruit stains. Pour the water through the stain, and thus prevent it from spreading over the fabric. The ripe tomato will remove ink and other stains from white cloth, also from the hands. That a tea-spoonful of turpentine boiled with your white clothes will aid the whitening process. That boiled starch is much improved by the addition of a little sperm, or a little salt, or both, or a little gum arabic dissolved. That beeswax and salt will make your flatirons as clean and smooth as glass. Tie a lump of wax in a rag, and keep it for that purpose. When the irons are hot rub them first with the wax rag, then scour with a piece of cloth sprinkled with salt. That kerosene will soften boots or shoes which have been hardened by water, and render them as pliable as new.—Montreal Star.

SNOW DRIFT CAKE.—Two cups powdered sugar, one heaping cup prepared flour, ten eggs—the whites only, whipped stiff; juice of one lemon and a half. Be grated peel, a little salt. Whip the eggs well, beat in the sugar, lemon, salt and finally the flour. Stir an very lightly and quickly and bake at once in two loaves, or in square cards. It is a beautiful and delicious cake when fresh. It is very nice, baked as a jelly-cake and spread with this: Icing.—Whites of three eggs, one heaping cup of powdered sugar, juice of one orange and half the peel; juice of half a lemon. Whip to a good froth and put between the layers, adding more sugar for the frosting on the top.

CITRON CAKE.—Six eggs, beaten light and the yolks strained; two cups of sugar, three cups of flour, one cup of butter, two and one-half cups prepared flour, or enough to make pound cake batter. With some brands you may need three cups; one-half pound citron cut in thin shreds; juice of an orange and one teaspoonful grated peel. Cream, butter and sugar; add the yolks, the whites and flour by turns, the orange and lastly, the citron, dredged with flour. Beat all up hard, and bake in two loaves.

GREEN TOMATO PICKLE.—One gallon sliced tomatoes, four large onions chopped fine. Salt them and let them stand over night. In the morning drain thoroughly and add six green peppers without seeds, chopped fine, one pint grated horseradish, one half pint mustard seed, one tablespoonful ground allspice, one tablespoonful black pepper, two tablespoonfuls cloves, three tablespoonfuls ground mustard. Mix well, put in a jar and cover with three pints boiling vinegar, covering closely.

SEALING WAX.—To four pounds resin and one pound beeswax and one pint of linseed oil put in an iron pot, heat slowly and mix well. Pour out into cold water and pull by hand until it assumes a light color, work into sticks and put into a cool place till wanted. In pulling on the hands, work the wax until soft and press it tightly around the graft and over the cracks. If the day be warm it is sometimes better to occasionally moisten the hands with cold water.

NICE GLOSSY STARCH.—To three cups water take three rounded teaspoonfuls of starch, a pinch of salt and one teaspoonful of powdered borax. Dissolve your borax in part of the water then add starch and salt, dip your collars, cuffs and bosoms into the starch. Your irons must be good; rub them with beeswax, and I promise you a stiff, glossy surface with never a failure.

TUTTI FRUTTI.—A writer in the Rural New Yorker gives the following recipe: Three quarters pound flour of sulphur; three quarters ounce salve of the best kind; two drachms of white precipitate; two drachms of gum guiac; one tablespoonful of hog's lard, or sufficient to make a salve by rubbing it together.

PLUM CAKE.—One cup sugar, one and one half cups flour, one half cup of butter, one-half cup of sour milk or buttermilk, three eggs, two tablespoonfuls cream, with sugar to make as thick as cream. Put between and on top.

IN 1637 the rage for tulips among the Dutch was so great that the ordinary industry of the country was neglected, and the whole people rushed into the production of tulips. As this naturally increased prices, increased with it until at last merchants were known to have given 5,000 florins for 100 bulbs of forty tulips. At this time each species was sold by weight.

A company with a capital stock of $1,000,000 has been organized in California for the purpose of making wine, cognac, sugar and oil, claiming that ten per cent of sugar can be obtained from the grape and twenty-five per cent of oil from the seed, suitable for table use, besides extracting a color from the rind and pulp.

The nutrient property in many of our most delicious fruits is less than one per cent, and yet the most perfect health and strength may be maintained upon a bodily ration of brown bread and fruit.—World of Science.

Corner of Annunciation.

The undersigned is the sole proprietor of the Hodges Patent Reliable Whip Carpet-Beating machine for cleaning Carpets and Matting for Dwellings, Churches, Public Buildings, Hotels, Steamboats, etc.

This the Boston Patent Beater has been in successful operation for the past fifteen years in all the principal cities in the United States, and has a world-renowned reputation as a carpet-cleaning machine.

This machine consists of a bed of endless straps, over which the carpets pass, and are beaten by a number of endless rebound whips, restoring the color and removing all dust, dirt, vermin and moths, without the slightest injury to the finest fabric.

RENOVATING.

By the renovating process all Grease, Ink, Coal Smoke, Soot, and stains of every description, are extracted from the carpets, restoring their original brightness of color. The quality of the restorative is not injurious to the most delicate tint or fabric, and is an actual preventive against moth; send a Brussels or velvet rug, which will be cleaned gratis as a sample.

Cash and Monthly Furniture, Plush and Damask Lambrequins, Window Shades, Damask Curtains, Blankets, Druggets, Piano and Table Covers, renovated to look like new.

Carpets taken up and relaid by first-class workmen. No charge for taking up, packing or storing of Carpets.

Our rooms being first-class of access, all and especially ladies are respectfully invited to call and see the machinery in operation and be convinced that this is the only way to have your Carpets thoroughly renovated from the dust, vermin and moths, for it cannot be done by hand beating. Every Carpet is cleaned under the personal supervision of the proprietors and satisfaction in every respect guaranteed.

On receipt of orders we will send one of our covered wagons for and return your Carpets free of charge to any part of the City. All orders by mail or telegraph at the office or works will be promptly attended to.

Beating Carpets, 5 cents per yard.

Scientific.

—Experiments are often made and conclusions drawn therefrom which experiments and observations subsequently made seem to disprove. Science does not profit much by these observations, generally seeming satisfied that "there is nothing in them." Just now the Royal Horticultural Society of Tuscany has issued in its "Bulletin" an account of some experiments by Signor Cazzuola, of Pisa, on old seeds. He finds that seeds, if they retain sufficient vitality to grow at all, will, in the case of monœcious plants, cucumbers and melons, especially, produce more female flowers on a plant the longer the seed has been kept. One plant of the common gourd (Cucurbito Pepo) had but one female flower and forty seven male flowers in the case of a plant from the seed of last year. He sums up his conclusions by proposing, as a general principle in plant life, that there exists a latent vitality in the embryo, which, by being prolonged, weakens the embryo, and makes the plant it produces more fruitful. It is not easy to trace the working of any such "principle" to any such result; and yet there is a general belief among gardeners in Europe, in which quarter of the globe cucumbers and melons are subjects for great skill, that old seeds of these species do produce more fruitful plants than fresh seed. On the other hand, at a meeting of the Central Horticultural Society of France, after Cazzuola's experiments had been noticed by the celebrated Ducharte, experiments by one M. Lazzer were brought up, with results just opposite to those from Pisa. At least no difference was found between the productiveness of old and of new seeds. Now it is quite likely that M. Cazzuola will look with suspicion on M. Lazzer's facts, and the latter will have as poor opinion of the other's; but it would be far better for science if in such cases the observers would try to see why such different results appeared. In regard to the Lady Slipper, or "Balsam," in which double flowers are so preferable to single ones, the older the seed the more double the flowers it is believed, will be; and, as a double flower is the opposite of a fertile or single one, the fact, if it be one, opposes the Italian conclusions. On the other hand, the first flowers which bloom in the common Ten-Weeks Stock are more likely to produce double or barren flowering plants than the secondary flowers; and this is the reverse of the Balsam experience. It is probable science has much to discover about these things yet.—Independent.

—The tenacity of metals, or their power to resist a pull in the direction of their length, is found to exhibit the simple fact that every metal, when thus drawn out as wire, is much more capable of resisting this pull than in any other form, as by the drawing process the fibers of the metal are closely and tightly, so to speak, interwoven. In the form of wire, then, the metals stand in the following order, namely: Steel, iron, copper, platinum, silver, gold, zinc, tin, lead. Cast iron varies from coarse grained bars, which require only 20,400 lbs. to pull one square inch asunder, to some German cast iron, which requires 68,295 lbs.

—By concentrating the electricity from a 13 horse power machine into the space of half an inch by inclosing carbon points in a block of lime, Mr. Edison claims to have produced the highest temperature ever reached by artificial means. When dropped into the flame pieces of iridium, one of the most refractory of metals, volatilized immediately. A small screwdriver passed across the flame would be cut in two, the part touched by the heat melting instantly. Even parts of the lime crucible fused under the intense heat.

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron—all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and life-sustaining elements. It is the purest, safest, and in every way the most effectual alterative medicine known or available to the public. The sciences of medicine and chemistry have never produced so valuable a remedy, nor one so potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula, and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Face-grubs, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ringworm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which remaining in the blood, and cause derangement and decay. It stimulates and enlivens the vital functions. It promotes energy and strength. It restores and preserves health. It infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease which lurks from impurity of the blood need despair, who will give AYER'S SARSAPARILLA a fair trial. Remember, the earlier the trial, the speedier the cure.

Its recipe has been furnished to physicians everywhere, and they recognize its superior qualities, and administer it in their practice.

For thirty forty years AYER'S SARSAPARILLA has been widely used, and it now possesses the confidence of millions of people who have experienced benefits from its marvellous curative virtues.

EDUCATIONAL.

Centenary Institute,

AN institution of learning, located at Summerfield, Alabama, was founded by the Alabama Conference and commenced operations in 1842, and has been in successful operation ever since. The Institute has two departments, male and female.

The buildings are of brick, large and elegant, sufficient to accommodate two hundred and fifty pupils. This is to notify all concerned that the Trustees intend, at their next annual meeting, June 23, to lease the building for five years to any person or persons competent to run the institution in the interest of a church school.

Persons desiring further information will correspond with me at Summerfield, Ala.

The Loquet-LeRoy Institute

AND KINDERGARDEN DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, 280 Camp Street.—This institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses MOISE, Cecelia W. Sallie L., and Corinne, the latter relicts of the late R. H. Rhett, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successors of Mme Loquet-LeRoy, whose good will and right to conduct the School under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No change whatever in the conduct and management of the School. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to the Institution, and that of their friends, and the public generally, promising strict devotion to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge.

C. W. MOISE, Principal.

REFERRING TO THE ABOVE MADAME LOQUET-LEROY announces to her friends and former patrons the entire confidence she has in her successors, being in every way suited to the high trust they have assumed. She bespeaks for them a continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded her, and that she will still be actively connected with the Institution. For terms and particulars apply to the principal.

AHIWASSEE COLLEGE,

(Postoffice the Same)
MONROE COUNTY, EAST TENNESSEE.

PARENTS desiring to find a safe and healthy location for their sons during the summer season would do well to patronize the above-named institution under the patronage of the Holston Annual Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The spring term closes May 22, and Fall session begins

FIRST MONDAY IN AUGUST, 1879.

Students arriving before the latter date will be beyond the reach of epidemics, and will thereby secure some months of profitable study before Colleges usually open in less favored localities.

REMEDY FOR HARD TIMES.—Stop spending so much on fine clothes, rich food and style. Buy good, healthy food, cheaper and better clothing; get more real and substantial things of life every way, and especially stop the foolish habit of running after expensive and quack doctors or using so much of the vile burning medicine that does you only harm, and makes the proprietors rich but put your trust in the greatest of all simple, pure remedies, Hop Bitters, that cures always at a trifling cost, and you will see better times and good health. Try it once. Read of it in another column.

The consumption of beer in the whole German Empire last year was 841,058,765 gallons, or nearly twenty gallons per month of population. The importations amounted to 3,333,814 gallons and the exports to 998,266 gallons.

LAME BACK. WEAK BACK.

BENSON'S CAPCINE

POROUS PLASTER.

Overwhelming evidence of their superiority over all other plasters. It is everywhere recommended by physicians, druggists and the press.

The manufacturers are proud to spread amidst and obtain special mention for their plasters at the Centennial Exposition, and at the Paris Exposition 1878.

Their great merit lies in the fact that they are the only plasters which relieve pain at once.

Every one suffering from Rheumatism, Lame Back, or Weak Back, Cold on the Chest, Coughs, or any local pain or ache should use Benson's Capcine Porous Plaster and be relieved at once. Price 25 cts. Sold by all druggists.

SUFFERINGS OF THE PEOPLE.—Harrowing pictures of the sufferings of the Egyptian peasantry have lately been placed before the public. They have been described as dying of famine, or at least on the brink of death from starvation. If there is some exaggeration in these pictures, there can be no doubt that in some parts of Egypt there has been in the last few months terrible distress. This distress is mainly due to extraordinary physical calamities. Egypt has suffered in the same way, only happily to a far less extent, as that in which Madras suffered. First came a year when there was too little water in the Nile, and the country suffered from drouth. Then came a year when there was too much water. The Nile, in some places, burst its barriers, and the land was inundated. The Egyptian government could no more help these things than the Indian government could help the rain not falling in Madras. In spite of the exertions of the Indian government, the natives died by thousands in Madras; and if the Egyptian government has not made as great exertions to relieve the distress as were made in India the general result has been much less disastrous.

Gideon Cook, a Calvinist Baptist preacher, well known a quarter of a century ago, was a man very eccentric in speech even to his last earthly moments. A few hours previous to his death his brother came to his bedside, and inquired: "D' you think you are dying, Gideon?" And the reply, sharp and quick, came: "D' n't know—can't tell—never died yet!"

A dispute described as "tremendous" is raging in Madras over a hair from the beard of the Prophet Mahomet. The relic is enclosed in a case guarded by an official, who receives a pension from the government, and six fanatical Mussulmans are disputing for its possession. The High Court of Madras have been appealed to.

TUTT'S PILLS.

SYMPTOMS OF A

TORPID LIVER.

Loss of Appetite, Bowels Costive, Pain in the Head with a dull sensation in the back part, Pain under the shoulder-blade, Fulness after eating, with a disinclination to exertion of body or mind, Irritability of temper, Low Spirits, with a feeling of having neglected some duty, Weariness, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the Eyes, Yellow Skin, Headache, generally over the right eye, Restlessness with fitful dreams, Highly colored Urine.

IF THESE WARNINGS ARE UNHEEDED SERIOUS DISEASES WILL SOON BE DEVELOPED.

TUTT'S PILLS

are especially adapted to such cases, a single dose of them does a change of feeling as to astonish the sufferer.

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS:

DR. TUTT: Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.

REV. R. T. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

The first effect of TUTT'S PILLS is to Increase the Appetite, and cause the body to Take on Flesh, thus the system is nourished, and by their Tonic Action on the Digestive Organs, Regular Stools are produced.

DR. J. F. HAYWOOD OF NEW YORK, SAYS:

Few diseases exist that cannot be relieved by restoring the liver to healthy action, and for this purpose no remedy has ever been unveiled that has so happy an effect as TUTT'S PILLS.

Religious Notices.

THE Annual Camp-meeting, at Williams' Camp Ground will commence on Thursday night before the fifth Sunday in June. This Camp Ground is situated on the Pensacola Railroad, thirty-four miles from Pensacola.

Ample arrangements are made for visitors, especially ministers. All are cordially invited.

The meeting will be conducted on the self-sustaining plan.

W. L. WILLIAMS, President.

W. W. RICHARDS, Secretary. 17

THE Delhi District Sunday-School Convention will be held at Delhi, on Wednesday after the 2d Sunday in May.

The members of the convention are the pastors of the various works in the district, together with the superintendents and teachers of each Sunday-school.

If any Sunday-school finds it cannot be represented by superintendent or others, it will please send in reports of its numbers and condition.

The District Conference will meet immediately after the adjournment of the convention, at the same place.

Recording stewards will see that the Quarterly Conference records are brought up to the District Conference.

The District Steward's Meeting will be held on Saturday at four o'clock P. M.

J. E. CRAIG, P. E.

It is well known that it was in fishing for trout in Marshfield that Webster composed the famous passage on the surviving veterans of the battle for his Bunker Hill address. "He would pull out a lusty specimen," says Starr King, "shouting: 'Venerable men, you have come down to us from a former generation. Heaven has bounteously lengthened out your lives that you might behold this joyous day.' He would unhook them into his basket, declaiming: 'You are gathered to your fathers, and live only to your country in her grateful remembrance, and your own bright example.' In his boat, fishing for a cod, he composed or rehearsed the passage in it on Lafayette; when he booked a very large cod, and as he pulled his nose above water, he exclaimed: 'Welcome! all hail! and thrice welcome, citizen of two hemispheres!'"

THE NECESSITY OF SLEEP.—During every moment of consciousness the brain is in activity. The peculiar process of celebration, whatever that may consist of, is taking place; thought after thought comes forth; nor can we help it. It is only when the peculiar connection or chain of connection of one brain cell with another is broken and consciousness fades away into the dreamless land of perfect sleep, that the brain is at rest. In this state it recuperates its exhausted energy and power, and stores them up for future need. The period of wakefulness is one of constant wear. Every thought is generated at the expense of brain cells, which can be fully replaced only by periods of properly regulated repose. If, therefore, these are not secured by sleep if the brain, through over-stimulation, is not left to recuperate, its energy becomes exhausted; debility, disease, and finally disintegration supervene.

"Martha, does thee love me?" asked a Quaker youth of one at whose shrine his heart's holiest feelings had been offered up. "Why, Seth," answered she, "we are commanded to love one another, are we not?" "Ah, Martha, but does thee regard me with the feeling the world calls love?" "I hardly know what to tell thee, Seth. I have greatly feared that my heart is an erring one. I have tried to bestow my love on all; but I may have sometimes thought, perhaps that thee was getting rather more than thy share."

Thou hast a double nature. Choose between the worse and the better that is within thee. Thou hast it in thy power to become the slave of passion, the slave of luxury, the slave of sensual power, the slave of corruption. Thou hast it in thy power to become the free master of thyself, to become the everlasting benefactor of thy country, and the unfailing champion of thy God.—Dean Stanley.

A London newspaper furnishes the curious statement that 1,885 out of 5,241 shares of a new brewery company in Sheffield are held by English clergymen. But it does not tell among how few clergymen the 1,885 shares are distributed.

THE PIANOS I KEEP.

Every Piano sold by me has stood the test of time—from ten to fifty years. A first class house like mine cannot experiment at the expense of its patrons with untried or unreliable instruments. Being thoroughly familiar with the construction of a Piano, I am positive of their durability and reliability. I sell my Pianos with the understanding that if in ten or more years a defect in their construction, under fair usage should show itself,

The Money Paid will be Cheerfully Refunded.

THE CHICKERING PIANOS,

Have been before the public for fifty-four years, and their reputation extends over the whole world. A six octave Piano of this make forty-seven years old and perfect in every respect can be inspected in my store. Their superiority over all others is now universally acknowledged.

THE MATHUSHEK PIANOS,

Constructed on entirely new and patented principles which insure their retaining their original brilliancy of tone for a lifetime, and their standing longer in tune than any other Piano. Three excellent Pianos have been sold here during the last ten years and not the least defect has ever occurred. Their new Uprights are real models of perfection.

THE HALE PIANOS

Are good, reliable and well made Pianos, of excellent tone, and with elastic touch. There are over 1000 of them in this city, and not a defective or worn out one among them.

MY PRICES are well known to be the lowest, as I prefer to sell ten pianos at a small profit than one at a large. My terms are liberal, selling new Pianos on monthly payments of $5, and second hand ones at $3. Fifty second hand Pianos in perfect order, from $50 to $175. New Pianos from $225 upwards.

MASON & HAMLIN AND ESTEY ORGANS,

The best instruments of the kind made, from $50 upwards. Direct importation of

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, STRINGS AND MUSIC.

The trade and profession supplied at lowest prices.

I request the patronage of the public. No trouble to answer your letters, and I will be pleased to hear from all.

HOLD FAST TO THY IDEAL.

FROM THE GERMAN OF ANNA KLIEBURG.

Hold fast, O youth thy heavenly ideal,
While ills swell wildly around thee plays,
Even though the path be rough and anguish real,
Its dream will lend a light to darkest days.
How sweet it is to paint in colors glowing
The hero's life, until the heart is cheered,
Which feels itself like its ideal growing
In faith's auroral light so bright and weird!

Time is not lost in hoping or in dreaming,
If faith wakes in those dreams a world to view,
Above this vale of tears in splendor beaming;
And show us nearer to it than we knew.
Then if there's winter in the heart, and aching
Beneath the snow, all desolate it lies,
Those snows will sooner melt if hope awaking
Mount after her ideal to the skies.

Does life's sea roar? Are waves around thee tossing?
Fear not! True happiness is not a dream!
Its beams of light, the darkest billows crossing,
Are angel guides to where its glories gleam.
Beneath the waves the pearls above the beauty
That scorns false Fortune's smile nor fears the gloom,
But calmly shining on the path of duty,
Changes our dreams to sunlight o'er the tomb.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—The army appropriation bill was returned to the House to-day without the presidential signature, accompanied by a message stating at length the reasons for the veto. The President says: If the bill contained no other provisions than those for support of the army it would receive his prompt approval, but it includes further legislation and involves a question of the gravest character. He recites the statute now in force, embodied in sections 2002 and 5528 of the Revised Statutes, and says the adoption of the proposed amendment may be considered in two aspects:

1. As it affects the United States Government to use the military force to keep the peace at elections.

2. As it affects the right of government by civil authority to protect elections from violence and fraud. He then quotes and calls attention to sections 2002, 5529, 5530, 5531 and 5532 Revised Statutes, section fifteen army appropriation bill, passed January 18 1878, together with remarks upon the purpose and effect of the latter, as stated in the speeches of Senators and Representatives who supported it. From these laws he says it appears there can be no military interference with elections, and that consequently there is no necessity for the enactment of section six of this bill. He then calls attention to the existing laws for the prevention of discriminations on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude, and to prevent frauds, violence and intimidation at Federal elections, and says: These laws it is the duty of the Executive Department of the government to enforce.

GALVESTON, April 29.—A special to the Galveston News from Griffin, Texas, says: Parties from the neighborhood of the Pecos River report that the Kiowas are killing herders and driving off stock. Mr. Beleher and one of his men were killed Saturday; another on the twenty-third. Fears of general massacre are entertained. The Indians number sixty.

MEMPHIS, April 29.—A special to the Avalanche from Durant, Miss., says: A fire last night destroyed ten buildings, as follows: The Prather House, loss $6 000, uninsured; H. P. Davis, loss $1,000, insurance $500; A. & W. Schild, loss $18,000, insurance $12,000; J. S. Weatherly, express agent, loss $1 500, insurance $600; D. J. Lowenstein, loss $1 000, insurance $500; W. W. Mayfield, loss $1 500 uninsured; J. K. Coffey, loss $9,000, insurance $5,000. The entire south half of the town was burned, and it was only by a great effort that the stores north of the Prather House were saved. The fire originated in D. Lowenstein's restaurant.

EUFAULA, ALA., April 29.—Hon. Eli Shorter, a prominent member of the Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth Congress, and an eminent lawyer and politician, died this morning of Bright's disease, aged fifty-six.

BOSTON, April 30.—The civil damages bill passed by the Legislature—which permits the recovery of damages resulting from the sale of liquor from the owners of the building wherein the liquor was sold—was signed by Gov. Talbot this afternoon.

NASHVILLE, TENN., April 30.—The committee appointed by the governor to go to New York to secure the acceptance by the Tennessee bondholders of the fifty cents four per cent. interest compromise proposed by the Legislature, made a report to the governor to-day, announcing that two-thirds of the State's creditors will accept the proposition. It is understood that Gov. Marks will issue a proclamation to-morrow calling an election of the people to ratify the proposition.

PHILADELPHIA, May 1.—Mrs. Sarah J. B. Hale, who for half a century was editoress of Godey's Lady's Book, died last evening in this city.

MONTGOMERY, May 1.—The Montgomery and Eufaula Railroad was sold to-day for the benefit of its bondholders by order of the United States Court. The road is eighty miles long and was bought by William M. Wadleigh. The principal competitor was the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, which owns a large amount of the bonds. The price paid in cash was $2 120,000.

ATLANTA, May 2.—The Convention of American Medical Colleges met here to-day; Dr. Gross, of Philadelphia, President; Dr. Loring, of Columbus, Ohio, Secretary. Discussion on the higher education of students engaged the body all day. Resolutions fixing three courses of lectures for three separate years were passed, and the convention adjourned sine die.

The Association of American Medical Colleges meets to-morrow.

PHILADELPHIA, May 2.—A meeting was held to-day to promote colored immigration from the South. The names of several leading citizens appear as indorsers of the project.

ST. LOUIS, May 3.—A dispatch from Atchison, Kansas, says over three hundred colored refugees from the South, landed here to-day, in a generally destitute condition. There being no vacant building in the city great difficulty was experienced in getting them under a shelter, but they were finally housed in colored churches.

It is questionable whether many of them can be furnished with employment as the demand for unskilled labor is very limited in this State. Their arrival was entirely unexpected, as they were originally destined for Leavenworth, but the authorities of that city paid their fare to this point and sent them on. Our citizens have provided for their temporary wants, but great suffering must result if this influx of totally destitute people does not soon stop.

ATLANTA, May 3.—The Association of American Medical Colleges met here to-day. Dr. Davis, of Chicago, is chairman. Twenty colleges are represented. Dartmouth and St Joseph colleges withdrew. Some amendments to the by-laws were passed and they adjourned to Monday, when the national board of health will also meet here.

VICKSBURG, May 5.—The Mississippi Valley Labor Convention was opened this afternoon at Southern Concert Garden, the Opera House, in which it was intended to hold the convention, being too small. Fully four hundred delegates present. Every county and parish on the Mississippi River between Helena, Ark., and New Orleans represented.

President—Gen. W. R. Miles, of Holmes county, Miss. Vice Presidents—T. F. Cassell, of Memphis, Tenn.; James Hill, of Jackson, Miss.; H. B. Robinson, of Helena, Ark.; David Young, of Concordia, La. All the Vice Presidents are colored. Secretary—A. W. Crandall, of Madison parish, La.

Among the resolutions referred was the following:

Resolved, That this convention being called, has assembled to take into consideration the material interests of the people, irrespective of party or color. No resolution of a political character shall be entertained by the Chair, and debate on such questions shall be considered out of order. The spirit of the convention towards the close was most harmonious. Great benefits are expected therefrom. There seems a general feeling among both colored and white delegates to make concessions.

The report of the Committee on Resolutions will, it is thought, favor a reduction in the rent of land and less exorbitant prices for the necessaries of life, and a more general recognition of the rights of the colored man. The general sentiment among delegates favors such resolutions.

STRATFORD, May 5.—This morning the whole town was shaken up as if by a shock of an earthquake. Windows were blown in, and even sidewalks, upon which people were walking, were shaken so as to cause pedestrians to fall. The cause was soon made apparent. A car loaded with dynamite had exploded at the Grand Trunk freight yard. The wreck made by the explosion beggars description.

MEMPHIS, May 5.—Advices by the steamer Halliday, which arrived here last night, is to the effect that several hundred negroes have armed themselves, near Carolina and Scota Landings, Mississippi. Their object is stated to be to seize the first passing steamer that may land within their jurisdiction and compel the vessel to convey them to Kansas.

FOREIGN.

TIRNOVA, April 29.—The Bulgarian Assembly of Notables unanimously elected Prince Alexander, of Battenburg, to the throne of Bulgaria, with the title of Alexander the First.

MADRID April 29.—The death of Princess Christina, (second child and second daughter of Duke de Montpensier,) sister of the late Queen Mercedes, and cousin of the present King of Spain, occurred in Seville at three o'clock yesterday afternoon.

LONDON, April 29.—A dispatch from Cape Town, dated April 8, by way of Madeira, says: Col. Pearson and the Ekowe garrison reached Tugela yesterday. Lord Chelmsford, commander-in-chief of the British forces, and his staff, are on their way to Durban. It is stated that the Zulus now occupy Ekowe, but that King Cetewayo himself has retired beyond the Black Umvolosi River.

LONDON, April 30.—A dispatch to the News from Cape Town, dated the eighth instant, says: A strong British force will be dispatched from Tugela for Cetewayo's Kraal, in a fortnight. It is stated from Pretoria that four thousand Boers have assembled near that place, and that hostilities between them and the British may arise at any moment. They seem anxious to avoid firing the first shot.

A dispatch to the Standard from Cape Town, April 8, says: The Zulus appear to have recovered very rapidly from their defeat at Gingelovu, as large numbers are reported in the neighborhood of Ekowe. Sickness is more or less prevalent among the British forces.

LONDON, April 30.—A letter from Zanzibar announces the arrival of Henry M. Stanley, (African explorer) with M. Dutalis, the officer in command of the Belgian expedition in Africa. It is stated that Stanley will act as guide and interpreter to the Belgian exploring expedition under M. Dutalis. The plan of operations is unknown.

COLOGNE, May 1.—The Cologne Gazette's St. Petersburg letter, dated April 22, says: A universal feeling of gloom prevails. One feels he must be prepared for the worst. Rigorous police regulations are already in force respecting watching the entrance of houses. Visits and searches by night and so on are to be rendered still more stringent. After nine o'clock in the evening nobody will be at liberty to show himself in the street without a certificate upon which must be written and attested the place from which the bearer comes and to which he is going.

LONDON, May 3.—The Standard's dispatch from Berlin says: Solovieff, who attempted to assassinate the czar, declares that though he was compelled, under threat of death, to fire at the czar, he purposely missed him. Among those arrested on suspicion of nihilism, is Stasor, who was counsel for the defense in a recent trial of a nihilist. The government of Kieff has received letters threatening incendiarism and slaughter by means of dynamite and bombs.

LONDON, May 3.—The Daily News' dispatch from Mandalay states that despite the peaceful desires of the ministers of the king of Burmah, the mass of the people are in favor of war. Troops are being dispatched to the frontier in detachments of a thousand at a time.

LONDON, May 5.—The Standard's correspondent says that in consequence of the undue importance attached to Garibaldi's manifesto, the government has sent a circular to the other governments declaring it will vigorously repress any attempts to disturb the harmony existing between Italy and other nations.

The Standard's correspondent at Rome reports that the progress of Catholicism in the United States has induced the Pope to arrange a complete organization of the hierarchy and a more intimate union with Rome. New bishoprics will shortly be created, and the establishment of the Society of Jesus will be more satisfactorily organized.

LONDON, May 5.—A Times dispatch from Calcutta says: Nearly a million of pilgrims who assembled at Hurdwar Fair, have carried the cholera in various directions. Outbreaks of the disease are reported from Delhi, Wrumitsur, Rawul, Pindee and elsewhere. Some cases have occurred among European troops. It is asserted that of 80 000 persons who went to the fair from Cumaon a quarter are missing, this mortality having been caused by the police forcing them to travel desert tracks.

Intermediate Exhibition Centenary College, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: They used to call this the March Exhibition in other days, but now it is changed to Intermediate Exhibition. This change may be attributable in part to the desire of our friends—the professors—to be up with other institutions in the use of all the modern terms; but it is doubtless more especially occasioned by the change in the length of the sessions, throwing the middle of the session in February, instead of March, as formerly. To persist in calling it March Exhibition, when it takes place in February, would be as much a misnomer as is another custom of colleges, viz: that of calling the end of the session commencement. The fashion was on the side of consistency in the change of the name of the exhibition; hence the professors found it easy to change; but, in the matter of the commencement, the fashion is opposed to consistency in terms; nevertheless, it has been victorious, and the whole college world goes on, calling the end of a thing the beginning. This March or Intermediate Exhibition happened on February 19 and 20. The people about Jackson have always been very fond of attending the college exhibitions, and this one, as usual, witnessed quite a numerous and brilliant audience assembled to listen for another time to the mimick oratory, the dialogue, and the more pretentious rhetoric and eloquence of such occasions. It is rather strange that college exhibitions, so alike to each other from year to year, should so continue to interest the people. There is something about a boy with his best clothes on, with stage air, standing before an audience delivering a speech, which begets an irresistable interest. It may be because it brings so forcibly to the mind of the hearer the time when he himself was the youthful candidate for oratorical honors; it may be because so many of the audience are immediately connected with the speakers; or it may be that looking forward a little it is easy to realize that those very boys may be standing on the hustings, in the forum, or in the pulpit, doing battle in the real contests of life. There is a wonderful inspiration in a boy; out of boys men are made, and by men the destinies of the world are shaped.

The first night of this exhibition, as usual, was given to the Preparatory Department, under the control of Prof. E. D. Wall. The programme was very well selected, indeed, and did credit to the taste of the manager. In other years we have noticed some coarseness in some of the pieces and dialogues; doubtless this proceeded from a desire to cater to the taste of the masses, something uproarious and frolicsome captivates them. But, while the bill on this night was sufficiently varied with the humorous, there was nothing that grated in the least upon the finer sensibilities. A good proportion of the youths did well; some of them delivered their pieces with a good deal of dramatic effect, and some with much pathos. It is tempting to give the names of those more excellent, and to refer to some of the admirable selections but this might unduly elate the favored ones and discourage the rest. Suffice it to say that we subscribed heartily to the remark we heard, from not a few, that this was among the very best of the preparatory exhibitions of Centenary.

The second night was devoted to the addresses of the representatives of the Literary Society, and to the oration of their annual speaker, Prof. D. M. Rosh. Five young men delivered original speeches. In most, if not all, of these the manner and subject matter were alike creditable. The naturalness of manner was particularly noticeable: not unfrequently sophomoric speakers with stage air mouth out their flowing periods ore rotundo, so that the effect is either ludicrous or painful through the sympathy it excites. These young gentlemen made you feel that they were at home, and understood their work. One incident deserves special mention for the determination and pluck it evinced. A speaker had gotten well into his piece when suddenly memory failed him; in vain was head scratched, and contiguous words gone over the missing sentence would not out. "Ladies and gentlemen," he broke forth, "I am afraid I can't recall my speech." "Refer to your manuscript," suggested the president. "Unfortunately," he replied, "I left it in my room." Everybody expected him to come down, but there he stood, and, as he would begin back of the stranding place and drive forward under full headway, the intense sympathy of the audience gradually gave way to an amazed and earnest desire to have him succeed, and, when finally he did tide over, the remainder of a really good speech was delivered with such feeling and power as made him the hero of the evening.

The subject of Prof. Rush's lecture was: "Words." In listening to it a rare treat was enjoyed by the audience. One person, who has been about the college for many years, and who is no mean judge of such things, pronounced it the very best lecture ever delivered on the boards of Centenary. This is high commendation; but, when it was observed that the large and intelligent audience laughed unrestrainedly as the speaker illustrated the rant and fustian of bombastic words, or quieted into breathless sympathy as he painted the hallowing effect of kindly words, or were aroused to intense appreciation, as they contemplated the inspiring influence of brave, noble words, the praise does not seem extravagant. We believe the professor fills the chairs of mathematics and natural science, and we hear unqualified approbation of his labors, but we rather think, with all his versatility, he would be more thoroughly furnished, and find a field more congenial to his tastes, in the chair of philology.

We gathered from the remarks of the president, at the close of this profitable occasion, that the college was doing more solid work during this session than ever before. Not so many matriculates quite as last session, but, owing to only three students having left since they entered, there were more in daily attendance than at this date last year. He stated that there were nine young men preparing themselves for the ministry. This, we thought, ought very strongly to commend the college to the confidence and support of the church to which it belongs. Have we no John Hopkins or Vanderbilts south of Mason and Dixon's line? One of them could find ample room for his bounty at Centenary College, of Louisiana.

Field Notes.

MOUNT ZION, LA., April 28, 1879.

Our new church here is completed; cost, $1,500; 36x50 feet; dedicated last February. The church on this (Haynesville) circuit is in good condition. In the last month there were two newspapers started at Haynesville—the Western Protestant, edited by Rev. H. P. M. Hickerson, and the Greenback Dollar, edited by J. G. Waren. Our town is full of business; farmers are well up with their crops; plenty of rain now; our Sunday-schools are flourishing; money matters tight, but the preacher is cared for.

JOHN A. MILLER, P. C.

WAYNESBORO, MISS., April 28, 1879.

MR. EDITOR: Wayne county has sustained a serious loss recently—the destruction of the courthouse and all the records of the county for many years, by fire, by an incendiary. Waynesboro Station embraces three appointments on the Mobile and Ohio railroad—Waynesboro, Buckatunna and State Line. A good congregation at each place, of attentive and intelligent hearers. Three good Sabbath-schools on the work furnished with our literature; also two well attended and interesting prayer-meetings; an excellent board of stewards who pay up in full all that is due the pastor and presiding elder each quarter. They also collect all the Conference and missionary money assessed the work to generally more than the assessment by twenty-five per cent.

DEAR BRO. PARKER: Rev. J. E. Cobb died at the residence of Col. T. C. Standifer, in this place to-day, at ten minutes before twelve o'clock A. M. He has been delirious for several days, with intervals of rationality. He has been sick and confined to bed just forty-three days. He was constantly happy in God—never complained. His soul is at rest.

Yours in Christ,

LOUISVILLE, MISS., April 29, 1879.

Within the limits of Louisville circuit, North Mississippi Conference, there has been a great revival in the Sunday-school work. Three years ago there were one Presbyterian, one Union school and two Methodist schools of doubtful existence. Now there are two Union, one Presbyterian, one Baptist and eight Methodist Sunday-schools. "I cannot speak from personal knowledge of the others, but the Methodist schools, almost without an exception, are doing well. Doubtless the work which has built up these schools has provoked others to good works."

JOSEPH P. NEWSUM.

LAFAYETTE, ALA., April 29, 1879.

DEAR BROTHER: Two men have been preaching in Randolph county, Ala., Northern men; Strong, Congregationalist, and Bettis, Methodist Episcopal Church. The latter has created a good deal of confusion by arraying one class against another. At Rock Mills they had an open difficulty with him, and soon after valuable property was burned there; has now left this country, and writes bad things about us Southerners. The other creates no difficulties where he goes, and his praise is on the lips of all. See the difference.

J. B. STEVENSON.

SHARON, MISS., April 29, 1879.

DR. PARKER: Since the twenty-eighth of January last I have been in a low state of health—general debility and physical prostration. Preached once during February; filled all my appointments for March but one afternoon appointment; for April I have been in bed most of the time—not attempting to meet any appointments. My physician thinks the only chance for me to live is to go to Minnesota and spend several months. But, alas! that will take money, which I have not. Will some of my monied friends, who may wish me to live and preach a few years longer, send me the money to enable me to go?

H. H. MONTGOMERY.

AUBURN, ALA., April 29, 1879.

The preacher and members on Tallassee mission are working on "the long run." They have service three or four times a week. During the second quarter they added twenty or more to the membership, and on Sunday night of the quarterly meeting nine others applied for membership. The reports at the second quarterly meeting were all good. The membership is in an improving condition every way. Tallassee has a good future. "The long run is the best run."

T. E. MANOUM.

BLACK HAWK, MISS., April 30, 1879.

Delegates from nearly all the Protestant schools of Carroll county met in the Presbyterian Church, in Carrollton, Miss., April 26 for the purpose of forming a county Sunday-School Association. The Rev. H. F. Sprales (Baptist) opened the proceedings, and delivered an address of welcome. Prof. Tarrant, of Black Hawk, was elected president pro tem. Addresses of an interesting character, bearing on Sunday-school work, were delivered by Revs. J. F. Markham, A. P. Sage, Messrs. J. B. Streater, Anderson, Tarrant and others. Mr. J. B. Streater was elected permanent president, and Mr. T. H. Somerville secretary. The Friday before the fourth Sunday in April, 1880, was selected as the time, and Black Hawk the place for the next meeting.

JOSEPH S. OAKLEY.

GUNTERSVILLE, ALA., May 1, 1879.

DEAR BROTHER: My second Quarterly Conference was held April 19 and 20; had a precious love-feast; finances well up. Our Sunday-school is in excellent working order, and larger than I have seen it since my appointment here more than two years ago. We have bought a new chandelier, and planned some other refitting and repairs, which will be done soon.

Your brother,

J. W. NEWMAN.

GUNTERSVILLE, ALA., May 1, 1879.

MR. EDITOR: I received a copy of your paper and prize it highly. I will present it to my people. Please continue it, and I will send the money when I see if I can get more subscribers. The church on the Vienna circuit is improving spiritually. We are preaching and praying for a great revival. I have a large and hard work—thirteen appointments. We have eleven Sunday schools, and four more to organize. Your brother,

JOHN H. TUCKER.

GREENVILLE, ALA., May 1, 1879.

MR. EDITOR: Pensacola, Fla., has been visited by a terrible and destructive hail storm. The damage to property was heavy. The fall in the price of lumber and timber this season is very great. But, notwithstanding all this, the finances on the Pensacola district are coming up pretty well on my second round. We are having some good times; the revival fire is beginning to burn.

J. M. GOLSON.

SHUBUTA, MISS., May 2, 1879.

We have just closed a meeting here that resulted in great good to the church; there were four conversions and accessions. Bro. Champenois is having one nice new parsonage handsomely painted at his own expense. The weather is cool, yet the people are healthy and the crop prospects good.

J. M. WEEMS.

HAZLEHURST, MISS., May 2, 1879.

Second round reveals: decided improvements; an outspoken satisfaction with the progress of pastoral work; increased interest in visiting by preachers; notice of time of calling publicly gives advantage, presence of the whole family and religious conversation, quite a rally to the church of absentees produced already; many matters of interest brought to light never suspected; preachers of other denominations observing the experiment, and pleased with results; quarterly meetings profitable.

EBEN HERE AND THERE.

The following lines were suggested by a sermon preached in this city many years ago, the text of which was taken from the parable in I Kings xx. "As thy servant was busy here and there, he was gone."

While we are engrossed with the pleasures and cares of the world, the offers of Christ are disregarded.

Nearer than father's hand or mother's breast
He came; and every gracious offer pressed;
My tactless heart He pleased and almost won.
Oh, that Satan's work had then been done!
But life and being were a new delight,
And I was thrall to sense and thrall to sight
Earth in her girls of flowers, of water shine;
All things were fair and bright, and all my own:
All blessed in the eye, all's held by fervid grasp,
And wonder helpless in a withering clasp,
And spirit and pleasure rolled from every side,
And hope my loyal rose, and love my guide
And I was busy here and there, until the Man was gone.

Some wand'ring clouds the blue empyrean bore;
The breeze had grown to skin the whitecaps o'er;
Again He sought my heart—no joys of earth
He asked of Him, preferred more of Heavenly worth;
But all those clouds to glittering gems were wrought
And fish, and fowl with wizard magic fraught,
And fast the rose dew'd and hid the thorn,
And love grew with every day were born,
And Mirth and Pleasure stood the dance of life,
The historied maze, with all enchantment rife,
And gay Ambition's brilliant glamour shed,
And Pride was her queen's sovereign spread,
And Effort did, drew me with faithful kiss,
And Love gratified my soul with homeless bliss,
And I was busy here and there, and so the Man was gone.

Rude was the scene and rugged was the path,
And fierce the storms of elemental wrath;
And Toil's mighty hurricane raged beside,
And Care and Want their lashing scorpions plied,
With fondest vows to reach me dead so far
He braved my steps to guide my way to cheer,
He offered bread across the sea,
And He—the only loving soul would wish to share
Pill Chance and Destiny under me by the curse,
Stood crowded on me even with their fiercest force,
Bruised Honor lying for fate's delusive sake,
And Manhood, yielding to the glittering baubles such
And I was busy here and there, and straight the Man was gone.

As 'as the dew' for Death was everywhere,
His tread, his touch, on every soul and air,
The earth vessel, ere ne'er her dust went,
And buried the regret of kind mortal hem.
No cradle but wailed at the sight of the dead,
To rear a tomb the very sward was spread—
We listened for our opinions to the grave
And bell to bell the funeral things gave—
In loaf and blossomed boon, in every hand,
Besowed the shadowy chest, the flooting sand;
A worm lurked at the heart of every flower
And lichen and mildews broke the greenest bower;
A fatal poison dripped the balmiest breath,
The very air grew full with cooling death;
He called me loud, as never He called before,
And heed I gave until that stroke was o'er
Then I was busy here and there—and so the Man was gone.

The party was fair as Eden in her charms,
Wine sped, the temple gates like doors swung,
Friend beckoned friend, and foe on foe did call,
And in the narrow way thus beckoned all—
Men dropped the sordid toy and chose the palm,
And believed every breeze with echoed psalm;
The haunts of sin to pale ness grew,
And far away the lurid hells of pine crew,
For Jesus reigned the world and reigned so clean,
He nothing left that stained for to gleam
We deemed the ideal millennium drew nigh,
And looked for bright winged seraphs in the sky.
Once more He came and sweet, oh! sweet His plea—
How could I fail to heed? but woe is me!
While I was busy here and there behold! the Man was gone.

O years like swift the years are winter's blast,
And lo! the fall the cold of life is on me at
And Time is Christ all gracious Father stays
And keep Thy wanderer 'gainst the fatal days,
That when Thy voice rings voice in heaven's call,
The foundless mysteries of morals all
And Thy tremendous glories shall fall on me,
Be still to me as now the pilgrims flee
That I was busy here and there—and all the Man was gone.

TRANSIENT.

Are the days of Miracles Past?

MR. EDITOR: I know it is the opinion of many—perhaps of most—that the days of miracles are past. But why do they think so? What is their authority for thinking so? Does the Bible anywhere say that miracles should ever cease in time? I do not remember any such passage. And if there is no divine authority for such assertion, why is the opinion so prevalent, and why do even our most learned divines so confidently assert that the days of miracles are past?

It is true that there is no longer any necessity that miracles be wrought to establish the truth of God's word or the authority of His messengers. Nor are they wrought by men, as they were in ancient times by prophets, apostles, and by Christ.

But we must remember that the confirmation of the truth of God's words, and of the authority of His messengers was not the only purpose for which they were wrought. While this may have been the right design, they, at the same time, answered other ends. Some were wrought for the punishment of evil-doers, as the plagues inflicted upon Pharaoh and his subjects, while many others—perhaps most that are mentioned both in the Old and in the New Testament—were wrought as acts of mercy. This was especially the case with those wrought by Christ; while they established His claim as the Messiah, they were, at the same time, acts of mercy, giving food to the hungry, health to the afflicted, comfort to the distressed.

Now, while there is no longer any necessity that miracles be wrought for the accomplishment of the original main design, and while men may no longer be endowed with the special power of working them, may not God still, as a God of love and mercy, work miracles as acts of mercy—to relieve the afflicted and give comfort to the distressed, in answer to their own prayers and those of their friends? James says: "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him."

Now, so far as there is any intimation to the contrary, this direction was given by James not for the benefit of the church in apostolic times only, but in all subsequent ages, to the end of time. If there is any proof anywhere in the Bible that this direction was not intended by the Holy Ghost to be so understood, I would be glad to have it pointed out.

If, then, this view be correct, the reason that miracles of this sort have ceased, or so seldom occur, is not that God is either unable or unwilling to work them, but that we do not walk sufficiently closely with God to be able to exercise the faith necessary to obtain such answers to prayer. But if we are to believe statements that occasionally appear in books and periodicals, miracles of this sort have not entirely ceased.

I will mention some of these statements, giving the substance of them as nearly as I can from memory:

The first is taken from the life of Rev. William Bramwell, one of the early Methodist preachers of England. During a visit at a certain house he was informed that a little boy, a member of the family, had been for a long time afflicted with inflammatory sore eyes, that it was necessary to keep his eyes closely bandaged, and to keep him shut up in a dark room. When about to leave, Mr. Bramwell asked permission to see the boy. This being granted, he laid his hand on the boy's head, and seemed for a few moments to be engaged in prayer. He then bade the family adieu, and left. Almost immediately the boy pulled the bandage off his eyes, they having become, instantaneously, perfectly well.

A few years ago I saw an account of the instantaneous restoration to perfect health of a lady who had been for many years sorely afflicted with rheumatism. She had vainly tried the physicians and all the remedies she could hear of. A pious lady friend one day proposed that they carry the case to God in prayer. This was agreed to. One or two other pious ladies were asked to be present at the appointed time; and, while they were earnestly prescribing the case to God, the lady was instantly restored to perfect health.

Some months after this a little girl, aged about twelve years, who was singularly afflicted, hearing her mother read an account of the restoration of this lady, conceived the idea that she might be restored in the same way, and began to entreat her mother to pray for her recovery. At first the mother felt that her faith was not sufficiently strong. But after a few days she yielded to her daughter's entreaties, and carried the case to God with all the earnestness and faith she could exercise. After she had been thus engaged for some time her daughter came running to her, exclaiming, with great delight: "Mamma, I'm well! Mamma, I'm well!"

There is still another case of the same sort—that of a young man in North Carolina. He was afflicted in the same way, and had been, perhaps, for years. No means he had used had done him any good. Finally he concluded to try fasting and prayer. One morning he shut himself up in his room and spent the greater part of the day in earnest prayer to God for his restoration. Late in the afternoon, it is stated, he came out of the room perfectly restored, and that night walked to the church in the place to prayer meeting, to the astonishment of all who knew him. It is said that at the time at which this statement was made this young man was still perfectly free from that affliction, and was a minister of the gospel, and a member of the North Carolina Conference.

Now these statements were made in religious papers, and in such a manner that I could not doubt their truthfulness. If they are true, they prove that the direction of St. James was intended for the benefit of the church in that and in all subsequent ages, and that the days of this kind of miracles have not passed away.

If such answers to prayer may be obtained in reference to health, of course they may in reference to other things. But it must be borne in mind that God never does for us that which He has put it in our power to do for ourselves. It is only when we have exhausted all the means at our command that we have the right to expect God to grant such miraculous answers to prayer.

W. T. MONTGOMERY.

MARTINVILLE, Ala.

"Indecent Familiarity."

Under this heading a writer in the ADVOCATE of March 27 has, I think, very successfully met the objections urged by Dr. Wentworth to that class of songs or hymns in very common use among the churches, of which, he says, such "gross indecent familiarity would have brought Mr. Wesley's indignation to the boiling point." The Scriptures quoted by your correspondent are altogether sufficient to the purposes of the argument.

It is true that the wording of many that are called emotional songs, mostly used at our social meetings and during revival seasons, is not altogether unexceptionable, nor are the tunes such as experts in musical composition would approve. Nevertheless, while the sentiment is in accord with the plain teaching of Scripture, there is no just ground for the very harsh criticism of Dr. Wentworth.

There is danger of running to extremes on both sides of this question. Your correspondent has taken the proper ground. I think, when he says: "It would be a great evil to supplant our highly spiritual hymns by those which only address the sympathies, but each bears its part in the work, etc."

However, worldly persons and lifeless professors of religion are wont to criticise camp meeting and protracted meeting revivals, and deprecate their blessed fruits, we know that among the brightest and best of our communion, at least, are found very many who can and do say, with rejoicing: "I was born there." Who does not know that among the various instrumentalities employed on these occasions the sweet melodies that stirred the "power of feeling" were all potent and efficacious?

There are more ways than one to "preach the word." The word must not only be preached with a view to edify and enlighten, but also to quicken. Human hearts are cold, hard, unfeeling. Logic will not always move. Metemic bursts of oratory may "transiently dazzle" the mental vision, but only that gospel which makes the heart feel is the "power of God unto salvation." That gospel is as often found in a simple chorus as in the sermons of some of our ablest divines.

The statement contained in the last paragraph of the article alluded to, I am confident, is attested in the experience of scores and hundreds of Methodist preachers, if not of the ministry of other churches. The writer says: "Many instances might be recorded of the skeptic whom argument had failed to move, yielding by God's blessing, to the power of feeling," and, I may add, through the instrumentality of song.

In a diary kept from an early day, and extending through a ministry of many years, I have recorded instances precisely in point, to which I have frequently referred with effect, both in private and in public. Among the many, I will give one: While traveling C—— circuit, in the Mississippi Conference, some twenty-five or six years ago, I made the acquaintance of an intelligent, educated gentleman, who was a very successful and popular teacher in one of the principal neighborhoods, but an avowed skeptic. From frequent conversations with him, I felt in my heart if there was in Christendom a man who could be honestly, candidly skeptical, my friend E—— was that man. He was not of that blatant sort, always proclaiming his "views." On the contrary, he was always modest, retiring, always respectful in his bearing toward the church and Christian people. He very rarely introduced it, but whenever approached on the subject of religion, frankly stated his objections. There was a gracious visitation to his neighborhood—a glorious revival of religion; quite a number converted and were added to the church. This man attended the meeting throughout. He witnessed the various demonstrations of weeping penitents, and the transports of those who professed to find the "pearl of great price." He inquired of the most intelligent and reliable as to their experience. At length, as he told me himself, he concluded that "if there was reality in Christianity, it was certainly his highest interest to know it, and, being assured by friends in whom he had confidence that this knowledge was attainable, he resolved to seek it." He joined the church as a "seeker of religion," and stood in that relation for about four years. I never knew a man who so faithfully and constantly maintained his purpose as did my friend through all these years of honest inquiry. He was a regular attendant at class and prayer meetings upon all occasions of public worship, prayed regularly in his family, was a teacher in the Sunday-school. I know him when called upon to do so—to pray in the congregation. Still he protested his want of faith and his constant unbelief, and that he was acting in all these from the dictates of honest judgment. I was present at the camp meeting where this skeptic had the scales removed from his eyes. The scene is memorable, and many are living to-day who can recall it. The public religious exercises of the afternoon had closed. We had enjoyed a season of refreshing at the "stand." Some young ladies had met together in a tent, and were singing socially. Many were attracted thither by the sweet sounds. My friend was there. Some new song (the words of which I cannot now recall,) was being sung; the gist of it was the travail of an anxious soul, from the first awakening up to the blessed moment when God shed light and immortality upon it. All was quiet—deep and solemn interest was felt, but no special demonstration by any one, until suddenly my skeptic friend sprang to his feet, and exclaimed: "I believe it, I believe it now!" There was a thrill of joy in every Christian's heart who knew the man. But a moment more and he arose again, clapping his hands, and said: "Now I know it!" Every one saw his face aglow with rapturous delight, and every one felt that he was

"Safe in the arms of Jesus,
Safe on the gentle Saviour's breast."

It was then we did there, by means of that little sympathetic, emotional song, by God's grace, his infidelity was overcome. Since then all accounts I have had of him are favorable. Many years have passed, and he may be in heaven to-day, singing the song of the redeemed. These little songs, oh! how precious! They have been to many a soul. Let us not despise these "small things."

From the Work.

OAKATUPPA MISSION MOBILE DISTRICT.

MR. EDITOR: I am pleased with the ADVOCATE, and am glad to see our preacher spreading it among the people. It will do good. You ask for "news from the churches." It is good in this work. Indeed, I have never seen the like. Our preacher has infused new life into the churches, and all of them are on the increase. Old feuds have been settled, old sores have been healed, and the brethren love one another, as it should be, in Jesus. Sinners are being converted, mourners converted, and backsliders who had left the church by scores are coming back. Indeed, the people are just flocking home to God. Over fifty men have joined the church, and the mothers are bringing up their children, and giving them to God in baptism. Thank the Lord, our wilderness is blossoming like the rose. We are a poor people in this world's goods, and live in the "piny woods". But the Conference did not send us a "little piny woods preacher" this year, but a man of great ability in the pulpit and out of it, carrying with him the Spirit of Christ, and doing great good in the name of Jesus. We thank the Conference for our preacher, and will do all we can for his support. We are in truth "a mission," but see from the "foreign nues" the Conference has given us no help, while pretty good circuits and stations have had appropriations. But if our crops fail not, we will do all we can. Everybody will help, for hundreds are pleading now, and will rejoice in eternity, that Bro. Briggs was sent to preach on this mission.

COCTAW CO., ALA., April 24, 1879.

OUSHATTA, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: Rev. Mr. Filley, evangelist of the Baptist Louisiana State Convention, closed a meeting a few days since, which was protracted seventeen days at this place, and resulting in several conversions, and twenty four or five accessions to the Baptist Church, and perhaps the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will get eight or ten accessions—the result of the meeting. The two denominations worked harmoniously together. The meeting closed, leaving about forty mourners at the altar. Some of the most influential men of the town were at the altar for prayer.

The Baptist and Methodist each are soliciting subscriptions of money to build a church for each denomination. The Methodist have secured a church and parsonage lot, and have about $700 in subscription.

We feel assured that we will succeed with the building of the Methodist Church this year.

The Stringville circuit is looking up generally, and we are looking forward to a general revival. We expect to have two camp meetings this year. Pray for us.

Obituaries.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

COL. HENRY M. ELMORE was born January 28, 1816, in Virginia, but while he was quite a boy his father, Judge John A. Elmore, moved to Alabama and settled in Autauga county, where he raised a large family of children.

The subject of this notice was married first to Mrs. Harris, daughter of Joe Fitzpatrick, June 26, 1838, who died August 12, 1859. He was married the second time to Mrs. Mary D. Armond, December 23, 1861.

The positions that Col. Elmore filled in life is an indication that the State has lost no ordinary citizen and the church no lifeless member.

For two years he filled the office of Probate Judge in Macon county, Alabama, at the same time running a large farm and attending to various other duties. In 1854 he came to Texas and settled in Walker county, and in 1859 and 1860 he was sent by the people to represent them in the Legislature. When the war came on he was "over age," but his love for the country hurried him off as a private, but at the organization of the Thirtieth Texas Regiment he was elected Colonel, which position he filled until the war closed.

The precise date of his conversion and accession to the Methodist Church I have failed to get, but I am impressed that it was in a revival held by Dr. Hamilton in Montgomery, Alabama, early in his life. For many years he had been a servant of the church in good standing. In the last conversation I had with him on earth he expressed the strongest love for this church of any other institution on earth. After briefly enumerating his trials and pleasures through life, he said: "I love much more to die a Methodist Church than to live a world is aware of."

On the night of the twenty-first of February, 1879, with his family about him at his home in Waverly, Texas, he fell peacefully to sleep in Jesus.

L. T. MORRIS.

BRO. BENNETT M. M. MARTIN died at his residence, Parker county, Texas, February 16, 1879.

Brother Bennett was born of pious parents in Shelby county, Texas, in the year 1813, and was sixty-six years and six days old when he died. At the age of seven years his father died, and his mother moved with her family to her people in Louisiana, where she continued to train him in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, until she, too, was taken to her reward only a few years back.

In the year 1871 he was married to Miss Maggie C. Ashbolton, near Mountgomery, Caddo parish, and professed religion and united with the Methodist Church, South, that same year. Though his health was poor for several years, he remained there until two years ago, when he was led to believe that the high, dry and pure air of Parker county would be more congenial and healthy for him; but he was too far consumption had seized upon his system never to relax its hold until it claimed him as victim. Two short years ago he is no more.

Brother Bennett died as he had lived—a consistent Christian. He was ever ready to aid the church, and to organize and carry on Sunday schools, and to build up societies by a Godly and consistent walk, teaching the young to live soberly, righteously and truthfully before God. In his death the Methodist Church has lost a useful member, the Masonic fraternity an honored brother, and society an ornament.

He was a devoted and loving husband, an affectionate father, a kind brother and a worthy citizen, beloved by all who knew him.

CHARLES MARTIN.

Texas Christian Advocate please copy.

At a meeting of the members of Leto-hatchie Sunday School, April 13, 1879, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God to take from our midst Wallace D. Lemmetter, in the twenty first year of his age; a young man of sterling integrity and high moral worth, who, on the twenty-third day of March, 1879, in the city of Montgomery, has cast a pall of sadness and gloom over this community, and especially over the Sunday school of this place, of which he was a member; therefore be it

Resolved, That the incomprehensible and infinitely merciful God, in His dealings with his creatures, may appear inexplicable and mysterious, yet we know that He doeth all things for the best, and therefore we will bow submissively to His stern decrees, and in the language of His submissive Son say, "Thy will not ours be done."

Resolved, That in the death of our brother, Walter, the Sophia school has lost a useful member; the community a young man of unusual promise, and the family a brother and son the most affectionate.

Resolved, That we, the members of Leto-hatchie Sunday School, in deep sincerity tender to his bereaved brothers and venerable father our sympathy and confidence in this their sad affliction, with the abiding hope and confidence in the God of all mercy that their loss may be to him ineffable gain.

J. E. TRIMBLE, Secretary.

JOHN W. SCOTT "has" beloved brother has departed this life since the last quarterly Conference, and we deem it appropriate to place upon our records this minute in his memory.

Brother Scott was a native of the county of Jefferson, the son of Christian parents, (whose memory is still cherished by many of our church.) He was religiously reared and became a member of the church of his sainted parents in early youth. He was always an active and zealous Christian, and of late years held official station with great credit to himself and usefulness to the church. He was a faithful, discreet and industrious steward. For several years he was elected president of the board, and held that position at the time of his death. Bro. Scott, adorned all the walks of life. As a husband and father, devoted, kind and affectionate; as a citizen, self-sacrificing, public spirited and patriotic. In his relations to the association of which he was a member, he was zealous, efficient and laborious. He had the ornament of a quiet, peaceful and gentle spirit, all of which graces were eminently due to his pious and christian walk and conversation.

Resolved, That in his death we have lost a highly esteemed friend, a faithful co-laborer in the Church of God, and a brother whose example we should endeavor to emulate.

Milton Grove, Mississippi.

MRS. OCTAVIA GIBSON JENNINGS, daughter of J. and E. H. Gibson, and wife of S. K. Jennings, Jr., was born October 6, 1842, and died in Greensborough, Alabama, at the residence of her sister, Mrs. S. C. Yerby, April 13 1879.

It is not our purpose in preparing this memorial to write a lengthy eulogy on our loved and lost sister, but simply to offer this slight tribute to a life which was too pure, too true, too beautiful to pass unnoticed into the shadowy land of forgetfulness. Like the perfume of sweet flowers, her memory must ever linger around those who knew her best. From a child she was distinguished for beauty of person, brilliancy of intellect, suavility of disposition and a high sense of honor. At school her rare mental endowments, which caused her to surpass all of her class, would have rendered her an object of envy, but her modesty and sweetness only rendered her universal favorite. One of her greatest charms was her utter unconsciousness of her own perfections.

Her full, but experience, though deep, was characteristic of her, unmarked by great outward manifestations, but she was ever possessed of those greatest of adornments for woman, a meek and quiet spirit. She was an invalid for several years, and was thus shut out from society which she was so eminently fitted to adorn, and from the privileges of the sanctuary which she loved, but her sufferings were ever borne with patient resignation to the will of her Heavenly father, and though "tried as by fire," she came forth purified and strong in the faith, and filled with love and charity toward every one.

Her death was unexpected at the time, but the icy monster found her ready. She said: "All is well." Her only regret was in leaving her husband and child and her loved ones. As an infant sinks to sleep, without a struggle, she breathed out her pure spirit to the God who gave it.

Peace to her gentle ashes: None knew her but to love her nor named her but to praise.

WILLIAM P. SLATON was born in South Carolina, May 8, 1816; married December 7, 1835; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1838, and united at the first organization of Choctaw county, Alabama, March 20, 1879. Brother Slaton possessed many excellent traits of character, prominent of the old Palmetto State. He was a genuine Methodist, chivalrous and hospitable. He was a man of ardent temperament, strong reason and deep convictions. These combined features sometimes led him to pass upon us that did not exhibit a correct appreciation of his character.

Having previously to his conversion, he was secretive—misunderstood. For more than thirty years he has, without intermission, efficiently and successfully filled either the office of steward, class leader or trustee in the church. He made a perpetual daily offering of prayer upon the family altar, and made it one of the last requests of his life that his wife and children perpetuate this service.

Just after the last sermon he ever heard he told his pastor before he descended from the pulpit, that on Saturday night before he was very happy in the love of God, and very much desired that his neighbors, and all the world, should enjoy it like peace. A few days after he was taken with violent convulsions, from which he partially recovered, but was profoundly impressed that the end was nigh. In his last hours he loved to dwell upon the joys of the redeemed. He set his house in order, and we have abundant hope and assurance that he fell asleep in Jesus.

O. C. CROOK.

SISTER SARAH ANN HENINGTON, the subject of this sketch, was born in Choctaw county, Ala., August 22, 1811. When quite young she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and lived ever after a consistent Christian life. She married H. Henington, April 11, 1858, and, although quite young, she met the responsibilities of wife and mother so fully and uncomplainingly that all who were observant of her conduct praised and commended her.

Having "done what she could" in the way of duty to her husband and children, her church and her God, when called by death from labor and toil, she was found ready and waiting. She bore with great patience her last sickness, appearing to have had a presentiment of her death. She spoke of her death without the least sign of fear or regret, and several times rejoiced in prospect of the great reward. She leaves a disconsolate husband and several children to deplore the irreparable loss of wife and mother, to whom I pray that God may minister the consolations of the gospel.

Prayers of love like raindrops fall,
Tears of pity are falling dew,
And dear to the heart of our Lord are all
Who suffer, like Him, to the good they do.

A POEM BY MILTON.

The following sublime and affecting production was discovered among the remains of the great epic poet, and is published in the recent Oxford edition of Milton's works:

I am old and blind!
Men point at me as smitten by God's frown;
Afflicted and deserted of my kind;
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong;
I murmur not that I no longer see;
Poor, old and helpless, I the more belong,
Father supreme! to Thee.

O merciful One,
When men are farthest, then Thou art most near;
When friends pass by me, and my weakness shun,
Thy chariot I hear.

Thy glorious face
Is leaning toward me; and its holy light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling-place—
And there is no more night.

On my bended knee
I recognize Thy purpose clearly showed;
My mission I behold—that I may see
Thyself—Thyself alone.

I have sought to fear:
This darkness is the shadow of Thy wing;
Beneath it I am almost sacred; here
Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand,
Trembling, where foot of mortal ne'er hath been Wrapped in the radiance of Thy sinless land,
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go;
Shapes of resplendent beauty round me throng;
From angel lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

Is it nothing now,
When heaven is opening on my sightless eyes?—
When airs from paradise refresh my brow,
The earth is darkness lies.

Methodist Education.

ADDRESS OF DR. PUNSHON.

At the annual meeting, on behalf of Wesleyan Methodist Education, at Exeter Hall, London, April 2, Dr. Punshon delivered the following address:

The Rev. Dr. Punshon, who was very cordially received, could not help congratulating the committee upon the success of that meeting, and upon the position which their educational institutions had assumed by steady and successive growths from year to year. Three years ago he stood upon that platform at the first gathering that the educational Institutions of Methodism—which had now become a many-headed Janus—had ventured to hold in Exeter Hall. He remembered when the committee were content with the large room at the mission-house; now it took its place, as was seemly and becoming among the great institutions in Exeter Hall. He was thankful that the Wesleyan Education Committee were so vigilant over all that concerned national education, and the bearing of education upon religious freedom. He could not help thinking there was a good deal of arbitrariness in that part of the Code to which reference had been made, which constituted the Education Department the absolute judge of the necessity or otherwise of voluntary schools in any particular place; and he was thankful that, by dogged perseverance, the committee had succeeded in getting some remarkable concessions from the government. But one remarkable concession had not been adverted to—they had got the remarkable concession of being regarded by the government as a troublesome body, and of being told in so many words that they were so regarded. (Laughter.) That was a very considerable triumph, because most governments—especially when an election loomed in the distance—were made of squeezable material; and so soon as any committee got the reputation for being determined to push itself forward into notice, particularly if it had good ground to stand upon, the chances were that it would in the long run succeed. (Hear, hear.) He was thankful for that little official smile, which their committee said they "don't see" exactly. (Laughter.) The lords of the Department told the committee they think the parishes should apply for redress of grievances, and that the lordships are not prepared to discuss the question with any "central body." But the central body, charged with the oversight of Wesleyan education, were not quite of that opinion; they thought it became them to be Argus-eyed over every department of education, so far as it was likely to trench upon individual freedom, or upon what they believed to be the dearest interests that were confided to them as a branch of the living Church of the living God. (Applause.) They were not prepared to give up anything they had got. In view of latitudinarian teaching on the one hand, and of exclusive teaching on the other hand, it was quite proper that they should maintain themselves in the position of influence and progress which they were happy to report that day. If for nothing else, they were found, in view of the great future of our country, to provide teachers fearing God, teachers who had the root of all morality—which was true religion—within them, teachers who understood and who would maintain the truth as it is in Jesus, holding fast that they might hold forth the gospel of the grace of God. The greatness of a country was in the patriotism and manliness and godliness of its sons. They wanted, in order to have great men in the future, in order that the race of heroes might not die out, they wanted men of infinite self-sacrifice, men of insight and foresight, of sincerity and sympathy, who saw the right when others could not, and followed it when others would not, who believed that underlying all that was coarse and brutal in humanity there was something which bore the image of Christ, and which could be exalted into the fullness and beauty of that image among men. If they maintained their colleges, and sent forth broadcast their teachers in every direction, they would assuredly contribute to the growth of such heroes in time to come. He would like to endorse what Mr. Percy Bunting had said with regard to middle-class education. The schoolmaster's business was not a trade like a grocer's; it was not even a profession; it was or ought to be a vocation, a calling, something that was inspired of God, because the teacher had to deal with humanity in the whole range and sweep of its aspirations and destinies. Each of their schools ought to be a cure of souls; the school was a cure of souls in almost every other church but their own. Some years ago he straggled on a Sabbath afternoon into St. Peter's in Rome, and he saw there a company of little classes in which children were being instructed very carefully upon the differences between Protestantism and Romanism. In the schools—of which there were some thirty in every ward—in the great Salt Lake City, every Sabbath day there were gathered hundreds of children who were instructed intelligently and thoroughly in all the peculiarities of Mormonism. There was no other church but Methodism that professed such wonderful liberality that it dare not avow a gospel of sublime selfishness, if they liked to call it so, in connection with the taking care of their own children. Why was he a Methodist? Because he believed that, under God, Methodism was the best thing in the world for him, and as he was, he believed, a man of like passions with a good many other people; therefore, he thought that as a revelation of God, and as an embodiment of Christian activity and philanthropy, it would do other people as much good as it had done himself. He was no bigot in saying that; he held out the hand of fellowship to all co-operating churches. Methodism was not a sheep-stealing church, or shepherd-stealing church either; it was a sheep-feeding church for other pastures, and a shepherd-feeding church for other flocks. That had been their characteristic from the beginning, and the Lord grant that it might always be; they could afford to give royal largess on the right hand and on the left, but, by God's blessing, they ought to do something to hold and keep their own. They ought to do something to train up the children of their own people in their father's faith, and to sustain them in the profession and practice of the truths which they themselves held dear, and which would not only benefit themselves, but would also benefit the nation and the world. Therefore, they must supplement their efforts, not merely on behalf of the lower stratum, but among the middle-class people of this country, by emulating the example of the Church of England—a right, noble example it was, and if he were a churchman he would rejoice in it—by emulating that example in creating here and there a middle class school, where an education not cheap and nasty, but cheap and thorough, should be given. He hoped the solution of that difficult problem would come by and-by; if the money came they might depend upon it—the solution would be found somehow or other—if not they would know the reason why. Mr. Gregory had gone into an almost exhaustless field—what other people thought of us. An eminent French minister had said: "The English Christian is energetic; he wills what he wills; the traditional 'I would' is at a discount in his vocabulary." Would that it were always so. The minister continued: "The English Christian is practical and persevering; he works"—("Hurrah," as Mr. Gregory said, "for the man who works")—"he works, and does not cease to pursue his object until he has attained it." He commended that to the meeting as what a Frenchman thought an English Christian was, and what an Englishman, in his (Dr Punshon's) person, hoped his hearers would prove themselves to be. If an English Christian worked and persevered, and did not cease to pursue his object until he had attained it, his object was a good collection, so he would work and persevere, if they pleased, until they were fully impressed with it. (Laughter.) All those things could not be carried on without money—the educational institution, the Normal Colleges, the Sunday School Union, the Children's Home and all those beautiful orphanages in habibus yet, till they were coaling out of the clouds into substantial bricks and stone every where until there should be an overflowing department of Methodism girdling the whole country, according to John Wesley's idea, which had lain dormant, but was never sepulchered. He had come across a wonderful apologue well illustrating the power of giving in bad times, with the confident expectation of receiving again; that was a low motive, but it was one of Luther's done into a rough sort of rhyme:

A beggar asked an alms
One day at an abbey door,
Said Luther the [illegible]
The abbot replied: We're poor.

Poor, with bad plenty ones,
Who gifts sell thick as rain;
But they give on bought for nones,
And how can we give again?

Then the beggar: "Save your alms
Of old, unless I err,
Ye had live liers for inmates, twins,
Dives and Dathan.

While Dives was in good case,
Habitat that abbey too,
For Dathan's [illegible]
No wonder if Dathan rue.

Would ye retrieve the sin,
Try and make plain the matter;
Where Dathan's penance is done,
Lazarus helps his brother;

Give however ye can?"
The abbot bent his head;
This beggar might be, perhaps,
An angel, Luther said.

They must not imagine that because these times were hard that therefore it was a time to refuse from giving, but rather honor God by the faith that ventured something for Him; then assuredly they would have their reward. If they looked into the New Testament—he was almost afraid to take people there for advice and example, they found there such exuberant generosity as startled them—there they read that they had all things common in the church. They were not quite prepared for that yet; that Christian socialism would be out of date and an anachronism in the present day—the wealthy giving half his substance without rebuke from the Master, the poor widow casting in her all with His special sanction and blessing, the apostles forsaking all for the world's good and the church's work; and all this crowned by the Saviour's own grand unapproachable offering—the sacrifice of His life, crowned by the sacrifice of His blood. There was no stint there; all was on the broadest guage of charity, self-sacrificing, divine. If they despaired of giving according to the New Testament standard, what did they find in the Old Testament? Abraham tithing his substance, the Jew giving of his property for the work of God and for the temple worship; Solomon, in his wisdom, taxing the property and taxing the income as keenly as if he was a modern Chancellor of the Exchequer: "Honor the Lord with thy substance"—there was the property-tax—"and with the first fruits of thine increase"—there was the income-tax; and the reward was found in the bountiful harvests and the generous vintage. Surely Christianity would never dwarf the stature of a virtue. Surely their sacrifice should not be smaller in the modern times than in the times that went before them! Surely the ransomed, who were free, and the children who were adopted, were bound with glad hearts to render larger tribute; and if they were to drop their Ideal for drachmas it would be nought beyond what the grandeur of their obligation required. He was simply asking them to give as God had prospered them, to venture something in the faith that He would recompense, who knew all the doings of His people, and who would reward them according to their deeds. He was sure they would have a fair collection; he wished he could say a good one; he had not of late years known of a good Exeter Hall collection, but he meant to know of it if he lived much longer. He did not intend their anniversaries to pass over with such beggarly collections as they had had of late years in Exeter Hall. (Laughter.) Some of their meetings had hardly paid their expenses. He wanted them to know that, and he would rather they knew it in connection with the Education Department than in connection with his own department (Laughter). That was perfectly disinterested; he was very anxious that others should be the first to emerge from that dispensation of littleness into the grandeur and beauty, and widespread and catholic generosity that befitted the place and the occasion. (Renewed laughter.) If they gave as they ought to give, God's blessing would rest upon them, and their institutions would go on prospering and to prosper, conquering and to conquer, until, by the blessing of God, they had girdled the whole land, and their sons should be as plants grown up in their youth, and their daughters like corner-stones polished after the similitude of a palace. (Applause.)—London Watchman.

Religious Intelligence.

—Rev. Wm. Johnston, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at East St. Louis, Ill., has been appointed to the charge of the Protestant Church and schools at Sidon, Syria.

—A Catholic Congress, which has been held at Lille, has recommended Catholics to abstain from giving or attending hunting or fishing parties on Sunday, and to avoid Sunday travelling except in case of necessity.

—The Friends' Mission in Mexico has the "most extensive publishing-house of Evangelical literature in the Spanish language in all Spanish America." The headquarters of the mission are at Matamoras, where there are 106 members.

—The Friend of India, a secular journal says: "But for the English missionaries, the natives of India would have a very poor opinion of Englishmen. The missionary alone of all Englishmen, is the representative of a disinterested desire to elevate and improve the people."

—Dr. George Smith, late editor of the Friend of India and of the Edinburgh Daily Review, has undertaken to write the life of the late Rev. Dr. Duff. He has just given to the world the biography of another eminent Indian missionary, Dr. John Wilson, of Bombay.

—The Church Missionary Society has just assumed the care of a new mission station at Gaza, Palestine, and has appointed Rev. A. Schapira, a Christian Jew, to the charge. This Society also proposes to send out shortly an expedition to the southwestern end of the Albert-Nyanza.

Of the popular preachers in New York and Brooklyn, Dr. Talmage receives $12,000; Rev. Morgan Dix, $15,000; Rev. Dr. William Taylor $12,000; Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs, $10,000; Rev. Dr. Ormiston, $8,000; Rev. Dr. Potter and Rev. Dr. Tiffany, each $10,000; Rev. Dr. Cheapo, $8,000 to $10,000.—New York Herald.

Henry Martyn once said, "If I ever see a Hindoo converted to Jesus Christ, I shall see something nearly approaching the resurrection of a dead body than anything I have ever yet seen." To-day there are about 500,000 native Christians in India. The rate of growth has been, in 1852, 128,000; 1862, 213,000; 1872, 318,000; 1878, 500,000.

In 1818 thirteen men gathered together, thirteen prayers were said, and $13 subscribed for the establishment of a place of learning for Baptists. To-day Madison University, at Hamilton, N. Y., owns all its buildings and 100 acres of land in a beautiful part of the country. It has a fine library, no debts, and more than $100,000 drawing interest.

—In the Russian Church there are no less than 10,000 persons in holy orders, and, as might be expected, very many of them are in a condition of beggary. The receipts of the Synod are about 26,000,000 roubles a year, of which 10,000,000 roubles come from the state; but little of the large amount goes to the rural clergy. In the way of church accommodation, there are 420 cathedrals, 38,302 churches and 12,408 chapels.

—Protestant churches continue to make headway among the Mormons of Utah. The Presbytery of Utah now has ten ministers, against two less than four years ago; and eight churches. In its day-schools there are 800 and in its Sunday-schools 900 scholars. The ministers say they could use old religious papers and pamphlets to good advantage. They could be sent to the Rev. J. S. McMillan, Manti, Utah.

A CARNIVAL DURING LENT.—Milan enjoys a rite of its own, "the Ambrosian," which differs considerably from the Roman on which all Western rites are founded. At Milan Lent does not begin till the Monday after the first Sunday in Lent. This was, I believe, the universal ancient custom, the Sundays being counted as fasts. One of the Popes excluded the Sundays from the fasts and added four days in the preceding week, making Lent begin on Ash-Wednesday instead of the Monday following. By a special privilege this ancient custom is still kept up at Milan. It is called, not the carnival, but the carnavalone.—Correspondent Record.

—Bishop Kestell-Cornish writes: "Our progress in Madagascar is steady, but we are over-strained." Thus he is himself "parish priest and bishop too," and his wife parish schoolmistress. The Rev. H. Little announces the important accession of three chiefs. The Rev. F. A. Gregory (son of the Canon of St. Paul's) has opened a college for native catechists and clergy at a suitable spot, thirteen miles from Antananarivo, the capital, and in the neighborhood of four churches. He has begun with seventeen postulants.

—The Roman Catholics of Connemara are showing themselves restive under the aggressive attacks on their faith made by the Irish Church Mission. After a series of petty annoyances they have succeeded in burning down one of the orphan schools at Clifden. These schools have done an immensity of good in the neighborhood, and are really bright spots in the midst of great darkness. The Rev. John Conerney, of Oney, and his daughter have also been subjected to violence, and have been obliged to seek the protection of authorities.

—The Telegraph has the following paragraph: "In the Rhondda Valley last night the Salvation Army held an all-night prayer meeting, singing Welsh hymns, praying, and preaching until morning. A Reformed Cheap Jack made a great impression at a 'council of war' held in the morning, while at the night meeting young men and women threw away their silver ornaments, pipes, &c., and the women tore off the trinkets from their dresses, renouncing them as idols. Young men rushed to the penitent's table, calling to God to bless them, and one of them took off his coat and tucked up his sleeves; while the rest of the audience, embracing and shouting 'Hallelujah,' shook hands and sang and prayed by turns. This went on till daylight."

—J. B. H. sends from San Paulo to the Presbyterian very important information respecting religious liberty, civil marriage, etc., in the Empire of Brazil. The House of Deputies, during the second week of February, requested the government to define its position on those points. The minister of the Empire or Secretary of State replied. The following extracts give the substance of his communication:
